In a zuripeshgi lease, can the lease and the mortgage be regarded as separate transactions? Apart from zuripeshgi lease, the same document may grant a lease and also a mortgage from the loan advanced by the lessee to the lessor. They will be separable transactions. A gave a lease to B for a coal mine for 999 years. He also mortgaged by the same document the lands to B for a loan advanced by B. The deed further provided that B who had under the lease, to pay a royalty to A. could appropriate the royalty towards the mortgage debt. Subsequently, the leasehold interest and the mortgage interest became vested in different persons. The mortgaged property was ordered to be sold subject to the lease thus regarding the two as separable transactions(11)

37. Kanom and otti.

Whether a kanom tenure is a mortgage must be decided with reference to the object for which the tenure is created.

"In some cases it may be a mere lease, a sum being advanced as security for the rent or for proper cultivation, to be repaid on the expiry of the time. In other cases, and most frequently it is created as a lease by way of mortgage to secure a loan advanced to the jenmi (proprietor). Rent is payable in the case of every kanom, but all kanoms partake to a certain extent of the incidents of a usufructuary mortgage.... If when viewed scientifically it cannot be wholly regarded as a mortgage, it cannot certainly be regarded wholly as a lease, as undoubtedly the land enures as security, if not for the principal, at least for the interest of the loan advanced(1)."

It has been generally held that a Kanom in its mortgage aspect is a usufructuary mortgage(2). Usually there is no covenant to pay and hence a suit for recovery of the money or for sale of the kanom property is not maintainable(3).

In every kanom the kanomdar has an inherent right to hold for 12 years according to the custom of the country; but this right can be excluded by the jenmi by an express agreement(4). Further, under the tenure the kanomdar is entitled not only to hold it for the period of 12 years generally but also to hold it so long as the kanom amount remains unpaid(5). A covenant for renewal is a kanom lease would be available only for one renewal at the end of 12 years from the date of execution of the deed and not for similar renewals in perpetuity at the end of every cycle of 12 years from the said date(6). He does not forfeit the right to hold for 12 years by his default to pay his parapad, i.e., the net rent(7). As to whether he would forfeit his right to hold if he denies the jenmi's title, the cases are conflicting(8). Where a document described as kanom kuzhikanom contains all the terms that are generally found in a kanom deed, the fact that parties agreed to one or more terms that are not ordinarily found in a kanom deed does not make it any less a kanom(9). If the intention is to create a debtor and creditor relationship it is a mortgage. Provision to pay "Onakazhecha" does not make the transaction less a usufructuary mortgage if it is otherwise so(10).

A transaction of "ottu" as understood in Travancore area involves as a matter of its legal incidents, a right to sue for mortgage money, a right to bring to sell the mortgaged property, a right to possess and enjoy the property and a right to redeem. Non-mention of such incidents however is not of any consequence. "Kuzhikanam" in the State of Travancore meant only a right to compensation for plantations made on the land. It does not involve a covenant to pay rent and therefore cannot be said to constitute itself into a tenancy. "Ottu" and "Kuzhikanam" are only possessory mortgages with the recognition of a right to compensation for the mortgagee's plantations on the land(11).

Property was under lease. In the year 1943 the same Ottis and Kuzhikanam were executed in respect of the property in favour of the lessee. Mortgage was more durable than lease during that period. Mortgage amount was also not negligible compared to area of land covered. There was no

A deed of otti is neither a simple mortgage nor a usufructuary mortgage as defined in the Transfer of Property Act. It properly comes under the category of anomalous mortgages. All the elements of a hypothecation bond are present in an otti transaction and in addition possession of the property secured is given to the mortgagee so that he may take the profits in lieu of interest(14).

37A. Lekha mukhi mortgage.

"The lekha mukhi is a kind of running mortgage, in which the proprietor's share of the produce is made over to the creditor, who pays the revenue and keeps a running account of the receipts and disbursements. Lekha mukhi mortgages may be created in two ways - one, where the proprietor has obtained a loan from the lekha mukhidar, and makes over a well or a share in a well to his management, the other where an estate is made over to the lekha mukhidar as an agent rather than as a creditor. The accounts are kept in the same manner in either case. The lekha mukhidar collects the crops and credits the proprietor with their value debiting the Government revenue the costs of repairs, working expenses; in fact all charges usually defrayed by the proprietor. His fee consists of the muhasali 2 topas per karwar, and he also charges interest, if the proprietor gets into his debt"

The above is an account of a lekha mukhi mortgage in the Punjab as given by Ghose in his Law of Mortgage, Fifth Edition, page 109. The above account has been quoted with approval by the Lahore High Court in Dittu Mal v. Ilahi Baksh(1).

It has been held that a lekha mukhi mortgage is a usufructuary mortgage, the land being made over to the mortgagee, and he having to look to its produce for the payment of the mortgage debt, the mortgagor undertaking no personal liability and there being no provision in the deed entitling the mortgagee to sue for the debt(2). See also Note 35

37B. Chitham mortgage.

Chitham is a kind of anomalous mortgage(1) The difference between Chitham and a simple mortgage is that in Chitham on failure to pay the mortgage amount on due date, the mortgagee becomes entitled to recover possession and to enjoy the usufruct, either in lieu of interest or otherwise as might have been agreed between the parties till the mortgagor chooses to redeem(2) A chitham being in its nature an anomalous mortgage, the question whether it contains a personal liability to pay has to be determined with reference to the terms of the deed itself(3). a chitham mortgage that in case of default to pay within the stipulated time the mortgagee is entitled to remain in possession as a vatantar mortgagee till redemption by the mortgagor negatives, by implication, a personal liability. It cannot be construed to give an option to the mortgagee either to take vatantar or to sue for recovery of mortgage money(4). A chitham mortgagee can also take possession and convert the chitham into a vatantar mortgage when the debtor has gone away. The difference in the case of this kind of vatantar is that the mortgagee has to keep an account of the income and on his return the mortgagor can call for the account and the mortgagee must return the excess of the income received by him over the interest(5).

37C. Vatantar mortgage.

This kind of mortgage is prevalent in Kutch. Section 645 of the Digest of Local Customs which is regarded as authoritative and binding in Kutch says that in a vatantar transaction, a person lends money on (security) of immovable property, the property remains in possession of the lender, the lender uses the property or enjoys its rent or profits in lieu of interest. The property is returned to the borrower on payment of the principal amount borrowed. These characteristics of a vatantar prima facie show that it is a mortgage transaction. Vatantar is thus a transfer of interest, as distinguished from ownership in specific immovable property as security for loan and is not a transaction called mortgage by conditional sale as property is not ostensibly sold. Further, a vatantar has all the principal characteristics of a usufructuary mortgage and thus amounts to a usufructuary mortgage(1). Though in some vatantar transactions time limit called bandhi is provided, it is not universal and cannot, therefore, be regarded as characteristic of the transaction. It is merely a covenant entered into by the parties to these particular transactions and cannot convert it into an anomalous mortgage(2).

37D. Pukhta Maurusi Tenant.

The mortgagor was a Pukhta Maurusi tenant and in the deed of mortgage specifically stated that whatever rights he was having in the land were mortgaged and the same would be the rights of the mortgagee. Thus tenancy rights came to be mortgaged by the mortgage deed. The mortgagee would thus acquire tenancy rights as Pukhta Maurusi(1).

38. English mortgage.

Until 1925 (when the English Law of Property Act was passed) the usual form of a mortgage in England was the transfer by assignment of the mortgagor's interest in the property with a proviso for re-assignment upon payment of the mortgage-money by a particular date. After the date had passed, the mortgagor's rights at law had determined and the mortgagee was in law the absolute owner of the property. But in equity the mortgagor still retained a right to redeem and, upon payment of the debt and interest, to have the property reconveyed to him. This was called the equity of redemption. It was, however, only an equitable right and did not prevent legal interest of the mortgagor passing despite his retention of the equity of redemption(1). The equity of redemption was an estate in land which could be devised, granted, etc., and whereof there may be seisin. The person entitled to the equity was considered in equity the owner of the land, though the legal estate vested in the mortgagee(2). In fact the mortgagor in England had only an equitable interest in the property both before and after the date for payment had elapsed : before, because he had a contractual right to have the property reconveyed, and this contract created an equitable interest in the property; after, because, in equity, time was not the essence of the transaction(3), the contract of mortgage being, in equity, considered merely a loan of money secured by a pledge of the estate(4). In each case, therefore, he had an equitable estate though in the former case he had a right and not merely an equity of redemption(5).

Before the passing of this Act, a mortgage in the English form of properties situated in the mofussil between parties of whom one was a Hindu, was always treated as only a mortgage by conditional sale(6). Where both the parties were Englishmen, all the incidents of an English mortgage were held applicable(7). After the passing of the Act, a mortgage in the English form could be created in the mofussil as well as in the Presidency Towns, no matter to what community the parties belonged. It has, however, been held in the undermentioned case(8) that the rule that where one of the parties is a Hindu and the property is situated in the mofussil the mortgage, though in an English form, should be treated as a mortgage by conditional sale, is still applicable. It is submitted that this view does not appear to be correct.

The three essentials of an "English mortgage" were stated in Naravana v Venkataramana(9) to be as follows :

- (1) The mortgagor should bind himself to repay the mortgage-money on a certain day.
- (2) The property mortgaged should be transferred "absolutely" to the mortgagee
- (3) The 'absolute' transfer should be made subject to a proviso that the mortgagee will reconvey the property to the mortgagor upon repayment of the mortgage-money, on the date on which the mortgagor bound himself to repay the same(10).

Where all the three essentials are present, the transaction would be an English mortgage, and the mere fact that the mortgagor undertakes to pay taxes, etc., will not change its character(11). But where on a construction of the document it is found that one or other of the said essentials is absent, then the mortgage is not an English mortgage(12).

(A) Personal liability.

In an English mortgage, the debtor remains personally liable to pay the debt. A covenant to pay is an essential ingredient of such a mortgage(13). Where the intention is to create an English mortgage, this covenant will, in fact, be presumed for every mortgage implies a loan, and every loan implies a debt for which the mortgagor's personal estate is liable. The absence of a covenant is, however, a strong indication of the intention of the parties. The fair criterion by which the Court is to decide whether a deed of sale containing an agreement to reconvey is a mortgage or not is whether the remedies are mutual and reciprocal. If not, it is merely a conditional sale and not a mortgage(14). Where a sale of property was made in lieu of money charged thereon with a clause for redemption if the money was paid in ten years, there being no covenant to pay it, it was held that the transaction was merely a conditional sale and not a mortgage(15).

The personal covenant must be to repay the money on a certain date. The object is that it should be known with certainty when the mortgagor may redeem or the mortgagee proceed to foreclose or sell an object which is not defeated by providing for earlier payments of interest(16). Where it could not be said that the mortgagor had bound themselves to repay the mortgage money on a certain date, inasmuch as the Ekrnama speaks of repayment within a period of 8 years, the document was not English mortgage(17). An option as regards earlier payment or an extension of time for repayment is a matter of grace and does not affect the undertaking to repay on a certain date(18).

(B) Absolute transfer.

It has been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ramkinkar v. Sarva Charan (19), that S. 58, Cl. (e) cannot be construed as declaring an English mortgage to be an absolute transfer of the property, but as merely declaring that such a mortgage would be absolute, were it not for the proviso for retransfer. The clause, according to their Lordships, does not determine what legal effect follows from the particular form of words; it merely prescribes the form of words necessary to constitute what is known as an English mortgage. The clause deals with form, not with substance. The substantial rights are dealt with in Ss 58(a) and 60. Whatever form is used nothing more than an interest is transferred and that interest is subject to a right of redemption(20).

The distinction between law and equity in England does not apply in this country(21), and, unlike a mortgagor in England, the mortgagor under an English mortgage under the Act retains a legal interest both before and after the date fixed for payment. Before that date he has an interest in the land which is legal because what was transferred was only an interest in the property. After that date he has the legal right of redemption given to him by S 60. In each case therefore he retains a legal interest in the property(22).

The question for decision in Ramkinker's case(23), referred to above, was whether when a lessee for 999 years, mortgaged, by way of an English mortgage, his leasehold interest to X, there was a privity of estate created between X and the lessor so as to make X liable for the burdens of the lease. If the mortgage operated as a transfer of all the interest of the mortgagor, such a privity would be created. Otherwise not. In view of the principles stated above, their Lordships held that X was not liable by privity of estate for the burdens of the lease.

The "absolute" transfer must be made by operative words, the same as in an absolute conveyance such as "convey," "assign," "demise," etc., and not by the word "mortgage." Where the instrument said "I hereby mortgage and assign" the estate, etc., it was held that the use of the word "assign" was sufficient to satisfy the second requisite of an English mortgage(24). The expression "grant, convey or transfer" followed by an absolute and indefeasible estate to inheritance in possession was, in the undermentioned case(25), held sufficient to satisfy the second requirement. See also the undermentioned case(26).

The claim of the Sales Tax Deptt to proceed against the property over which an English mortgage has been created is subject to the rights of the mortgagee(27).

(C) Proviso for reconveyance.

The proviso must be for reconveyance of the property upon repayment of the mortgage-money as agreed, i.e., on the "certain stipulated or fixed". Where the proviso for reconveyance was "upon repayment, to the mortgagee, of all sums due to him by the mortgagors the mortgagee shall reconvey the said property to the mortgagors" it was held that the third condition of an English mortgage was not satisfied as the covenant to reconvey did not depend upon payment being made at the stipulated time(28).

(D) Possession of property.

The mortgagee acquires the right to take possession as soon as the mortgage is executed, whether a right of entry is expressly covenanted for or not(29). A mortgagee under English mortgage is entitled to immediate possession and is also entitled to retain possession until he is repaid(30). In England if the mortgagee allows the mortgagor to remain in possession the latter is at law merely a tenant at sufferance(31); but in equity, being the owner he can take the rents and profits for his own use and is not liable to account to the mortgagee. The same will be the case in this country also. The mortgagor in possession will be entitled to rents and profits until the mortgagee chooses to go into possession(32). The mortgagee does not forfeit his right to payment by allowing the mortgagor to take the rents and profits.

Under the English law the property, in an English mortgage vests in the mortgagee together with the right to collect rents arising out of the property. The rents are treated as forming part of the property mortgaged, and the reason why such rents are taken into account in reduction of the mortgage is this. The mortgagee is bound to reconvey the mortgaged property on payment of the mortgage dues. As the property mortgaged includes rents accruing therefrom, the mortgagee must reconvey also rents as have come into his hands, on the mortgage dues being paid up. The same result is effected by an account being taken and by the rents received being applied towards the reduction of the mortgagor's dues. The fact that the rents collected by the mortgagee have to be accounted for by the mortgagee does not detract from the proposition that the right to the rents is in the mortgagee(33).

39. Equitable mortgage.

An equitable mortgage in English law is of much wider import than it is under this Act(1). In

1. AIR 1933 Mad 293 (295) : 56 Mad 546 (DB)

England a deposit of title deeds for the advance of a loan was regarded as giving rise to an implied agreement to mortgage the estate referred to in the title deeds(2). On the principle that equity treats that as done which ought to be done, the agreement made the depositary, in equity, a mortgagee(3) and the mortgage was known as an equitable mortgage. The recognition of such a mortgage was really by way of an exception to the Statute of Frauds which required a mortgage to be in writing. It was disapproved in many cases(4) though held to have been firmly established, and consequently was held not one to be explained, beyond what was actually established(5). The exception was recognised because it was regarded that the granting of an interest in the land was more than a mere oral contract and was in the nature of part performance which took the case out of the Statute of Frauds(6). But a mortgage by deposit of title deeds, being a mortgage only in equity was held not to prevail over a legal mortgage, unless the holder of the legal mortgage did, or omitted to do some thing which prevented him, in equity, from asserting his paramount rights(7).

The law of India knows nothing of the distinction between legal and equitable property in the sense in which it was understood where equity was administered by the Court of Chancery in England(8). Nevertheless the principle of English law that a deposit of title deeds as a security for a loan would create a lien on the lands(9), was applied in this country as being in accordance with justice, equity and good conscience(10). After the passing of this Act, a mortgage deposit of title deeds stands on the same footing as other mortgages(11), and for purpose of priority it takes effect against any mortgage deed subsequently executed and registered which relates to the same property(12). In the undermentioned case(13) it was argued before the Privy Council, that an equitable mortgage was not a mortgage within the meaning of the Act. Their Lordships rejected the argument and held that in view of S 59, a deposit of title deeds as security for a loan was a mortgage in the sense of the Act. In another case Papiah v. Naganatha(14) it was argued before the Privy Council that the Act did not recognise a mortgage by deposit of title deeds and that the onus should be on the person setting it up to prove that such a mortgage can be made. The contention was rejected by their Lordships and it was observed that the Transfer of Property Act far from containing any general prohibition of mortgages by deposit of title deeds expressly exempts them, when made in specified places, from the formalities prescribed for the due execution of the mortgages and that the onus is strongly upon the person setting up the invalidity of such mortgages to prove it. Section 58(f) now makes it quite clear that it is a mortgage like any of the other mortgages. There is a transfer of interest in the property mortgaged to the mortgagee. The question therefore of at the subsequent purchaser having bought the property subject to mortgage by deposit of title deeds bona fide with or without notice is at no relevance. The subsequent purchaser cannot avoid the mortgage by leading evidence to show that he made all reasonable enquiries to find out if the property was subject to mortgage by deposit of title deeds or not(15).

A guarantor is also a debtor and hence entitled to create a mortgage by deposit of title deeds(16).

It has been held in the Punjab that an equitable mortgage has the same legal effect as any other mortgage(17).

The essentials of a mortgage by deposit of title deeds under the section are(18)

- (1) There must be a delivery of documents of title of immovable property.
- (2) Such delivery must be made to a creditor or his agent.
- (3) Such delivery must be made with intent to create a security thereon.

Possession of property does not go with the creation of equitable mortgage i.e. mortgage by deposit of title deeds(19).

(A) Delivery of documents of title.

There must be a delivery of the documents of title to the creditor. Otherwise there can be no equitable mortgage(20). By a document executed by the defendants they undertook to pay certain amounts to the plaintiff on certain specified dates and also agreed to deposit title deeds. However, the title deeds were not in fact deposited with the plaintiff. In the circumstances it was not mortgage by deposit of title deeds. It was only a bond which did not require registration(21). Where A and B were in possession of title deeds for a purpose unconnected with any loan, and A merely orally communicated to B asking him to hold the title deeds as trustee for a creditor of A, it was held that the creditor did not thereby become an equitable mortgagee. The very principle of part performance on which equitable mortgage rests was held to have no application to the case(22). In the under-mentioned case(23), the facts were peculiar. X was entitled to three properties. The title deeds of one property were deposited with A as security for a loan. Then X borrowed from B and deposited the title deeds of the other two properties at the same time giving a direction to A to deliver the title deeds of the first property to B when his mortgage was satisfied. It was held that an equitable mortgage was created in favour of B on all the three properties. Where the title deeds are already with the creditor for a purpose unconnected with any loan, and the debtor writes to the creditor that he may retain the deeds as security for the loan, a delivery must be deemed to have been made and an equitable mortgage is therefore created by such deposit(24). Delivery of possession of the title deeds need not be actual physical delivery. Constructive delivery of possession is sufficient to create a valid equitable mortgage(25). Where the defendant seeking loan from bank for construction of building deposited original title deeds and sale deeds relating to the plot in question, it amounted to creation of equitable mortgage(26).

Again, what is delivered must be a document of title. If the documents deposited show no kind of title in the depositor, no mortgage is created(27). A bare agreement such as a letter with regard to deposit of title deeds does not by itself create a mortgage, and is not required to be stamped(28). Where X deposits title deeds of Blackacre assuring the depository that they are the title deeds of Whiteacre but to which is reality they do not relate, this would not create an equitable mortgage on Whiteacre(29). However, any document which show evidence of title would be sufficient to create a mortgage by deposit of title deeds. They need not in themselves be the title deeds(30).

It is not necessary that the documents of title deposited should show a good title in the depositor(31). Where A deposited all the title deeds of a property except that under which he had obtained the property and subsequently deposited this last deed with another person, it was held that the prior depository had a valid title against the latter(32). It is not also necessary that the documents deposited should connect the mortgagor with some predecessor of his who had acquired the property originally. It is sufficient if the documents deposited show the mortgagor's title to the property(33).

It is further not necessary that the whole or even the most material of the documents of title to the property should be deposited. It is sufficient if the deeds deposited bona fide relate to the property or are material evidence of title and are shown to have been deposited with the intention of creating a security thereon(34). evidence of title are not documents of title. Thus, a copy of a jamabandi record(35) has been held not to be a document of title. In the undermentioned case(36) it has been held that a document cannot be considered a document of title unless it is clear that a better document is not available. In Ex parte Weather(37) the Lord Chancellor (Lord Eldon) said :

"It is very well though it has not been long settled, that if there has been a delivery of deeds that in this Court, amounts to an equitable mortgage; and the possession of the deeds is, if no other purpose is shown, evidence of an agreement that the estate itself shall be a security. It has never yet been decided how far it is necessary to deliver all the title deeds, or, whether that would not be taken to be a sufficient deposit, which could be taken upon looking at the instruments to amount to evidence, that the estate was meant to be a security."

A, to enable B to complete the purchase of some property for which he had contracted, lent him $200 on the security of the premises. The contract for purchase was afterwards completed. The vendor gave to B a receipt for the purchase-money and to this a plan of the property was attached. No conveyance of the property was executed by the vendor to B. It was held that the deposit of the receipt created an equitable mortgage in favour of A(38). A relinquished in favour of his father B his share in property X and B, in consideration thereof gave A property Y. There was no deed for this latter transfer. A deposited a copy of the deed of relinquishment (which referred to the gift by B & Y property Y to A) with C in respect of a loan. It was held that the said document was a document of title and was sufficient to create an equitable mortgage(39).

When the original document is lost or not forthcoming, equitable mortgage can be created by depositing certified copy of the document(40).

The mortgagor had mortgaged the property in favour of mortgagee and deposited the partnership agreement encumbrance certificate and registration extract of sale-deed and a letter informing the mortgagee that the original sale-deed was lost. However the mortgagee failed to enquire of the person who was alleged to have lost the original sale-deed. Subsequently the mortgagor had created an equitable mortgage in respect of same property in favour of the plaintiff in the instant case and delivered him the original sale-deed of property and further making him aware of the subsisting prior equitable mortgage. In such circumstances, it was held that since the mortgagee in the first instance honestly believed that the original sale-deed was lost, then merely because the mortgagee failed to enquire of the person alleged to have lost the document the failure not amounting to gross neglect, and the mortgage was created by depositing extract of registration of sale-deed, it cannot be said that the mortgage in favour of mortgagee in first instance, was not a valid mortgage under S 58(f) of T. P. Act(41).

It has, however, been held in the undermentioned cases(42) that the doctrine of equitable mortgage requires the mortgagor to deprive himself of the possession of the documents which create his title so as to render him unable to deal with the property upon the assertion that the title is still with him. It is submitted that this view is not correct.

If it is to be held that with a copy of title deed a mortgage can be created then there is no doubt that it may lead to fraudulent transactions with many copies one can create many mortgages with many different people without the knowledge of one of the mortgages with other persons(43). However it has been held by Kerala High Court(44) that where the mortgagor's intention to create equitable mortgage was established in clear and unambiguous terms, the deposit of registration copy of title deeds and no original documents would not mean that equitable mortgage is not created. So also where duplicate partition deed registered along with the original is deposited bona fide by one of the executants of the partition deed to whom only a duplicate was given as his titled deed and not the original deposit of original need be insisted only as a rule of prudence and caution and not as a legal requirement for the purpose of validly creating an equitable mortgage(45).

(B) Scope of the security is the scope of the title.

A delivery of title deeds as security prima facie creates an equitable mortgage upon the whole of the property comprised therein(65). But this presumption may be controlled by an understanding to the contrary. In Pranjivandas v. Chan Ma Phee(66) their Lordships of the Privy Council said :

"The law upon this subject is beyond any doubt :

- (1) Where titles of property are handed over with nothing said except that they are to be security, the law supposes that the scope of the security is the scope of the title(67).
- (2) Where, however, titles are handed over accompanied by a bargain that bargain must rule
- (3) Lastly, when the bargain is a written bargain, it and it alone, must determine what is the scope and extent of the security(68).

Their Lordships referred to the leading case of Shaw v Foster(69) where Lord Cairns observed :

"Although it is the well established rule of equity that a deposit of a document of title without more without writing, or without word of mouth, will create a equity a charge upon the property, I apprehend that that rule will not apply where you have the deposit accompanied with an actual written charge. In that case you must refer to the terms of the written document, and any implication that might be raised, supposing there were no document, is put out of the case and reduced to silence by the document by which alone it must be governed."

It was accordingly held in Pranjivandas's case(70), referred to above that where a deposit of title deeds of several properties was made but on the back of the promissory note executed for the loan there was a note as to security - "grant of a house in 14th Street, Rangoon," the property mortgaged was only the house and not the other properties. In Wydle v Radford(71) where a title deed relating to two properties was deposited as security for a loan but the memorandum accompanying it mentioned one of such properties alone as pledged, the depositary was held not entitled to claim an equitable mortgage over the other property

It has been held that where a person puts up a superstructure on a plot of land of which he is a tenant and subsequently purchases the land from the landlord the title-deeds though relating to land alone would clearly cover the superstructure also and the deposit thereof would create an equitable mortgage of the entire property consisting of the ground and the superstructure thereon(72).

(C) Delivery must be made to a creditor or his agent.

The delivery must be made to the creditor or his agent(73). A deposit with the debtor's wife(74) or delivery to an attorney to prepare a legal mortgage(75) is not sufficient. But a deposit with the debtor's solicitor may be sufficient as he will thereby be constituted agent and trustee for the creditor(76). Where a person was acting as attorney for both the parties and delivery of the document was made to him through his assistant but there was no proof that the delivery was made to him as agent of the creditor, it was held that there was no valid equitable mortgage(77).

The words 'creditor or his agent' show that there must be a debt before a deposit of deeds can constitute a mortgage(78). Read with cl (a) it is clear that such debt might be an existing or a future debt. It follows that a mortgage by deposit of title deeds may be made not only for an existing debt or for a present advance but also to secure future advances or a general balance that might be due on an account. The mortgage will operate for such future advances also(79). Where at the time the deeds are handed over there is no antecedent or existing debt nor any agreement for any future advance, the handing over will not constitute an equitable mortgage(80). A debtor may execute a promissory note to the creditor and at the same time deposit title deeds by way of security(81).

Where a deposit of title deeds is made to secure a particular debt, it may, by agreement of parties, be subsequently extended to cover a further advance not contemplated at the time of the deposit. If the further advance is agreed to be secured by the documents already deposited, the lien will extend to such advance also. It is not necessary that the documents should, for such further advance, be put back in the hands of the mortgagor and re-deposited as security for the original as well as for such further advance(82). Where the title deeds already in the possession of the creditor are agreed to be held by him as a security for a further advance, there is a constructive delivery of the deed which is sufficient to create an equitable mortgage(83).

A executed two promissory notes for Rs. 350 and Rs. 2,000 respectively to B and also deposited title deeds by way of equitable mortgage. Subsequently, he executed a single promissory note for Rs. 3,000, being the amount then due on the promissory notes, the deeds already deposited remaining with B. It was held that the retention of the deeds by B was enough to raise a presumption that the parties intended that they should be retained as security for the amount of the last note(84).

But there must be clear proof that the further advance was made on the security of the deposit(85). For this purpose it is necessary that there should be evidence that such was the intention(86). If there was such an intention gathered from written instruments or other circumstances, the deposit will extend to the subsequent advances also(87). It has been held that even an uncontradicted testimony on oath is sufficient for this purpose, the reason being that it is not probable that a person having made an advance upon a security, which he holds, should make further advances without security(88).

(D) The delivery must be with intent to create security.

The mere fact that title deeds are handed over by A to B does not establish a mortgage(89). It must be in pursuance of an agreement to give them as security for the loan advanced(90). Existence of such intention is the essence of the transaction of equitable mortgage, such intention, if exists is a question of fact(91). Thus, the mere fact that the title deeds of the debtor are found to be with the creditor without any explanation or connection being established between the loan and the title deeds will not constitute a mortgage(92), though in some cases(93) it has been held that in such cases a presumption would be raised that the documents were deposited as security for the loan. But these cases cannot now be considered good law in view of the recent decision of the Supreme Court in K. J. Nathan v Maruthi Rao(94) that the intention that the deeds shall be security for the debt is a question of fact which has to be decided in each case as any other fact and there is no presumption of law that the originated, or at least of the manner in which that possession originated, so that you may enter a contract, will not be enough to create an equitable security(95). While deciding the question whether parties created equitable mortgage by deposit of title deeds, the intention of the parties alone is the prime factor to be considered. The term "document of title" would apply not only to a document by which the mortgagor derives title to the property to be mortgaged but also applies to any document which provides some, if not conclusive, evidence that the mortgagor has title to the property.

The conduct of the party seeking loan facilities from a Bank clearly indicated his intention to create an equitable mortgage. Therefore, deposit of a copy of original document by him with the Bank would amount to valid mortgage(96). Where the party agreed to abide by the terms of sanction of cash credit facility as prescribed by the Bank in the instrument and it also created in favour of Bank first equitable mortgage on the leasehold rights over the land and the existing structure and the entire construction that might be put up, it was clear that the intention of the parties was not simply to record factum of deposit and delivery of title deeds which took place earlier but the intention as to create mortgage itself(97). A and B constituted the partners of a firm. B was, under the agreement of partnership, bound to redeem certain partnership property mortgaged with C. A advanced money to clear off the mortgage and obtained the title deeds of the property from the mortgagee "as the manager of the firm." It was held that the transaction was not a mortgage by B to A but was merely a partnership transaction(98). Title deeds were handed over to an attorney to mere deposit of title deeds constitutes a mortgage. So also the mere possession of documents of title without evidence of the contract upon which the possession prepare a legal mortgage deed. It was held it did not constitute an equitable mortgage(99). But if they are so handed over and there is also an intention to give an immediate security, an equitable mortgage will be created(100). In Keys v. Williams(101) where, in order to prevent immediate proceedings against the debtor the title deeds were handed over by him to the creditor's attorney for the purpose of preparing a mortgage of the property, it was held that an equitable mortgage was created. The Chief Baron said :

"The doctrine of equitable mortgages has been said to be an invasion of Statute of Frauds; and no doubt there was great difficulty in knowing how to deal with deposits of deed by way of security after the passing of that Statute. But in my opinion that Statute was never meant to affect the transaction of a man borrowing money and depositing his title deeds as a pledge of payment. If before the money was advanced the deeds had been deposited with a view to prepare a future mortgage, such a transaction could not be considered as an equitable mortgage by deposit; but it is otherwise where there is a present advance and the deeds are deposited under a promise to forbear suing, although they may be deposited only for the purpose of preparing a future mortgage. In such a case the deeds are given in part of the security, and become pledged from the very nature of the transaction(102)."

Where there is a deposit and a written agreement to execute a legal mortgage of the property it is quite clear that it is an equitable mortgage(103). In the undermentioned case(104) it was held that if the document contains all the provisions which are normally found in a mortgage deed, then the mere fact that the document also contains the bargain with regard to deposit of title deeds would not make it an agreement for the deposit of title deeds.

Where a deposit is made at the same time that the money is advanced there is little to be supplied with reference to the nature of the agreement. It is obvious that the purpose of the deposit must be to secure the repayment of the money. The connection is, however, not so direct between a debt antecedently due and a subsequently deposit. Nor is the inference so plain. It must be shown that the deposit was made for securing re-payment of the loan(105). Even where to secure an advance which is partly paid the mortgagor deposits title deeds it is good security for the part advanced(106). Where deeds were deposited for the purpose of obtaining credit, it was held in the undermentioned case(107) that the depository had no lien on them for what was due to him in respect of monies perviously advanced.

When the documents are in custody of the Bank, the necessary and inescapable inference that could be drawn is that the person had deposited his documents of title as security for realisation of debt obtained from Bank and it is not necessary that he should sign on the document(108). Where by executing a deed, the party agreed to abide by the terms of sanction of credit facilities as prescribed by the Bank and also created in favour of Bank equitable mortgage on the lease-hold rights over the land and the existing ownership structure which was in progress of construction, and the entire construction which might be put up from time to time on the lease hold land, it was mortgage by deposit of title deeds and not only memorandum of deposit of tile deeds(109).

A mortgage by deposit of title deeds can be effected even for securing the re-payment of a debt which is otherwise barred. In such a case the money becomes due on the date the mortgage is created by the deposit of title deeds and the limitation has to be counted from the date of the mortgage(110).

(E) Registration.

In England, a memorandum usually accompanies the deposit of title deeds by way of security and the mortgagee will ordinarily be entitled to claim to have such a memorandum executed(111). Under this Section no memorandum need accompany a deposit in order to create a mortgage, though such a memorandum is not prohibited. The reason is that the mortgage is created not by the writing but by the deposit(112). When the debtor deposits with the creditor title deeds of his property with an intent to create a security the law implies a contract between the parties to create a mortgage and no registered instrument is required under S. 59(113). The moment title deeds are deposited with the intention to create a mortgage it becomes a mortgage under S. 58(f) and takes effect from the date of deposit(114) and it is not necessary to create a charge separately(115). The question, however, arises whether if such a memorandum is executed it should be registered in order to create a valid mortgage. This again depends upon the question : Did the document constitute the bargain between the parties or was it merely the record of an already completed transaction? In the former case the memorandum itself constitutes the mortgage and must be registered(116). In the latter

In Hari Shankar v Kedra Nath(119) where the parties professing to create a mortgage by deposit of title deeds contemporaneously entered into an agreement in writing containing all the essentials of the transaction, expressly conferring a power of a sale on the mortgagee and in fact purported to be an instrument not merely evidencing a transaction already completed but by itself effective to create an interest in the property, their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the document was compulsorily registrable. Lord Macmillan in delivering the judgment of the Board observed :

"Their Lordships are of opinion that where, as here, the parties professing to create a mortgage by deposit of title deeds contemporaneously enter into a contractual agreement, in writing, which is made an integral part of the transaction and is itself an operative instrument and not merely evidential, such a document must, under the statute, be registered"

The test to be applied to conclude whether a letter written to a creditor at the time of deposit of title deeds or thereafter requires registration or not depends on the matter contained in that letter and if it recites that through this letter the mortgage was created, then only it would require registration otherwise not. Where the equitable mortgage was already created and the letter written thereafter only confirmed the act of deposit of title deed, it did not require registration(120).

See the undermentioned cases(121) to the same effect.

In instant case title deeds were deposited to create an equitable mortgage. Thereafter, the mortgagor wrote a letter to Bank referring to maximum liability. The letter did not say anything about the rate of interest, nor amount actually borrowed, nor method of repayment and time for repayment. Thus the document i.e. the letter did not require registration. Moreover, it referred to equitable mortgage already created. By no stretch of imagination it could be said that the letter contained all the terms of the transaction and therefore required registration(122).

On the other side of the line is the case of Sundarachariar v. Narayana Ayyar(123). In that deeds subsequently sent to A after a period of one year — Held letter operated only as a contract imposing upon C the obligation to create a mortgage when they acquired the property and hence did not require registration.)

case A gave a promissory note to B and on the same date gave a memo containing list of title deeds with in the introductory words "as agreed upon in person, I have delivered to you the undermentioned documents as security" It was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the memorandum was merely a record of the particulars of the deeds, the subject of deposit, that it did not embody the terms of the agreement between the parties, that it did not purport to create, assign or declare any right, title, or interest in the property under S 17 of the Registration Act and was therefore, admissible in evidence without registration. It was further held that though the agreement was embodied in a written instrument (which will be inadmissible if required to be registered), an oral agreement to create a security can be proved not only by oral evidence, but also by written evidence. Where there is nothing to show that the memorandum of deposit of title deed was executed simultaneously or prior to the deposit/delivery of the title deed, the memorandum did not require compulsory registration(124).

See also the cases noted below(125) to the same effect

Even in the Punjab where the Act does not apply, a memorandum constituting the bargain between the parties must be registered under the Registration Act(126).

In order that a memorandum may constitute a bargain between the parties so as to require registration, the memorandum must be between the parties to the mortgage by deposit of title deeds. In Paras Nath v. Mohan Manchua(127), B borrowed from A a certain sum upon a pronote and upon the terms that the deeds of certain property would be deposited as security. The title deeds and pro-note were accordingly handed over to A's agent who thereupon wrote a letter forwarding the same to A. It was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the letter having been written by A's agent to A could not be regarded as itself constituting the agreement between A and B so as to require registration.

Where the loan is obtained from the Bank on the security of immovable property mortgaged by deposit of title deeds in favour of bank and the document creating the mortgage by deposit of title deeds does not contemplate execution of any further document for creating a mortgage in favour of Bank, such document does not require registration(128).

Delivery of document of title alone is sufficient to create an equitable mortgage under S 58(f). There is no necessity to execute any document. Where a document was executed on the same date on which title deeds were delivered and parties had intention of creating a separate mortgage in the document in question for the purpose of securing the amount advanced under promissory note the document required registration(129).

(F) Remedy of the equitable mortgagee.

In England a mortgage by deposit of title deeds carries with it the remedies incident to an English mortgage such a foreclosure(130). Further the equitable mortgagee has prima facie no right to the rents of the mortgaged property until he has obtained an order of the Court(131). Before the amendment of the Act in 1929 there was difference of opinion as to the nature of the remedy available under this Act to an equitable mortgagee(132). Section 96 of the Act newly inserted by the amending Act of 1929 now makes it perfectly clear that an equitable mortgagee has remedies similar to those of a simple mortgagee(133).

A mortgagee by deposit of title deeds is not deprived of his right to recover the debt by his inability to produce either the deeds deposited or any memorandum of deposit when the Court believes that there was a deposit and that the deeds have been really lost(134).

When the debtor deposits with creditor title deeds of his property with an intent to create a security, the law implies a contract between the parties to create a mortgage. Whether there is intention is a question of fact.

The Court could not refuse to register a suit for recovery of debt on basis of deposit of title deeds on ground that there is no writing to show that the title deeds were handed over with an intent to create a security(135).

Where at the time of a mortgage by deposit of title deeds a person other than the mortgagor is in possession of the property, the mortgagee will be imputed with notice of the title and of all facts and circumstances under which possession was retained, which any one dealing with property

(G) Remedy of the mortgagor in equitable mortgage.

After an equitable mortgage by deposit, an action for detenu cannot be brought before repayment. The remedy of the mortgagor is only an action for redemption(137).

(H) Merger.

Where a deposit of title deeds to secure loans X and Y was made and subsequently a regular mortgage was executed of the properties in the title deeds, to secure loan X and no mention was made of loan Y, it was held that the mortgage by deposit was merged in the regular mortgage which being confined to loan X, there was no mortgage for loan Y(138).

(I) Interest.

In England in the absence of any agreement as to interest a mortgage by deposit of title deeds carries interest at 4 per cent(139).

See also the undermentioned case(140).

(J) Territories in which equitable mortgage can be made.

The territorial restrictions referred to in the clause have reference to the delivery of the deeds and not to the situation of the property(141). Even if the property is situated out of India a valid mortgage might be created if the delivery of the title deeds is made in the territories specified(142). So also the property may be situated outside the territories specified provided the delivery was within such territories(143). In a suit which is not for land viz. a suit for realisation of mortgage security where the mortgagor, who resides, carries on business or personally works for gain within the limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of Court, had created an equitable mortgage under S 58 T P Act of property situated outside those limits, in favour of mortgagee; the leave of Court under Cl 12 of Letters Patent 1865, is not a precondition to the exercise of jurisdiction by Court(144). A delivery outside the specified territories will not create a mortgage even if the property is within such territory(145). It has been held by the Privy Council that an equitable mortgage might be made by deposit in Madras of the title deeds of property situated within the Civil and Military Station of Bangalore(146).

In the undermentioned case(147) it was held that a deposit in England of the title deeds of land in India created a valid mortgage on the land. The expression "person in any of the following towns" does not mean that the person delivering the documents should be in the towns specified. The various towns must be read as going with "delivers". It is only the delivery that should be made within the said towns(148).

The validity of an equitable mortgage is not affected merely because the documents were delivered in a town other than notified town when they were forwarded to notified town for deposit(149).

Where A, in Bombay asked B in Poona to send the title deeds by post and B sent them by post, it was held that the delivery to the Post Office was a delivery to A's agent made in Poona and not in Bombay(150). The case would, however, be otherwise where A had not asked B to send them by post, but B had, of his own accord, sent them by post.

In instant case, it was alleged that equitable mortgage by deposit of title deeds was created at Indore branch of the Bank and the loan was advanced from Khargone Branch, Indore was specified as a town for the purpose of T. P Act by the erstwhile Madhya Bharat Govt. but there was no evidence that it remained operative even after formation of State of Madhya Pradesh. No documents or papers concerning alleged equitable mortgage were produced before the Court. Also no evidence was led to show that equitable mortgage at Indore was operative for loan transaction conducted at Khargone Branch. It could not therefore be said that equitable mortgage as alleged was created(151).

(K) Punjab and other areas.

The Act does not apply to the Punjab and a part of the Province of Delhi. Therefore there is no

by leasehold of different premises to which A was not a party — Held, that Calcutta High Court had original jurisdiction over the mortgage inasmuch as a part of the property was in Calcutta and could therefore pass a decree binding upon A's share as well in the mortgaged properties and the fact that A had no interest in the second leasehold was not material to the question of its jurisdiction.)) prohibition of creating an equitable mortgage in any part of those provinces(152). Section 59 of the old Act was, however, made applicable to the cantonment areas in the Punjab. Hence, an equitable mortgage cannot be made there as such area are not mentioned in S 59(153). An equitable mortgage can be made of property situated in the cantonment area, by a deposit outside that area but within the province(154). But such a mortgage cannot be made by a deposit within that cantonment area of property situate outside(155).

The Transfer of Property Act is now extended to Punjab. The promulgation of the Notification dated 28th August, 1975 by the Punjab Government extending the provisions of S 58(f) to Punjab, is nothing but an official recognition of the legal position already in existence since long. It cannot therefore be said that the mortgage by deposit of title deeds affected earlier to the date of the Notification would not be valid(156).

(L) Simla.

Mortgage by deposit of title deed is permissible in Simla and is not void for want of stamp and registration in view of Notification No. 5/73 Rev. A dt. 22-5-76(157).

(M) Rajasthan.

Even where the Section does not apply the mortgage is created by deposit of title deeds. It is construed as a simple mortgage and is valid(158).

40. Anomalous mortgages.

Section 98 as it stood before the amendment of 1929, excluded, from the category of anomalous mortgages, a combination of a simple mortgage and a usufructuary mortgage and a combination of a mortgage by conditional sale and a usufructuary mortgage. There was no such definition of an anomalous mortgage as is found in cl. (g) to this section which was added in 1929. Under the present definition, the combinations referred to above would amount to anomalous mortgages(1). Further a mortgage may be anomalous without being made up of two or more of the four types defined in the section(2). The important result of this change is that in the case of such combinations the rights and liabilities of the parties would be governed by the contract between the parties as evidenced in the mortgage deed or, by local usage(3). But to be an anomalous mortgage it must first amount to a mortgage as required by cl. (a) to S 58(4).

Where the mortgage was neither purely simple nor usufructuary exclusively but a mixture of two, it was anomalous mortgage. The mortgage stipulated that in the event of failure on the part of the mortgagor to pay up the amount due under the mortgage within specified period of time, it shall be open to the mortgagee to make realisation of the same by sale of mortgaged property. This evidently construed the character of simple mortgage under S 58(b) and yet the mortgage was not purely simple because under the mortgage deed the mortgagee was given constructive, if not actual, possession over certain shops with the right to realise the rent thereof from the respective tenants. It was further provided that the mortgagee shall be entitled to be in possession over certain lands. These terms gave the tenants of a usufructuary mortgage(5).

An anomalous mortgagee is not barred from recovering the money by sale of mortgaged property on the ground that there was no such agreement giving him such right. The creation of a mortgage prima facie results in creation of a loan and the loan involves personal liability which is not displaced by giving a security. Such presumption is displaced only in the case of usufructuary mortgage.(6)

Where the mortgagee was put into possession of mortgaged land and there was no unconditional promise by mortgagor for payment of money and the deed further provided that in case of non-payment, the usufructuary nature of transaction was to continue, it could not be said that the mortgage was anomalous and not usufructuary (7).

The document introducing any conditions other than those covered by S 58(d) could not be regarded as usufructuary mortgage but an anomalous mortgage. To illustrate if the document introduces personal covenant enabling the mortgagee to demand the mortgage money at a particular date and the document fixes a time limit, it would not be a usufructuary mortgage. Similarly if the document introduces other elements regarding improvements, payments and creates rights in regard therein, the document would come out of purview of definition of usufructure any mortgage would have to be termed as clarified an anomalous mortgage (8).

Anomalous mortgages may take as many forms as the parties may agree to enter into. The following are some of the forms of such mortgages:

- (1) A mortgage with possession containing also a covenant to pay the principal and interest (9)
- (2) A mortgage with possession with a stipulation that the transferee should appropriate the rents and profits for a specified term of years and then give back the land (10)
- (3) A mortgage with possession for specified term, the mortgagee to credit the rents and profits first to interest, and the balance to principal, and the deficiency if any to be paid by the mortgagor.
- (4) Simple mortgage repayable in a specified time, but giving the mortgagee a power to foreclose if a creditor brought a suit against the mortgagor or attempted to attach his property
- (5) Mortgage where possession is partly given and there is no covenant to pay
- (6) Mortgage with covenant to pay interest, but with no covenant to pay the principal
- (7) The othi, kanom and peruartham forms of mortgages prevailing in Madras; van mortgages prevailing in Gujarat, and iladarawara mortgages prevailing in South Canara. As to the incidents of these mortgages, see S. 98. As to the incidents of chitham and vatantar mortgages, see Notes 37b and 37c respectively.

Where though the document in question was styled as a possessory mortgage deed, the mortgagee was given the right to bring the property to sale on the mortgagor failing to pay the mortgaged money after the prescribed period, the document would not be a usufructuary mortgage simpliciter as it would partake a character of simple mortgage also. Such a mortgage comes under the category of anomalous mortgage. (11)

41. Simple mortgage usufructuary.

A combination of a simple mortgage and a usufructuary mortgage often referred to as a "simple mortgage usufructuary" was not classed under the Act, as it stood before 1929, as an anomalous mortgage,⁽¹⁾ though in some cases⁽²⁾ it was referred to as an anomalous mortgage. Under the present Section it is a anomalous mortgage.⁽³⁾

The characteristic of this mortgage is that the property is collaterally pledged as in the case of a simple mortgage with a covenant to pay, and the mortgagee is given the usufruct of it by allowing him to take the rents and profits ⁽⁴⁾ In the undermentioned cases⁽⁵⁾ it was held that a personal

See S 67, Note 15 and S 68, Note 17). Where, under an instrument purporting to be a mortgage, possession was transferred and there was a stipulation to pay the money at a particular time, failing which the property was to be regarded as sold to the mortgagee, it was held that it was a simple mortgage usufructuary and not a mortgage by conditional sale (6) Where a mortgage provided that if the mortgagee took possession, he would be entitled to receive the rents and profits in lieu of interest, but that, if during the period of possession the profits do not cover the amount of interest at a certain rate, the mortgagor will make good the deficiency, it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that this was a combination of a simple and a usufructuary mortgage (7) A stipulation in a mortgage document ran as follows :

"If according to the terms of the deed the interest of each year be not paid on the due date these terms will not prevent you (mortgagee) from recovering the amount without waiting for the due date. If interest is not paid, you can enter upon the property and pay yourself the interest and also portion of the principal if the income is available for that purpose also"

It was held that the mortgage was primarily a simple mortgage, though in certain events, it might be converted into a usufructuary mortgage (8) See also the undermentioned case (9)

Where a simple mortgagee obtains only a money decree against the mortgagor and sells the property in execution, the auction purchaser gets only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor at the time of the sale. (1) But a sale in execution of a mortgage decree will pass the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor existing not at the time of sale, but at the time of the mortgage. (2) If a mortgagee puts up the mortgaged property for sale in execution of a decree, he sells the entire interest and he and the mortgagor could jointly sell and not merely the right, title and interest of the mortgagor as they stood at the time of the sale. (3)

44. Miscellaneous — Construction.

Where the instrument is of a doubtful character, it is incumbent on the Court to ascertain the intention of the parties as disclosed in the deed itself (1) The scope of the mortgage deed with respect to the items of the property mortgaged is to be determined from the intention of the parties as expressed in the deed. (2) A gave a mortgage to B, and it was stated therein that if the mortgagor sold the mortgaged property or any part of it, he would pay over the entire proceeds to B. A subsequently sold a part of the property to C without the consent of B, and a portion of the proceeds was paid to B. The question arose whether the clause empowered the mortgagor to sell the mortgaged property to any one without the consent of the mortgagee free of the mortgage. It was held by the Judicial Committee that it did not, but that it was merely a provision for piecemeal redemption. (3) Their Lordships observed :

"The essence of a transaction by way of loan on security, is that the lender, unwilling to rely solely on the personal liability of the borrower, requires, in addition to be given a right in rem; and, to insert in the same document a provision by which the borrower bestows the required right in rem, and a provision enabling the borrower to destroy it forthwith, is a proceeding difficult to contemplate as probable. To reach the conclusion that such is the intention and operation of a mortgage security, their Lordships would require to be confronted with language admitting of no possible doubt as to its meaning."

A mortgage deed specifically enumerated certain villages as the property mortgaged but in describing the rent thereof, included the rent of other villages also. It was held that the mortgage should be treated as operative only in respect of the villages specifically mentioned, because there was a specific mention of certain properties followed by a description which if taken literally would have the effect of widening the description which had preceded (4)

In the undermentioned case(5) the land mortgaged was stated to be 12 bighas out of the mortgagor's holding of 15 bighas. The proportionate rent was also stated. The mortgagee obtained a decree for sale and the property was sold by auction. It was, however, subsequently found that the holding contained 25 bighas, but the rent was the same. The auction purchaser, therefore, claimed possession of the land in proportion to the rent stated in the bond out of the 25 bighas. It was held that it was not correct, as between a debtor and a creditor, to give the creditor a larger portion than what was mortgaged to him just because of the proportion of the rent.

By a bond, a mortgagor charged a half share of the profits of his mouza with the payment of the mortgage debt and interest. It was further stipulated that the mortgagee should take the management of the mouza, render accounts to the mortgagor and, if the mortgagor failed to pay the debt when due, the mortgagee should continue in possession till all the debt was paid. It was also provided that the mortgagor will have no power to transfer or alienate the property. It was held that it was a mortgage of the profits of the mouza and not the mouza itself. Had the last condition stood alone it would have been sufficient to constitute a simple mortgage of the estate itself (6).

A usufructuary mortgagee was to take profits in lieu of interest which was fixed. Any deficiency was to be paid by the mortgagor and in case of default the mortgagee was to recover it from the property Z. It was held that Z was secured for the payment of the deficiency in interest (7).

A mortgaged property to B. Afterwards a dispute having arisen between them, it was agreed that the property should be put in possession of the mortgagee and he should take the interest from the profits and the excess should be paid to the mortgagor. The arrangement was to come into effect on the same date and was recorded by the Court (Revenue). It was held that this arrangement effected a fresh contract of mortgage.(8)

1. Legislative changes.

The old section ran as follows :—

"59. Where the principal money secured is one hundred rupees or upwards, a mortgage can be effected only by a registered instrument signed by the mortgagor and attested by at least two witnesses

Where the principal money secured is less than one hundred rupees, a mortgage may be effected either by a registered instrument signed and attested as aforesaid or (except in the case of a simple mortgage) by delivery of the property.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to render invalid mortgage in the towns of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Karachi, Rangoon, Moulmein, Bassein, Akyab and in any other town which the Governor-General in Council may by notification in the Gazette of India, specify in this behalf by delivery to a creditor or his agent of documents of title to immovable property, with intent to create a security thereon."

The last paragraph has now been transferred to S 58(f) and the words "other than a mortgage by deposit of title deeds" inserted in the first paragraph as a consequential amendment

The words "a registered instrument" in the second paragraph were inserted for the words "an instrument" by Act VI of 1904. See Note 5.

2. Scope of the section.

This section prescribes the mode in which a mortgage is to be effected. Before the passing of this Act no written conveyance was necessary by the law of India (1) An oral mortgage could be validly made without writing, by simple delivery of possession.(2) Where, however, a mortgage securing a sum of more than one hundred rupees was created by a written instrument, it was required to be registered under the provisions of the Registration Act.(3) Under this section—

- (1) A simple mortgage can be made only by a registered instrument, whatever be the amount of the principal money secured.(4)
- (2) A mortgage, other than an equitable mortgage, can be made only by a registered instrument, if the principal money secured by it is one hundred rupees or upwards.
- (3) A mortgage, other than a simple mortgage or an equitable mortgage, can be made either by a registered instrument or by delivery of possession if the principal money secured by it is less than one hundred rupees.

The section does not say in what form an equitable mortgage is to be made. But S. 58(f) makes it clear that such a mortgage is effected by delivery of the title deeds with the intention of creating security in the property comprised in such deeds.

In a suit for redemption in condition precedent is that there should be a registered deed evidencing the mortgage of immovable property for a sum of Rs. 100/- or above secured as mortgage money evidencing the mortgage as contemplated by S. 59. The provision in S. 59 is essentially a rule of law and not a rule of evidence.(5)

All mortgages, to be valid, must conform to the requirements of this section. Thus, even anomalous mortgages such as a kanom or a melcharth or melkanom rent, must, in order to be valid, conform to these requirements (6)

All that this section requires for the creation of a valid mortgage is a writing duly executed, attested and registered. It imposes no obligation on a mortgagee who takes a registered deed, of calling for and retaining the title deeds of the properties mortgaged. If, therefore, the failure on the part of the mortgagee to ask for or keep the title deeds of the properties, enables the mortgagor to raise money on them from another mortgagee, the latter is not entitled to priority over the former.(7)

This section does not apply to territories for the time being excluded from the operation of the Registration Act, 1908(8). By sub-section (1) of S. 287 of the Cantonments Act, 1924, this section has been extended to cantonments.

Section 59 which is not applicable to Sikkim does not embody any rule of natural justice. But documents relating to sell the mortgage etc. require registration according to Rules applicable in Sikkim.(9)

A mortgage of movables is not within the Act and is not governed by this section and does not require to be registered or attested. (10)

This section does not apply to instruments falling within the purview of O 21, R 34, Civil P.C. An instrument of mortgage executed by Court in pursuance of a decree for specific performance, therefore, needs no attestation by two witnesses as required by this section (11)

Though the principles of this Act had been applied in the Punjab as being rules of justice, equity and good conscience, the technical rules, such as are referred to in this section, relating to the execution, and attestation of a mortgage as required by this section, had never been applied (12) From 10-6-1968, however, the provisions of the section have now been extended to the State of Punjab. See foot note 'A' under the text of the section. This section does not apply to a part of the Province of Delhi (13) and did not apply to the former State of Bikaner (14) and to Vindhya Pradesh before this Act was extended to it (15) Where the mortgage is executed in a place to which the Act applies but the property is situated in another place to which the Act does not apply the form and validity of the conveyance is determined not by the lex loci contractus but by the lex situs of the property involved. (16)

This section does not apply to transfers effected before the date of commencement of the Jammu and Kashmir Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, Smvt 1996 and hence mortgages effected by oral agreements or by unregistered documents prior to that date are not hit by the section. (17)

In the undermentioned case (18) it was observed that the Act is not exhaustive and that an award of arbitrators could create a valid mortgage though unattested and unregistered. It is submitted that this view is not correct. It may create a charge, but not a mortgage.

Section 63-A of the Dekkhan Agriculturist's Relief Act (XVII of 1879) did not affect the requisition prescribed by this section and so a document of mortgage, though properly executed in accordance with S. 63-A of that Act, was held to be invalid if it was not duly attested as required by this section.(19)

Where Financial Banking Institutions advance agricultural loans a mortgage can be created by obtaining declaration and registration as not required in view of M.P. Act 32 of 1973).(20)

Under the Stamp Act, an instrument of mortgage need not be valid in law or meet the requirements of law as a valid mortgage document before it is chargeable to stamp duty under the Act (21) (See also S. 58, Note 2.)

3. "Principal money secured."

If the principal money secured is less than one hundred rupees, the mortgage can be made without a registered instrument. Thus, a mortgage of Rs. 99 payable in two years with interest at 12 per cent per annum can be made without a registered instrument even though the total amount secured including interest will be more than one hundred rupees. In other words, interest is not to be taken into account in estimating the amount secured. Section 17 of the Registration Act makes no reference to the "principal money" as being the value of the right or interest created by a mortgage. But it has been held that even under the said Act, that is the amount which is to be considered for the purpose of deciding whether the registration of the mortgage instrument is optional or compulsory.(1)

4. Mortgage when sum secured is one hundred rupees or upwards.

Before the enactment of this Act, a mortgage could be made orally. And before the Registration Act of 1964, even a document of mortgage did not require to be registered whatever might be the amount of the mortgage.(1)

1. (1879) 2 Mad 108 (110) (DB).

This Act lays down the manner in which a mortgage can be validly made. And it is a general principle that where a statute requires a transfer to be made in a particular manner, it can be made only in the way so pointed out by the statute, or by a decree of a competent Court. (2) The section requires that where the principal amount secured is one hundred rupees or upwards a mortgage other than an equitable mortgage can be made only by a registered instrument. (3) A security bond furnished for stay of execution of the decree on the security of property in the suit exceeding Rs. 100/- in value must be registered. (4) An unregistered document of mortgage, in such a case, does not affect the property dealt with by it. (5) Where such bond is executed in consideration of previous bonds, the previous bonds do not get merged in the unregistered bond and the promisee does not lose his right to proceed to enforce such previous bonds. (6) Where the amount exceeding Rs. 100/- was secured and mortgage money but the mortgage deed was unregistered, it could not be accepted in evidence for establishing relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee, between the parties, in view of the provisions of S. 59. (7) Where the principal amount involved in a mortgage was Rs. 200/- and the document was unregistered and unstamped, it could not be treated as a valid mortgage merely because the dependant admitted in his written statement that the suit property was mortgaged with him. (8) An oral mortgage, in a case where the sum secured is one hundred rupees or upwards is also invalid and conveys no interest. (9)

An admission by the mortgagor that the mortgagee was in possession of the property as mortgagee under an oral mortgage for a consideration of more than Rs 100 cannot create a mortgage and no entry in the revenue record to this effect is sufficient (12)

Until the mortgage document is registered the mortgagee is not under any obligation to advance the mortgage money to the mortgagor. Till then there is no debt in the hands of the mortgagee payable to the mortgagor. A creditor of the latter cannot therefore attach such amount in the hands of the mortgagee. (13)

5. Mortgage where sum secured is less than one hundred rupees.

Under the section as it stood before the year 1904, a mortgage for less than one hundred rupees could be made by an unregistered instrument (1) or by delivery of the property. In dealing with questions of priority of registered over unregistered instrument under S 50 of the Registration Act, difficulties arose by reason of the decisions of Court that the provisions of that Act as regards priority were subject to the doctrine of notice (2). This section was, therefore, amended by Act VI of 1904 by substituting the words "a registered instrument" for the words "an instrument" thus making it clear that a mortgage for less than one hundred rupees cannot be validly made by an instrument unless it is registered (3). Except in cases of instruments executed before the amendment of 1904, a competition between a registered and unregistered mortgage instrument cannot now arise. As has been seen already, a simple mortgage, even for less than one hundred rupees, must be made only by a registered instrument.(4) But other mortgages (excepting mortgages by deposit of title deeds) may be made either by a registered instrument or by delivery of the property.(5) Where delivery of the property is not possible, as where the mortgagee is already in possession as a usufructuary mortgagee, a fresh mortgage to him can only be made by a registered instrument.(6) Where an instrument recited that a mortgage with possession "has been made from the ensuing year" it was held that the parties intended to effect a mortgage by delivery after a year.(7)

The transaction in the instant case was a usufructuary mortgage but it was not in writing and registered as required under S. 59. Therefore, the suit by mortgagor that mortgagee be directed to accept the mortgage amount and return back the mortgaged land was not maintainable. The transaction could not be treated as a contract because if so treated S. 59 would be otiose (8).

Where a mortgage for less than one hundred rupees is evidenced by an unregistered instrument and there has also been a delivery of the property, the existence of the unregistered instrument would, on the principles discussed in Note 21 on S. 54, prevent the passing of any valid title by way of a mortgage. The undermentioned cases(9) expressing a contrary view must be held to be not good law.

The delivery contemplated by the section is delivery contemporaneous with the contract of mortgage and not delivery subsequent to it.(10)

The phraseology "delivery of property" should be given intelligible meaning and should not be made rule of thumb. If a person is already in possession and a mortgage is created for an amount less than one hundred rupees by an unregistered deed then he can avoid of that possession after fulfilling the requirements of S. 59. No insistence can be made for contemporaneous delivery of possession in cases covered by S. 59 on the analogy of S. 54.(11) An oral mortgage by delivery of possession where such can be made is as good as a mortgage by a registered instrument and stands on the same footing in dealing with the question of priorities. A prior mortgage of the former kind will be entitled to priority over a subsequent mortgage of the latter kind (12).

In the undermentioned case(13) a usufructuary mortgage was executed in 1900 by an unregistered instrument for Rs. 95. The question arose after the amendment of 1929 whether the instrument was admissible in evidence to prove the mortgage. It was held that the admissibility of a document was a matter of procedure governed by the present law, and, therefore, it was not admissible under S. 49 of the Registration Act.

In Bengal a permanent tenure can be transferred only by a registered instrument under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885. Consequently a mortgage of such tenure can be effected only by a registered instrument even if the consideration is less than one hundred rupees, and this is so, notwithstanding this section. (14)

6. Registered instrument.

The word "registered" has been defined in S. 3 as meaning registered in any part of the territories of which the Act extends under the law for the time being in force regulating the registration of documents. The Registration Act, 1908, is the law referred to.

The word "registered" must be taken as meaning "validly registered," and a deed not validly registered conveys no interest in the property dealt with by it (1). A mortgage deed not validly presented as required by S. 32 of the Registration Act cannot be said to be validly registered and cannot convey any interest (2). Again where the registration of the deed is a fraud on the registration law, the deed cannot be said to have been validly registered. Thus, where non-existing property (3) or property not intended to be conveyed or transferred at all (4) is included in the document merely for the purpose of effecting registration, the registration so effected is a fraud upon the registration law and is invalid and conveys no title. Similarly if the property is so incorrectly or insufficiently described that it cannot be identified,(5) or when the deed is registered in any office within whose jurisdiction the property is not situate,(6) or where a document is accepted for registration after the period prescribed,(7) or where the registration is effected notwithstanding the denial of execution by the executant(8) the registration would be invalid. But where some property, however small, is included with the intention of transferring it by way of mortgage, for the purpose of getting it registered by a particular Sub-Registrar, it cannot be said that there is a fraud on the registration law. The smallness of the property has no importance in this connection.(9) Nor is the registration rendered invalid by the mere fact that the property included in the document did not belong to the mortgagor, unless it is shown that both the mortgagor and the mortgagee colluded to insert the item with the knowledge that the mortgagor had no title and with no intention of transferring.(10) In other words, registration is not invalid merely because there is a flaw in the title of the mortgagor to the property and subsequently it turns out that the transferor had ceased to have any interest in the property.(11) Where the mortgagee does not know that the mortgagor had no title to the property included, and the mortgagor represents to the mortgagee that he is the owner, the mortgagor cannot take advantage of his own fraud by pleading that the deed is not registered at the proper place.(12)

A transaction in registration of which there is a mere procedural defect is binding on the parties provided it does not injure innocent persons.(13) Thus, a document registered in Book IV instead of Book I is an error of the Sub-Registrar and cannot prejudice the parties. The registration making a mark cannot be said to have signed the document.(4) A person who is literate but becomes incapable of writing owing to paralysis and who has been in the habit of affixing a name stamp through his servant, can however validly execute a document by such affixture.(5)

A mortgage not signed by the mortgagor or mortgagors is not a mortgage at all (6) A mortgage intended to be executed by all the shares in a certain property but actually executed by some of them only is wholly inoperative and does not convey any interest in the mortgaged property (7)

See also the undermentioned case.(8)

The mere signing of a document is not necessarily the execution of the document. The execution of the document implies the intelligent appreciation of the contents of the document and signing it in token of the acceptance of such contents.(9) Further, the signing of the document without delivery thereof to the executee is not execution of the document. Execution means all acts necessary to make the parties to the contract bound thereby.(10) Moreover all means, where the document has to be attested, by witnesses, the signing in the presence of the witnesses (11)

The mere fact that a document is signed and attested a few days after it is written out, does not render its execution invalid or alter its legal affect (12)

This section makes attestation a condition of the validity of the mortgage. The word "attested" must be regarded as important and the requirement as to attestation must be enforced with stringency (3). There is, however, no particular form for attestation, nor is it necessary that the signatures of the attesting witnesses must appear in any particular place on the document (4). Attestation by a person who had made attestation even before executant signed the document is invalid (5) (See also S. 3, Note 16.)

A party to a document cannot be a valid attesting witness also for the same document. Thus, where A signs as an executant of a mortgage deed under a power of attorney from B, B is the executant of the deed and though physically a different person from A, B cannot be treated as an attesting witness of the deed (6). But where the lender of mortgage money is not a party to the mortgage deed this section does not debar him from attesting the deed (7). See also S. 3, Note 17.

The section enacts that a mortgage instrument must, in order to be valid, be attested by two witnesses. A mortgage not attested by two witnesses is not enforceable as a mortgage (8). A deed purporting to be a mortgage but attested by one witness only cannot operate as a mortgage (9).

not required to be proved in the manner provided by S. 68 of the Evidence Act (19). It may be noted that the provisions of this section have now been extended to the State of Punjab from 10-6-1968.

Sections 68 to 71 of the Evidence Act lay down how a document required by law to be attested should be proved. These rules may be summarised as follows

- (1) Where the execution of the document is specifically denied, one attesting witness at least, if alive, must be called to prove its execution. This is not necessary if the execution of the document is not specifically denied. (20) (S. 68). The document in such cases can be proved in any manner, so long as the evidence is sufficient to satisfy the Court that the execution was so probable that a prudent man ought under the circumstances to act upon the supposition that it was executed (21). Where the defendant says "I do not admit the execution" it is not a "specific denial" (22). The averments that the document is concocted one, it is not executed by person purported to be the executant and that the document is created fraudulently amounts to 'specific denial'. (23)

If the attesting witness denies or does not recollect the execution of the document, its execution may be proved by other evidence (24) (S. 71)

- (2) If no attesting witness can be found or if the document purports to have been executed in the United Kingdom, the signature of the person executing the document and the attestation of one attesting witness must be shown to be in the handwriting of that person (S. 69) (25). If that is shown the presumption will be that the witness actually witnessed the execution of the deed. (26)

(3) Where the execution of the document is admitted by a party it is sufficient proof of execution as against him alone. (27) (S. 70), but not against others. (28)

Where execution is admitted but attestation is specifically denied, then attestation must be proved (29) The reason is that a denial of attestation is a denial of execution, for execution includes signature in the presence of attestors as required by law. Even where execution is admitted if the evidence adduced by the mortgagee shows positively that the document has not been attested in accordance with law the mortgagee would fail. (30)

But though one attesting witness may be sufficient to be examined as a witness to prove the execution of the document, the facts proved must show that the document is a valid mortgage. In other words, the facts proved must satisfy the requirements of a valid mortgage under this section. Thus, the facts proved must be that the document was attested by two witnesses and that the mortgagor signed the document. This is the Madras view as expressed in Namberumal Chettiar v. Raghavachariar. (31) Abdur Rahim, J., in that case observed as follows :

"A mortgage bond, in order to be valid, must be executed in the presence of two attesting witnesses. Section 68 of the Evidence Act further requires that one at least of the attesting witnesses to a mortgage bond should be called, if there is any alive. But that does not in any way affect the requirements of S. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. Section 68 of the Evidence Act lays down that in order to prove a mortgage bond, one of the attestors must be called. It would be competent for that attestor or for any other witness to prove that the execution was in the presence of two attestors and it is not necessary to call two attestors. There may be cases where all the attesting witnesses are dead, when the requirements of the law would be satisfied by any evidence which would show that the document was executed in the presence of two attesting witnesses."

And Seshagiri Aiyar, J., in the same case said :

"Under S. 68, it is necessary that a particular class of witnesses should be called in order to prove a document which is required by law to be attested. Therefore this provision does not do away with the necessity of showing that the document is valid. A document may be proved as required by S. 68 and put on record. Nonetheless in order that a decree may be found on it, it must be shown to be valid, and for this purpose we must go to S. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. That section lays down that unless a mortgage is attested by two witnesses there cannot be a proper mortgage. Mere proof by a single witness that it has been executed cannot enable a party to get a decree on the mortgage, unless it is also shown that at its execution, the document is attested by two witnesses."

See also the undermentioned cases(32) for the view that one attesting witness may be called, but it must be proved that the document was attested by two witnesses. A slightly different view has been expressed by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Lachman Singh v Surendra, (33) namely, that where a mortgagee sues to enforce his mortgage and the execution and attestation of the deed are not admitted, the mortgagee need only prove this much that the mortgagor signed the document in the presence of an attesting witness and one man attested the document, provided that on the face of it the document bears the attestation of more than one person. But if the validity of the mortgage is specifically denied in the sense that the deed did not effect a mortgage in law then it must be proved by the mortgagee that the deed was attested at least by two witnesses. See also the undermentioned cases.(34)

Where the mortgage has not been effected, as required by S 59 the question of the effect of admission as to its execution by the mortgagor is immaterial (35)

The admission by the mortgagor of the execution of the document is not an admission of the validity of the document. Such an admission therefore does not dispense with proof of attestation as required by law (36) Where there is a dispute as to the document being a mortgage bond or a money

8A. Proof of attested document.

See Note 8.

9. Attestation and estoppel.

The mere attestation of a document by a relative of the executant of a document does not necessarily import concurrence (1). It might, no doubt, be shown by other evidence that when he became an attesting witness he fully understood what the transaction was, and that he was a concurring party to it, but from the mere subscription of his name that inference does not necessarily arise. (2)

Attestation by itself would neither create estoppel nor imply consent, it does not involve the attester in any knowledge of the contents of the deed or affect him with notice of its provisions (3). In Pandurang Krishnaji v. Markandeya Tukaram (4) their Lordships of the Privy Council said

"Attestation of a deed by itself estops a man from denying nothing whatever excepting that he has witnessed the execution of the deed. It conveys neither directly nor by implication any knowledge of the contents of the document, and it ought not to be put forward alone for the purpose of establishing that a man consented to the transaction which the document effects."

Where, however, in addition to the fact that a person attested the deed, there is evidence to show that he consented to and acquiesced in the execution of the document, it is a legitimate inference to draw from such evidence that he not only witnessed the execution of the document but also consented to the transaction. with the consent of any party thereto, as it prevails in English Courts, applies to Indian cases(1) and is briefly summarised by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Nathu Lal v. Gomit Kuar(2) as follows :

- "If an alteration (by erasure, interlineation or otherwise) is made in a material part of a deed after its execution, by or with the consent of any party thereto or person entitled thereunder, but without the consent of the party or parties liable thereunder, the deed is thereby made void.
- "The avoidance however, is not ab initio or so as to nullify any conveyancing effect which the deed had already had, but only operates as from the time of such alteration and so as to prevent the person who has made or authorised the alteration and those claiming under him, from putting the deed in suit to enforce, against any party bound thereby who did not consent to the alteration, any obligation, covenant or promise thereby undertaken or made.
- "A material alteration is one which varies the rights, liabilities, or legal position of the parties ascertained by the deed in its original state or otherwise varies the legal effect of the instrument as originally expressed, or reduces to certainty some provision which was originally unascertained and as such void, or may otherwise prejudice the party bound by the deed as originally executed
- "The effect of making such an alteration without the consent of the party bound is exactly the same as that of cancelling the deed. The avoidance of the deed is not retrospective and does not revest or reconvey and estate or interest in property which passed under it. And the deed may be put in evidence to prove that such estate or interest so passed or for any other purpose than to maintain an action to enforce some agreement therein contained."

In absence of the mortgage deed providing for interest a subsequent letter agreeing to pay interest in respect of immovable property involving worth more than Rs. 100/- is not admissible for want of registration and interest cannot be claimed (4)

12. Mortgage by company.

Where a company executes a mortgage of its property the mortgage must, in order to bind the property, be not only registered under the Registration Act as required by this section, but must also be registered under S. 125 of the Companies Act, 1956. However, the want of the latter kind of registration does not render the mortgage wholly invalid, it is valid as an admission of debt but, as against a creditor or liquidator, it cannot create a valid charge on the property (1)

Even if a mortgage created by a limited company is valid according to the T P Act but is not registered under the Companies Act 1956, the position of the creditor would be that of an unsecured creditor. But if the mortgage is valid being in violation of Rule 94(a) of the Defence of India Rules 1939 the question of registration does not arise. (2)

13. Registered document when takes effect.

See section 47 of the Registration Act. A registered document speaks from the date of its execution and not from the date of its registration (1) Under S. 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act,

14. Unregistered bond — Admissibility in evidence.

In cases arising before the amendment of S. 49 of the Registration Act by Act XXI of 1929 it was held that an unregistered mortgage document was not admissible in evidence where the mortgage itself was sought to be thereby given effect to e.g., to prove a right of redemption (1) or to prove a right to damages for breach of the mortgage contract by failure to secure possession to the mortgagee (2) But there was a difference of opinion as to whether an unregistered mortgage document could be used as evidence for any other purpose.

(A) To prove personal covenant to pay.

The general trend of opinion was that the document could be used as evidence to prove the personal covenant to pay contained in the document — one class of cases (3) resting this view on the ground that such a covenant was divisible from the hypothecation part of the document, and did not by itself require registration, and another class of cases (4) resting the view on the ground that such a covenant did not affect immovable property, independent of any question whether the covenant was divisible or not from the hypothecation part of the document. A contrary opinion was held in the undermentioned cases(5) that the covenant to pay cannot be separated from the other portions of the document and that, therefore, the document cannot be used in evidence to prove the covenant. Where the mortgage document did not contain any promise to pay the debt it was held in the cases noted below (6) that it could not to be used in evidence for any purpose

(B) To prove nature of possession.

In Varada Pillai v Jeevarathnammal(7) which was a case of gift, their Lordships of the Privy Council held that though unregistered, the document may be evidence to show the nature of a person's possession. In the undermentioned cases(8) of unregistered mortgage deeds, it has been held, similarly that such deeds may be received in evidence to show the nature of possession. A contrary view was expressed in cases noted below (9)

(C) To prove the payment of consideration.

One view was that it could be used to prove payment of consideration (10) According to the Nagpur Court, a fact to be collateral must be independent of and divisible from the purpose to effect which the law requires registration, that the payment of consideration is not such a collateral fact and that therefore the document cannot be received in evidence to prove consideration (11)

(D) To prove delivery of possession.

An unregistered usufructuary mortgage was held inadmissible to prove delivery of possession to the mortgage on the ground that so to use it would be to affect the land (12)

(E) Effect of amendment of S. 49, Registration Act, by Act 21 of 1929.

Act XXI of 1929 has now amended S. 49 of the Registration Act by the addition of the following Proviso :

"Provided that an unregistered document affecting immovable property and required by this Act or by the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, to be registered may be received as evidence of a contract in a

It is now clear that while an unregistered mortgage cannot be received in evidence for purposes which involve the giving effect to the mortgage itself as, for example, to prove a right of redemption(13) or to prove the terms of the mortgage or true nature of transaction(14) it may be used to prove "collateral transactions not required to be effected by a registered instrument"(15) According to the High Court of Madras the words "transaction affecting such property" in S. 49 of the Registration Act mean "transaction purporting to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish a right, title or interest in immoveable property" and transactions not falling within this description are collateral transactions (16) Thus, an unregistered mortgage may be received in evidence to prove a personal covenant to pay.(17) or an acknowledgment of the existence of another mort-

It was held in the undermentioned case(5) that an invalidly registered usufructuary mortgage document cannot be used in evidence to recover money under S. 68 inasmuch as such a claim involves the proof of the mortgage as a mortgage. The Rajasthan High Court has in the following case,(6) held that the document cannot be admitted in evidence even for the limited purpose of proving the receipt of consideration and the plaintiff can recover the money only if he can prove the same by other evidence. It is conceived that the document may be used to show that consideration passed under the document, and to recover the amount under S. 65 of the Contract Act.(7) It has also been held in the undermentioned case(8) that the mortgagee can base his claim under S. 70 of the Contract Act. The following case(9) has held that the suit to recover back the money is a suit by way of damages for breach of contract.

An unregistered mortgage deed is inadmissible in evidence to prove the terms of mortgage, but it is definitely admissible to establish the nature and character of possession of mortgagee. The possession of mortgagee under an unregistered mortgage deed is permissive. Where the mortgagor cannot regain possession on basis of oral mortgage for want of registration, it is open to him, to recover possession on the strength of his title.(10)

Where in a redemption suit the defendant admits his possession as mortgagee and is willing to restore the possession on payment of the mortgage money the question of the inadmissibility of the mortgage deed due to its non-registration does not arise and the redemption suit is maintainable.(11) See also Notes 4, 14. A mortgage deed which does not conform to the requirements of this section in the matter of registration and attestation, is not liable to stamp duty.(12)

Normally a person in possession of property under an invalid transfer starts prescribing from the date of execution of the transfer, but he cannot prescribe a higher title than what is intended to be transferred. In this case it was held that such person will be deemed only a mortgagee.(13)

If the transaction is a mortgage by conditional sale and the mortgagee remains in possession for more than 12 years pleading adverse possession what he acquires is only the right as a mortgage and cannot resist suit for possession by the mortgagor though the mortgage is invalid for want of registration.(14)

A suit for redemption is not maintainable on the basis of an invalid mortgage (15)

^[59A. REFERENCES TO MORTGAGORS AND MORTGAGEES TO INCLUDE PERSONS DERIVING TITLE FROM THEM.— Unless otherwise expressly provided, references in this Chapter to mortgagors and mortgagees shall be deemed to include references to persons deriving title from them respectively]

[A] Inserted by the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, 1929 (XX of 1929), S. 21

Synopsis

1. Analogous law.
2. Scope of the section.

3. "Person deriving title from them respectively."
4. "Unless otherwise—expressly provided."

1. Analogous law.

The words "mortgagor" and "mortgagee" are defined in S. 205, sub-sec. (1) (xvi) of the Law of Property Act, 1925) (15 Geo. V Chap. 20), as follows :

" 'Mortgagor' includes any person from time to time deriving title under the original mortgagor or entitled to redeem a mortgage according to his estate, interest or right in the mortgaged property. 'mortgagee' includes a chargee by way of legal mortgage and any person from time to time deriving title under the original mortgagee."

2. Scope of the section.

This section was newly added by the amending Act of 1929. But even before this section was added, it was generally held that the words "mortgagor" and "mortgagee" in the several sections of the Act would include their representatives (1) though in some cases difficulty was felt in giving this interpretation to these words, e.g., in S. 68, cl. (a). The section has been enacted to avoid any such difficulty (2) and is only statutory recognition of what had been already laid down as the law (3). In their Report in the Special Committee observed :

"Whether the words 'mortgagor' and 'mortgagee' as used in the different sections in this chapter include all persons deriving title from them has given rise to some difficulties (see 39 Ind App 7 and ILR 21 All 223). In order to make this clear, we propose the addition of section 59A."

3. "Persons deriving title from them respectively."

This section was added by the T. P. (Amendment) Act, 1929. The effect of the section is to definite the words "mortgagor" and "mortgagee" used in Chapter IV of the Act as including within their scope persons deriving title from them respectively (1). Thus the word "mortgagor" will include the subsequent purchaser of the mortgaged property(2) and the word "mortgagee" will include a purchaser of the mortgagee rights.(3)

A right of redemption does not remain independent of the property itself. A sale of property that too to a stranger who had nothing to do with the mortgage and who was not a party to the same, would convey complete title to that property to him and once the title to that property goes, the equity of redemption shall also accompany the property, the stranger would then be in a position to substitute himself in the place of plaintiff mortgagor and to step in his shoes.(4)

It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that the section draws a distinction between the two categories of mortgagors and mortgagees and that the intention of the section is that the persons who derive title from them are to be persons who derive title as a mortgagor or as a mortgagee. In other words the word "mortgagor" would not include a mortgagee from him, but would include persons succeeding by inheritance or by will or by sale or by auction-sale to the right of the equity of redemption held by the mortgagor (5). A similar view has been taken also by the Oudh Court and the Calcutta and Madras High Courts (6). It has been held by the High Court of Rangoon that the word "mortgagee" would not include a mortgagee from the mortgagee (i.e., a sub-mortgagee) (7). In a case arising before the section was added it was, however, held by the High Court of Madras that the word "mortgagee" in Section 60 would include his sub-mortgagee.(8). In a case decided by that Court after the amendment it has been held that a mortgagee for the purpose of redemption would include all persons who derive title from him and it is immaterial whether that title is derived by sale in invitum or by private treaty or whether it is by act of parties or by operation of law (9) The High Court of Patna has also expressed a similar view.(10)

A person who succeeds to the right of a mortgagor by survivorship will be a "mortgagor" within the meaning of this section (11) A purchaser of the equity of redemption, is included in the term 'mortgagor' and is entitled to redeem the usufructuary mortgage Application by purchaser from mortgagor for possession under Section 12 Bihar Money Lenders Act will be tenable (12) The execution purchaser of equity redemption is included in the term mortgagor (13) Where the equity of redemption vests in several persons either by devolution or transfer, such persons will be co-mortgagors Though the word "mortgagor" would include such legal representatives under the terms of the section, it would not mean that the relationship between them inter se would not be that of co-mortgagors (14) A co-mortgagor is entitled to redeem mortgage on his own right (15) See also the undermentioned cases.(16)

See also S. 95, Note 7.

4. "Unless otherwise expressly provided."

It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that S. 91 is a provision to the contrary in that it provides that "besides the mortgagor, the following persons are entitled to redeem" and at the same time includes among those persons such persons as derive title from the mortgagor (1)

Section 59A opens with the words "unless otherwise expressly provided" Since S. 91 is a provision which provides 'otherwise' as contemplated by S. 59-A a purchaser of equity of redemption from the mortgagor either in invitum or by private treaty would be a person who had an interest in the property mortgaged within the meaning of S. 91(a), so that he will not be a mortgagor under first part of S. 91.(2)

Rights and Liabilities of Mortgagor

60. RIGHT OF MORTGAGOR TO REDEEM.— At any time after the principal money has become ^A[due], the mortgagor has a right, on payment or tender, at a proper time and place of the mortgage-money, to require the mortgagee (a) to deliver ^B[to the mortgagor the mortgage-deed and all documents relating to the mortgaged property which are in the possession or power of the mortgagee], (b) where the mortgagee is in possession of the mortgaged property, to deliver possession thereof to the mortgagor, and (c) at the cost of the mortgagor either to re-transfer the mortgaged property to him or to such third person as he may direct, or to execute and (where the mortgage has been effected by a registered instrument) to have registered an acknowledgment in writing that any right in derogation of his interest transferred to the mortgagee has been extinguished :

Provided that the right conferred by this section has not been extinguished by act of the parties or by ^C[decree] of a Court.

The right conferred by this section is called a right to redeem and a suit to enforce it is called a suit for redemption.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to render invalid any provision to the effect that, if the time fixed for payment of the principal money has been allowed to pass or no such time has been fixed, the mortgagee shall be entitled to reasonable notice before payment or tender of such money

Redemption of portion of mortgaged property.

Nothing in this section shall entitle a person interested in a share only of the mortgaged property to redeem his own share only, on payment of a proportionate part of a amount remaining due on the mortgage, except ^D[only] where a mortgagee, or, if there are more mortgagees than one, all such mortgagees, has or have acquired, in whole or in part, the share of a mortgagor.

1. Scope of the section.

This section deals with the 'right' of redemption when it arises, how it is to be exercised and what are the rights of the mortgagor on redemption. The right of redemption is often referred to as the "equity" or redemption, an expression borrowed from the English law but which is strictly inapplicable in this country.(1) In England, an English mortgagee became 'at law' the 'absolute owner' of the property conveyed after the time fixed for payment of the mortgage amount. But Courts of Equity regarded the transaction as merely a borrowing transaction and held that 'time was not of the essence of the contract.' The mortgagor was accordingly allowed to redeem even after the expiry of the period for payment. This was known as the 'equity' of redemption as the mortgagor was allowed in 'equity' to redeem, though 'at law' he could not. In Kreglinger v. New Patagonia Meat and Cold Storage Co. Ltd.,(2) Lord Haldane, L.C., stated the history of the equity of redemption as follows

"The reason for which a Court of Equity will set aside the legal title of a mortgagee and compel him to re-convey the land on being paid principal, interest and costs, is a very old one. It appears to owe its origin to the influence of the Church in the Courts of the early Chancellors. As early as the Council of the Lateran in 1178, we find according to Matthew Paris (Historia Major at pages 114-115), that famous assembly of ecclesiastics condemning usurers, and laying down that when a creditor had been paid his debt he should restore his pledge. It was, therefore, not surprising that the Court of Chancery should at an early date, have begun to exercise jurisdiction "in personam" over mortgagees. This jurisdiction was merely a special application of a mere general power to relieve against penalties and to mould them into mere securities. The case of the Common Law mortgage of land was indeed a gross one. The land was conveyed to the creditor upon the condition that if the money which he had advanced to the feoffor was repaid on a date and at a place named, the fee-simple should revert in the latter, but that if the condition was not strictly and literally fulfilled he should lose the land for ever. What made the hardship on the debtor a glaring one was that the debts still remained unpaid and could be recovered from the feoffor, notwithstanding that he had actually forfeited the land to his mortgagee. Equity, therefore, at an early date began to relieve against what was virtually a penalty, by compelling the creditor to use his legal title as a mere security."

The equity of redemption, given by Courts of Equity was, however, regarded as an estate in land which could be devised, granted, etc., and of which there may be seisin (3)

The English doctrine of the equity of redemption was unknown to the ancient law of India. As was observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Pattabhiramier v. Vencatarow Naicken (4)

"What is known in the law of England as 'the equity of redemption' depends on the doctrine established by Courts of Equity that the time stipulated in the mortgage deed is not of the essence of the contract. Such a doctrine was unknown to the ancient law of India."

Accordingly, in a mortgage by conditional sale, and in all other mortgages containing a stipulation that on default of payment within the time fixed, the mortgagee was to become the owner, the rule was that after the time fixed for redemption had passed, the mortgagee became the full owner and the mortgagor lost his property.(5)

This strict rule was to a certain extent modified in Bengal by the Bengal Regulation XVII of 1806 which enacted that the mortgagor could redeem within one year after an application by the mortgagee to the Court under S. 8 of that Regulation for foreclosure. But if the mortgagor did not pay the amount within that time, the right of redemption was gone (6) See also the undermentioned cases under that Regulation. (7)

The present section gives a 'statutory right' to the mortgagor, to redeem his mortgage at any time after the principal money has become due. The mortgagor remains the 'owner' of the property, the mortgagee, whatever may be the nature of the mortgage, being only a transferee of an interest in such property (8) In a mortgage the mortgagee gets an intangible right for the purpose of securing the payment of debt or the performance of an engagement which may give rise to pecuniary liability. Only the owner i.e. the mortgagor can transfer the property itself subject to the interest which he has transferred to others out of totality of his rights which constitute the ownership (9)

In a suit for redemption a condition precedent is that there should be a registered deed evidencing the mortgage of immovable property for a sum of Rs. 100/- or above secured as mortgage money evidencing the mortgage as contemplated by S. 59. The provision in S. 59 is essentially a rule of law and not a rule of evidence (10). Following were the observations by Patna High Court though they were obiter that where the mortgage is for amount which is less than Rs. 500/- the suit for redemption could not be dismissed on ground of want of registration (11).

It has been held by the Kerala High Court in the undermentioned case (12) that as this section does not deal with a mere matter of procedure its provisions cannot affect a case where the mortgage sought to be redeemed came into existence before the Act became law in the State and such a case has to be decided according to the pre-existing law as found in the precedents.

As to the retrospective effect of the amendments to the section, See Note 56

The right of redemption is, however, a 'right' which a mortgagor may seek to enforce, and not a 'liability' which he may be compelled to discharge (13).

Section 60 presupposes three acts by the mortgagee while mortgagor exercises the redemption, namely 1) to hand over the title deeds 2) to deliver possession of property 3) to execute release deed of his right. These three sets amount to extinguishment of rights of mortgagee and completion of redemption (14).

The provisions of the section do not state when a mortgage ceases to be a mortgage but simply declare the right of the mortgagor to redeem. If the mortgagee receives the mortgage money but does not perform any of the three acts required to be done by him under para 1 of this section the non-compliance will not make the mortgage to continue. The mortgagor would then get a new right to have his demands enforced through the Court (15).

Where a Bhumidhar had executed a registered mortgage deed and possession of the property was transferred to the mortgagee for securing payment of loan such transaction would amount to be a usufructuary mortgage of the Bhumidhari land and which would be deemed to be sale under S. 164 of U. P. Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms Act. Provisions of S. 60 of T. P. Act would not be applicable to such mortgage and the mortgagor will have no right to redeem the mortgage and to claim possession from the mortgagee by offering to make payment of loan amount because the mortgagee would be treated(16) as if he was a vendee

When a person is assignee of sub-mortgagee he cannot equate his possession of property as that of mortgagee and claim that he is successor-in-interest of mortgagee. Consequently on that ground he cannot claim tenancy rights under Ss. 2(39A) and 4A(1) of the Kerala Land Reforms Act. The sub-mortgage is a lesser right than that of mortgaged right. Thus the right of the mortgagor to redeem is not fettered.(17)

2. Mortgage of movables — Redemption after default.

A mortgagor of movable property is entitled to sue for redemption (1) In the undermentioned case(2) the question was raised but not decided whether in the case of a mortgage of movables by Hindus and Muhammadans, the right of redemption was lost after default. In Sujir Ragunathaiah v. Saldanha(3) it was held that the principle of S. 60 applies to movables also and that a mortgage of movables could be redeemed even after the expiry of the due date fixed for payment. It has been held that the doctrine of clog also applies to mortgage of movables (4)

As to the distinction between a mortgage of movables and a pledge of movables under S. 172 Contract Act, see S. 58, Note 11.

3. Law where Transfer of Property Act is not in force.

The Act and this section have no application to the Punjab. In cases arising in the provinces where there is no specific provision of law applicable, the decision should be in accordance with justice, equity and good conscience. A direction to so decide is generally interpreted to mean that the rules of English law are to be followed if found applicable to Indian society and circumstances. The terms of S. 60 are an indication that the rules of English Law relating to a mortgagor's right to redeem are applicable to Indian society and circumstances (1) The principles of S. 60 will therefore, apply to cases arising in the Punjab,(2) though as has been seen already in the Notes on enforce the right to make payment of the mortgage money. A claim to redeem mortgage actually does not attach to land. Although the decree passed in such a suit may ultimately affect possession which is also an interest in the property. By executing a mortgage he only transfers some interest to the mortgagee and that also by way of security. The interest is confined to realisation of the mortgage debt which in the event of non-payment may be realised out of the security. What remains with the mortgagor after executing the mortgage is ownership of the property minus the interest transferred and the right to repay mortgage money and right to get the burden of the security discharged. When the mortgagor enforces right to redeem, he does not enforce right in land. Therefore consolidation proceedings do not affect suit for redemption(2). If the mortgagor redeems the land mortgaged with possession and acquires back the interest in the land as well as possession it cannot be said that he does not acquire it by transfer(3). A right to redeem is a right to buy back or set free on payment. It means a right to pay or tender the mortgage-money and if mortgagee is in possession to obtain delivery of possession(4). This does not mean that a payment or tender is a condition precedent to the coming into existence of the right. It merely means that the mortgagor has a right 'to pay or tender' the mortgage-money at a proper time and place, and as a consequence to require the mortgagee to do the various things referred to in the section. A suit to enforce this right (called a 'suit for redemption') may thus be brought without tendering the mortgage-money to the mortgagee(5), though redemption will not be allowed unless the amount declared by the decree to be due to the mortgagee be paid or tendered on or before the date fixed by the Court in the decree(6). As was observed in Raghunandan Rai v. Raghunandan Pande(7) :

"What S. 60 requires is that without payment or tender of the amount due on the mortgage the mortgagor will not be entitled to redeem, and for this purpose it is not necessary that the tender of the mortgage-money should have been made before the institution of the suit."

But the right of redemption connotes the 'right to pay' the mortgage-money and get back the property. Where the mortgagee is entitled to remain in possession till the mortgage-debt is wholly discharged from the rents and profits of the property, the mortgagor will not have the right to 'pay' and clear off the encumbrance. He will have to allow that debt to be wiped out from usufruct of the property alone. The mortgagor's right to get back the property after the debt has been cleared in this matter is not a right of 'redemption'. It is simply a right of recovering possession. Such a right is provided for under clause (a) of S. 62(8). Decisions in which such a right is referred to as one of redemption(9) must, to that extent, be considered as lacking in precision. (See also S. 62, N. 2)

But where the mortgagor has a right to 'pay' the amount due on the mortgage and get back the property free of the encumbrance, his right is one of 'redemption'. In such a case, it is immaterial that at the time when the mortgagor sues to get back the property, nothing is due to the mortgagee, because the mortgage-debt has already been discharged. Even the fact that such discharge has taken place though the mortgagee having been in possession of the mortgaged property and having appropriated the usufruct of the property towards the mortgage debt is not material. The reason is that the actual discharge of the mortgage in this manner does not affect the position that the mortgagor would have been entitled to recover the property by 'payment' if anything had remained due. What must be considered is the mortgagor's right under the mortgage whether he can claim back the property by payment or whether he is bound to wait till the debt gets itself discharged from the usufruct of the property. In the former case, his right is one of redemption though at the date of his suit for redemption nothing may remain due on the mortgage. In the latter case, his right is not one of 'redemption' but simply of recovering possession of the property after the debt is paid off from the usufruct of the property.

Illustration -

A, B and C are co-mortgagors under a mortgage. The mortgagee is in possession of the property. But the case is not one in which the mortgage is to be discharged from the rents and profits of the property alone. The mortgagors can also 'pay' the mortgage-money or whatever remains due out of it and claim back the property. A sues for accounts and redemption of the mortgage under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. It is found that A, being an agriculturist, is entitled to the benefit of its provisions. The amount found due on taking accounts under the special provisions of the Act is found to have been completely paid out of the usufruct of the property and accordingly an unconditional decree is passed in A's favour for his recovery of the property from the mortgagee. A takes possession under the decree. A has "redeemed" the mortgage for the purpose of S. 92 of the Act is entitled to subrogation under that section(10).

What must be noted is that the words of the section "right, on payment or tender of the mortgage-money, to require the mortgagee" do not mean that there 'must' be a payment or tender immediately before the suit for redemption or on its institution or under the decree passed in such a suit. Even where the mortgagor sues on the allegation that the mortgage has already been discharged, the suit may be one for redemption. The test is whether the mortgage is one which the mortgagor had a right to get rid of by means of 'payment' or whether the mortgagor was bound to allow the mortgagee to remain in possession till the debt was completely satisfied from out of the rents and profits of the property. Thus where in a usufructuary mortgage, the mortgagee is to adjust the usufruct towards interest, there can be no redemption until the mortgagor pays the principal(11).

A landlord under S. 9, C. P. Tenancy Act (1 of 1920) has a charge upon the holding for the rent, and his will give him a right to redeem the property under Cl (a) of S. 91 of this Act. But when he brings the holding to sale, in execution of a rent decree, he does not "redeem" the charge but he 'extinguishes' the charge by sale(12).

The redemption of mortgage with possession would involve the retransfer of the same legal right back to the mortgagor and would amount to acquisition by transfer within the meaning of S. 19-A of the Punjab Security of Land Tenures Act(13).

If the mortgage money has been paid but the mortgagee does not perform any of the three acts required of him to be done and the mortgagor goes to the Court to enforce his demands that would not be enforcing his right of redemption which was really his right to make the demands on payment of the mortgage money. The right to demand the mortgagee to do the three acts on payment of the mortgage money is different from enforcing the demands subsequent to the payment of the money(14).

The right of redemption is an incident of a subsisting mortgage and it subsists so long as the mortgage itself subsists(15).

5. Right of redemption, when arises.

Under the Bengal Regulations I of 1798 and XVII of 1806 the mortgagor had a statutory right to redeem at any time before the expiry of the stipulated period and limitation ran from the date of the execution of the deed(1).

Under the general law as it was before the Transfer of Property Act, also, it was held that where a period was fixed for payment, the mortgagor could redeem at any time within that period(2). In the Punjab where the Act does not apply, it was held that where there is a clause 'forbidding' redemption within a certain period and no clause enabling the mortgagee to sue before that period, the two periods are intended to be 'conterminous', and that the mortgagor cannot sue before that period(3).

Under this section, the right to redeem arises when the principal money becomes "due". As it stood before the amendment of 1929 the right arose when the principal money became 'payable'. There was a difference of opinion on the question whether where the mortgage-deed specified a period for payment the right to redeem may be exercised before the expiry of such period. One view was that unless there was a stipulation to the contrary, it could be so exercised, as the time was fixed only for the convenience of the mortgagor(4). Another view was that where the document expressed the time for payment to be "within" a certain period, the right to redeem could be exercised earlier than the expiry of such period(5). It was, however, generally held that where the mortgage

"Ordinarily, and in the absence of a special condition entitling the mortgagor to redeem, during the term for which the mortgage is created, the right of redemption can only arise on the expiration of the period specified. But there is nothing in law to prevent the parties from making a provision that the mortgagor may discharge the debt within the specified period and take back the property"

This view has now been affirmed by the Supreme Court(8). See also the undermentioned cases(9) to the same effect.

A provision in the mortgage deed authorising the mortgagor to redeem the mortgage before the principal money under the mortgage has become due is perfectly valid and the mortgagor is entitled to sue for redemption on the strength of the specific clause in mortgage deed. Section 60 does not inhibit the parties from agreeing for earlier redemption even before the mortgage money has become due(10).

The view that the right of redemption ordinarily arose only on the expiration of the specified period was rested on the ground that 'the right to redeem and the right to foreclose were co-extensive' and arose simultaneously(11) and that consequently, if the mortgagee had no right to sue for the mortgage-money, neither was the mortgagor entitled to sue for redemption(12). This view has now been made clear by the amendment referred to above, so that where a mortgage-deed provides for a period for payment of the mortgage money, the mortgagor's right to redeem will arise only 'after' the expiry of the period and not before, inasmuch as before the expiry of such period the mortgage-money would not be "due", in the sense that the mortgagee could sue to recover it(13). Where under a mortgage which was an usufructuary and a simple mortgage, mortgagee is to enjoy the property in lieu of interest for five years and mortgagor is to repay the amount when he wanted in any year after expiry of five years money cannot be said to be due under personal covenant only

Where after a simple mortgage there was a lease back to the mortgagee the lease period being co-extensive with the mortgage period but the mortgage period was later increased by agreement but not the lease period the mortgagor will be entitled to redemption of mortgage irrespective of the continuance of the lease(15). A suit for redemption of a mortgage before the amount has become due on the mortgage is, therefore, not maintainable even if the mortgagor has tendered the amount due with interest up to the expiry of the specified period(16), and even if the mortgagee (where the mortgage is one with possession), has done something which he was not authorised to do, but which did not destroy or permanently injure the property in any way(17). It has however been held by the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Kutch that the money becomes due, in the case of a usufructuary mortgage, at once or after the expiry of the time limit agreed upon by the parties to enable the mortgagor to redeem although due to the fact that the mortgagee has to remain in possession until redeemed he can have no right to realise the money by sale or otherwise(18).

The fact that the time fixed for redemption is very long, will not enable the right to be exercised before the expiry of such time, unless the provision for such a long time amounts to a clog on redemption or is for some other reason not binding on the mortgagor(19). It has, however, been

The principle that the right to redeem and the right to foreclose are co-extensive was held not applicable to cases falling under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act and the mortgagor was held entitled to redeem notwithstanding a period was fixed before which he bound himself not to redeem, on the ground that such a contract would frustrate the object of the Act(27). Similarly under S 7, U P Debt Redemption Act 13 of 1940 a mortgage debt became due and redeemable from the commencement of that Act notwithstanding a condition in the mortgage restraining redemption for a period or up to a certain date which fell beyond the date of commencement of that Act(28).

A 'default on the part of the mortgagee' to perform his part of the contract may give rise to a right of redemption on the part of the mortgagor before the expiry of the period fixed. This is based on the ground that by reason of such default, the mortgagor is entitled to rescind under Ss 39 and 54 of the Contract Act, the contract on his part to wait till the expiry of the period fixed and is entitled to claim redemption on such default(29). Thus, where the mortgagee undertakes to make certain payments towards dues payable by the mortgagor and defaults in doing so the mortgagor can redeem the mortgage, notwithstanding that the period specified in the mortgage has still to run(30). But it has been held by the Madras High Court that the mere fact that part of the mortgage document but provision therein made allowing mortgagee to plant trees and claim compensation therefor from mortgagor at certain rate. Effect of provision is to confer on mortgagee right to remain in possession for 12 years and mortgagor's right to redeem would arise only after expiry of said 12 years.  1950 Trav-Co LR 137 (138-139) (DB)  (1902) 25 Mad 452 (453) (DB)  (1878-80) 2 Mad 193 (193) (DB)  (1882) 5 Mad 310 (313) (DB) (Clause in a kanom deed that property to be surrendered whenever money is ready refers to a period subsequent to expiration of usual 12 years period,  (1887) 10 Mad 192 (193) (DB)  (1906) 29 Mad 501 (506) (DB) (Deed held ordinary Malabar Kanom redeemable on expiration of usual kanom period of 12 years)  (1907) 30 Mad 300 (302) (DB) money has not been paid by the mortgagee does not render the mortgage invalid nor does it entitle the mortgagor to rescind it at his option. Hence the mortgagor is not entitled to sue for redemption of the property before the time fixed therefor, on the allegation that the amount advanced by the mortgagee was less than the consideration specified by the mortgage deed(31). See also S. 58, Note 18, S. 4, Note 4 and S. 62, Note 5.)

Where under a foreclosure decree obtained by the first mortgagee, the mortgagor loses his right of redemption of first mortgage, the mortgagor's right to redeem could not be revived on the redemption of the first mortgage by second mortgagee(32).

It has been seen in Note 4, that the right of the mortgagor to demand possession from his usufructuary mortgagee after the mortgage has been paid off from the rents and profits of the property according to the terms of the mortgage, is not a right to 'redeem' and does not fall within this Section, but under S. 62, cl. (a) Such a right can be exercised as soon as the mortgage is so paid off, although a term has been fixed in the mortgage document for payment and such term has not expired(33) unless the term fixed forms the essence of the mortgage contract, in which case the mortgage debt will be deemed to be satisfied only on the expiry of the term fixed. (For a fuller discussion, see Note 5 on S. 62.)

6. Right of redemption, how exercised.

As seen in Note 4, the criterion of the right of redemption is the right of the mortgagor to recover back the property by discharging the mortgage-debt by 'payment' instead of being compelled to allow the mortgagee to continue in possession of the mortgaged property till the debt got satisfied out of the rents and profits of the property. As seen in that Note, the test is the 'right' to pay the mortgage-money and not the 'actual' payment or tender and in the peculiar circumstances of a case, a right of 'redemption' may arise although the debt has been satisfied out of the rents and profits of the property and there is no 'need' to make any payment. Where the redemption 'is' sought on the basis of a payment or tender of the mortgage-money, the following are the essential elements

- (1) There must be a 'payment or tender'.
- (2) Such payment or tender must be of the 'mortgage-money'
- (3) Such payment or tender must be made at the 'proper time and place'.
- (4) Such payment or tender must be made to the 'mortgagee'.

7. "Payment".

A "payment" must be made in the current coin of the realm or currency notes unless the mortgagee accepts some other form of payment(1). If the debt is contracted in any particular currency it were left with mortgagees for payment to prior incumbrancers. The mortgagees did not pay up the prior incumbrancers, and the plaintiffs, the vendees from mortgagors, sued for redemption of the mortgage before the expiry of ten years — Held that on equitable grounds the defendants not having performed what was a most reasonable part of the contract, the plaintiffs should be allowed to redeem before the expiry of ten years stipulated for.)  AIR 1925 Mad 825 (827) must be re-paid in that currency or its equivalent(2). Where the contract was that the money which was borrowed in 'sikka' rupees should be repaid in British currency calculated according to the face value of the coin, it was held that the re-payment must be in such currency so calculated, and not the value of the metal in the 'sikka' coins borrowed(3). In the case of redemption of a mortgage, the consideration for which was paddy, it has been held by the Travancore-Cochin High Court, that as the mortgage, which continued to subsist in spite of the decree for redemption was sought to be extinguished only by the tender of the redemption price, that price was to be determined at the market rate of the paddy prevailing on the date of the tender(4). A settlement of accounts between A and B in which the amount received by A on behalf of B is given credit to and a balance is struck, is equivalent to payment of the amount by A to B(5). Where A received from B, as collateral security for a debt, a bill drawn by C upon D but failed to present it at maturity, it was held that A's laches made the bill equivalent to payment as between A and B(6).

The mortgagee may allow the mortgagor to satisfy the mortgage debt in some other way such as transfer of lands instead of by payment of money(7).

Where there was dispute as to correctness of amount, the prayer by mortgagor to permit the amount to be deposited in fixed deposit under protest with liberty to continue their claims regarding the correctness of amount due and to allow the mortgagee to withdraw the amount only after the adjudication of claim by decree, cannot be allowed. Such an offer or a deposit cannot be considered to be an unconditional offer or tender of the amount entitling the mortgagee to receive the same and release the mortgage security(8).

Under the English law, the lapse of 20 years without any demand for the debt due will give rise to a presumption that the debt had been paid(9). There is no such rule in this country, but under S 114 of the Evidence Act, such a presumption may arise.

Where no stipulation or covenant has been made between the contracting parties as to the payment of the sum borrowed, the lender is entitled both under the English as well as the Indian law to decline to receive the sum due to him in instalments : he can claim that the whole sum due be paid at one at the same time(10).

9. The payment or tender must be made at the proper time and place.

As to what is the 'proper time and place' for payment or tender, see Note 5 on Section 84

10. The payment or tender must be of the mortgage-money.

As to what is "mortgage-money", see generally Note 17 on Section 58

The 'interest' on the principal money is part of the mortgage money and is a charge on the estate(1). Both in a suit by mortgagor or mortgagee the Court has to determine the amount of money due by the mortgagor and such a declaration is not possible unless the Court decided the question of interest payable to the mortgagee(2). It will also include the costs incurred by the mortgagee under the provisions of section 72(3).

Parties may, however, by agreement exclude the interest from being a charge on the mortgaged property. Thus, where the mortgagor stated, "I shall pay the interest from my own pocket," it was held that the interest was not a charge on the property(4). Similarly, where the deed provided for redemption on payment of the principal only and the provision for interest was disconnected from the clause regarding redemption, it was held that the mortgagor could redeem on payment of the principal only(5). A mortgage provided that "until delivery of possession" the mortgagor will pay interest. Possession was delivered at once. It was held that the interest referred to was only payable until delivery of possession and the mortgagor was consequently entitled to redeem on payment of

A part-owner of mortgaged property though entitled to redeem his share only on payment of a proportionate part of the debt where the mortgagee had acquired a share of the mortgagor, must, if he deposits or tenders the amount to the mortgagee, deposit or tender the 'whole' amount due. The reason is that the amount of the proportionate reduction in the mortgage-debt is not ascertained at the time, by agreement or by the Court(12). If a co-owner redeems the whole mortgage and takes possession and other co-mortgagor obtains a decree for redemption against him while determining the amount to be paid to the co-owner redeeming the whole property improvements on the property cannot be claimed by the first co-owner(13).

At the time of redemption, when the mortgagor is required to pay the amount due from him under the mortgage, the mortgagee is also bound to give him credit for all payments which he is bound to make under it(14). Where the mortgagee retains part of the mortgage-money to redeem a prior mortgage but does not do so, a suit by the mortgagor will not lie for recovering that sum. Such non-payment will also disentitle the mortgagee from claiming the amount not paid(15). So also where a part of the consideration for a mortgage is the payment of a certain sum to the mortgagor's creditor and the mortgagee pays only a portion of such sum to the creditor and obtains a complete discharge in regard to the debt and the balance is written off by the creditors, the mortgagee is not entitled, in a suit for redemption by the mortgagor, to claim the full amount which was to have been paid to the mortgagor's creditor(16). (See also Notes 6 and 18 on Section 58.) If the mortgagee hands over the sum retained to the mortgagor sum from the purchaser of the equity of redemption(17).

In instant case the mortgagor has executed both simple mortgage and equitable mortgage by deposit of title deeds. As per agreement between the parties all amounts paid by debtor were to be adjusted first against equitable mortgage and then simple mortgage. On debt remaining outstanding, creditor was entitled to recover the amount by auction sale(18).

Thus, where preliminary decree was passed directing the mortgagor to deposit the mortgage money and mortgagor herself admitted that she was liable to pay the value of improvements and she filed application for final decree, it could not be said that the mortgagees would not be entitled to the value of improvements made subsequent to the date on which relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee ceased)

11. Assignment of mortgage — Equity between mortgagor and assignee.

Where the mortgagor, though he did not receive the full amount of the mortgage, granted a receipt for the full amount and left it in the possession of the mortgagee and the latter assigned the mortgage for the full amount to another, it was held that the mortgagor cannot be allowed to redeem merely on payment of the amount actually received by him(1).

Where A and B each owning half share in property is mortgaged by A alone usufructuarly and B thereafter takes an assignment of the mortgage right A could sue for redemption of his share, as the mortgage must be deemed of the half share belonging to A(2).

12. The payment or tender must be made to the mortgagee.

A payment or tender made to the authorised 'agent' of the mortgagee is a payment to the mortgagee. One partner is the agent of the others and a payment to him is a valid discharge of the debt due to the partnership(1).

Where a joint Hindu family is the mortgagee, the 'karta' is the agent of the family and a payment to him is a valid discharge of the mortgage(2). A coparcener to whom the mortgaged property is allotted becomes its absolute owner and is entitled to redeem the mortgage and a transferee from such coparcener is also entitled to redeem(3). Where C executed a mortgage in favour of A and B and, subsequently, B, the junior member, gave notice to C that A had ceased to represent the family, a payment made to A alone is not a valid discharge of the claim of B(4). A payment to a Hindu minor mortgagee may be validly made to his 'de facto' and 'de jure' guardian(5); but no valid payment can be made to a 'de facto' guardian of Muhammadan minor(6).

given by the mortgagee is a payment made to a person authorised to receive it, and is a good payment(7).

The payment made to a widow, who, under the Punjab Customary Law has succeeded only to a life estate, for redemption of the land which was held by her husband as a mortgagor validly discharges the mortgage debt(8).

A mortgagee cannot absolve himself of his liability as a mortgagee to the real owner if he allows himself to be paid off and redeemed by some one who is not entitled to do so(9).

13. "Mortgagee."

The word mortgagee includes, as stated in S 59-A persons deriving title from him(1). The assignee of a mortgagee cannot stand in a different position from that of the mortgagee himself although the mortgagor may not have been a party to the assignment(2). Where the mortgagor pays the money to the mortgagee without notice of the assignment, such payment is binding on the assignee(3). A purchaser of the equity of redemption is a stranger to the contract until the contract is completed and he cannot redeem the property(4). A trespasser by his adverse possession and prescribing against the mortgagee cannot, so far as the mortgagor is concerned, be subrogated to the position of his mortgagee and hence the mortgagor cannot be compelled to claim redemption from the trespasser(5).

14. Payment or tender to one of several co-mortgagees.

There is a difference of opinion on the question whether a payment or tender to one of several co-creditors is a good discharge of the debt.

In the discussion of this question, it must be noticed that the principle applicable is the same whether the debt is a personal debt or is a secured debt(1). The contrary view expressed in the undermentioned cases(2) cannot be accepted as correct

In Barber Maran v. Ramana Goundan(3) it was held by the High Court of Madras that such a payment was a good discharge. It followed the English decision in Wallace v. Kelsall(4), and relied on S. 38 of the Contract Act which provides that a refusal of a valid 'tender' by a promisor under a contract will discharge him from liability for the non-performance of the contract and that a tender to one of several 'joint' promisees has the same effect as one made to all the joint promisees. Wallace v. Kelsall, referred to above, decided that one joint creditor could receive payment and give a good discharge for the debt.

The correctness of the decision in Barber Maran's case(5) was doubted in some later decisions of that Court(6), but was approved in the undermentioned case(7) and also by a Full Bench in Annapurnamma v. Akkayya(8). That was a case relating to a negotiable instrument, but it was held that there was no difference in principle between the two classes of cases. White, C. J., who was a member of the Full Bench, however, differed from the view of the majority and held that one joint creditor had no power to give a valid discharge for the debt. He followed the view expressed in the English case of Steeds v. Steeds(9) that co-creditors must be presumed to have distinct interests in the debt and to be in the position of tenants-in-common with reference to it. In such a view one of them could not give a good discharge for the debt even according to the English law. As regards S. 38 of the Contract Act, he expressed the view that the presumption was not affected by the Section which only dealt with a case of 'tender' and not the 'payment' of the debt. This Full Bench decision has been followed in later decisions of that Court(10), though its correctness has also been questioned in a case of the same Court(11). As regards the other High Courts, they have generally differed from the view that one co-creditor can give a valid discharge for the whole debt(12). Thus, it has been held that one co-mortgagee(13) or a co-creditor under a money bond(14) cannot give a good discharge for the debt. According to those decisions the decision in Wallace v Kelsall(15) has been considerably shaken by the judgment of Farwell, J., in Powell v Brodhurst(16).

The Madras view does not, it is submitted, appear to be correct. The question does not, as stated by White, C. J., in Annapurnamma v Akkayya(17), seem to be capable of determination merely on the interpretation of Ss. 38 and 45 of the Contract Act. It must be decided by reference to general principles of law, and it is a well settled principle that co-creditors of a debt (secured or unsecured) should be presumed to be in the position of tenants-in-common and not joint tenants so that one of them cannot give a valid discharge for the debt. As pointed out by the High Court of Madras in the undermentioned case(18) this is the true position in 'equity'(19).

In the case of co-mortgagees, the above view would seem to be supported by the provisions of Section 45 of this Act, which provides that transferees under a joint transfer for consideration are entitled to distinct interests in the subject-matter of transfer(20). Co-mortgagees would therefore, be entitled to distinct interests in the mortgage, or, in other words, they are in the position of tenants-in-common with regard to the debt and the security.

Though some of the co-mortgagees induced co-mortgagors to make payment to them without obtaining consent of other co-mortgagees they are not estopped from pleading that the redemption was invalid(21).

A payment to one of two joint creditors between whom 'it has been agreed' that the 'other only' shall receive the sum cannot, when made with notice of the agreement, be treated as a good discharge of the debt(22).

15. Payment or tender to one of several co-heirs of a deceased mortgagee.

Co-heirs, except when they are Hindus governed by the Mitakshara law and inherit the property of the male ancestor, are in the position of tenants-in-common with regard to the property inherited by them. As a general rule one of several co-heirs in such cases cannot give a valid discharge of a debt to which they have succeeded(1).

The principle that a payment to one of the heirs of a deceased creditor is not a valid discharge has been applied to the case of Hindu co-parceners, and it has been held that a payment to one of several co-parceners in respect of a debt in favour of the head of the family is not a good discharge(2).

16. Delivery of deeds.

The delivery of the mortgage deed and of all other documents of title by the mortgagee is one of the rights of the mortgagor on redemption. But a mortgagee is not bound to deliver the deeds until actual tender of payment of the mortgage-money(1).

Under the old Section the words used were "the mortgage deed, if any, to the mortgagor" The addition of the words in the present Section "and all documents relating to the mortgaged property which are in the possession or power of the mortgagee" brings the section in line with the provisions of O 34, Rr. 3 to 8 of the Civil Procedure Code which provide for the delivery of such documents on payment by the mortgagor after the passing of the preliminary decree.

In England, a mortgagor or his transferee who is being paid has a right, until the transaction is completed, to prepare 'one' fair copy of the draft deed of re-conveyance or transfer and to charge the mortgagor for it. But on payment, he is bound to hand over that and all other copies of documents relating to the mortgaged property(2).

In Wakefield v Newbon(3) the mortgagee handed over the deeds to his attorney. The mortgagor paid the mortgage-money in full to the attorney but the latter refused to deliver the title deeds until moneys due to him by the mortgagee for expenses were also paid. It was held that he was not entitled to do so. "A mortgagee cannot" said Lord Denman, C. J., "by handing over deeds to his attorney create a new lien against the mortgagor in respect of a debt of his own"(4).

A mortgaged certain property to B who assigned the mortgage to C. Subsequently under an arrangement between A and C, C re-conveyed the property to A and A remortgaged it to C. It was held that C was bound, on redemption by A, to give back the original mortgage deed and the re-conveyance also as title deeds(5).

Where the mortgagee is, by virtue of other transactions, interested in having the title deeds he can ask the mortgagor, as a condition of the delivery thereof, to execute a covenant that he would produce them when necessary(6). Again where a mortgagee was decreed to re-convey an undivided moiety of the mortgaged property to the mortgagor (a part of the debt being satisfied) it was held that the mortgagee was entitled to retain the title deeds of the whole property as his mortgage was not fully redeemed, but that he should execute a covenant to produce the deeds when necessary(7).

Where before redemption the mortgagee has destroyed the mortgage deed or other documents relating to title, the expenses of procuring fresh deeds and copies must be paid by the mortgagee and the amount so required must be set off against the mortgage-money(8). After redemption if the mortgagee is unable to deliver the deeds on the ground that they have been destroyed or lost, the mortgagor is entitled to compensation for such loss or destruction (9). But the mortgagee cannot be compelled to give any security for it in the absence of a special provision in the decree to that effect(10).

The loss of the deeds will not, however, deprive the mortgagee of his right to recover his debt. But where no such loss is established he cannot recover unless he produces the bond(11). In an old case(12), where the mortgagee had fraudulently destroyed the deed in order to deprive the mortgagor of the equity of redemption and it was impossible to determine in the absence of the document what amount was due, it was held that the mortgagor could recover the property without any payment.

Where the mortgagor gave the mortgagee six months' notice of his intention to pay off the mortgage, but did not pay the amount until after the time limited by the notice by reason of the fact that the mortgagee had lost the title deeds and didn't furnish any indemnity in respect of it, it was held that the mortgagee was not entitled to claim interest after the end of the six months, the delay having been due to his default, and that he should give indemnity for the loss of his deeds(13).

It was held by the Madhya Bharat High Court that in the case of mortgage of zamindari property the mortgagor's right, on payment of the mortgage debt, to the return of the deed of mortgage and also the other documents relating to the property was not lost by the fact of the property having vested in the State, free of all encumbrances, under the provisions of the Madhya Bharat Zamindari Abolition Act(14).

17. Delivery of possession.

Where the mortgagee is in possession of the mortgaged property, the mortgagor is, on redemption, entitled to get back the possession of such property(1) in the same state as it was at the time of the mortgage, the principle being that the mortgagee should, on redemption, place the mortgagor, in the same position in which he was immediately before the execution of the mortgage. Thus, where the mortgaged property was a 'kotah' with an exit, the mortgagee cannot block it and deliver possession of the property in that state(2).

However, where a right to sue for redemption is extinguished by lapse of time and the mortgagee is in possession, the mortgagor cannot sue for possession(3).

The obligation to give back possession on redemption ceases, however, if the mortgagee has himself been evicted by title paramount(4). It does not arise at all if the mortgagor had not delivered the property to the mortgagee under the mortgage(5), nor if the mortgagee has not received the whole mortgage-money(6). The mortgagee cannot be heard to say that he does not know what has become of the mortgaged property(7). If the property has been lost through his negligence, he is liable to account for it to the mortgagor(8). Where due to the fault of the mortgagee in possession the land was sold for recovery of land revenue in a suit for redemption though delivery of possession is not possible the mortgagee is held liable to pay damages equal to the value of the property lost(9). It has been held in England that if a mortgagee so deals with the mortgaged property as to render it impossible for him to restore it on full payment, he will be prevented from suing at law to recover his mortgage-money(10).

A tenancy created by a mortgagee would come to an end with the redemption of the mortgage. A tenant induced by a possessory mortgagee cannot continue as such on termination of the mortgagee's interest and is not entitled to protection under the Rent Act(11). Where in respect of urban immovable property the mortgagee is in possession and has granted a lease of the property on a suit for redemption by the mortgagor the lessee is not protected under a Rent Act(12). Where tenant is induced by the mortgagee during mortgage and subsequently mortgage is redeemed, the mortgagor can either repudiate the tenancy and the tenant thereafter becomes a trespasser. However, if he recognises the tenancy, then relationship of landlord and tenant comes into existence between them. Mortgagor becomes landlord of tenant induced by the mortgagee. If the tenant defaults in payment of rent and also denies title of the mortgagor, then he is liable to eviction(13). However, where the property was let by the mortgagee in possession by exercising an express power conferred upon him by the mortgage deed to induct a tenant and to recover rent therefrom, the only possession that could be decreed on redemption would be possession through the tenant(14). So also where the mortgagor redeems prematurely the property a tenant induced by the mortgagee under the terms of the mortgage is not affected, by premature redemption(15). Where the father of the tenant was tenant under the mortgagor of the mortgaged property before the creation of the mortgage and the tenant is father and tenant himself after his father's death executed fresh rent notes in favour of mortgagor and mortgagee from time to time and retained possession till date of filing suit for redemption, he could not be required to vacate property on redemption(16).

A tenant induced into possession of an urban building or premises by a usufructuary mortgagee does not retain his status as a tenant after the redemption of the mortgage and therefore he is not entitled to the protection under Rajasthan Premises (Control of Rent and Eviction) Act as against eviction by the redeeming mortgagor(17). A permissible settlement by a mortgagee in possession with a tenant in the course of prudent management and the springing up of rights in the tenant conferred or created by statute based on the nature of the land and possession for the requisite period is, however, an exception to the above rule(18). It was held by the Judicial Commissioner's

Court at Kutch that the above general rule would not apply where the mortgagee in possession grants a lease not for any specific period or on a permanent basis. If the lease is not terminated as required by S 106 the tenant will not be bound by the decree for redemption and would not be bound to deliver possession to the mortgagor(19).

Where a mortgage is created in favour of a tenant and the two relationships namely, of landlord and tenant and of mortgagor and mortgagee cannot co-exist the first comes to an end and the mortgagee on redemption must restore possession to the mortgagor(20). Where previous mortgagees who were tenants under mortgagor became tenants under subsequent mortgagee on exemption of such mortgage by the mortgagor, their tenancy would come to an end when mortgage in favour of subsequent mortgagee was redeemed and on redemption of the mortgage in their favour, the mortgagor would be entitled to possession of mortgaged property and they cannot deny the relief of possession to the mortgagor on the plea that they were tenants on the property(21). The question whether upon redemption of usufructuary mortgage a tenant-mortgagee is required to give actual possession of the mortgaged property to lessor-mortgagor depends upon the intention of parties at the time of execution of the mortgage deed. There is no automatic merger of the interest of a lessee with that of a mortgagee when the same person is the lessee as well as mortgagee, in the absence of proof of surrender of lease. Unless there is merger of both rights in redemption of the mortgage the plaintiff is not entitled to recover physical possession of the property. The right of lessee to continue in possession would survive after redemption(22). Where there was nothing to warrant inference of relinquishment of rights of tenants by obtaining mortgage deed of same property, the tenants right to possession would not cease on redemption of mortgage(23). Similarly where the property in possession of lessee was mortgaged with him by executing a usufructuary mortgage and there was nothing in the mortgage deed from which it could be inferred that the lessee would remain in possession of property even on redemption of mortgage, the mortgagor could not be denied possession of property on redemption on basis of oral agreement between parties to keep the leasehold rights in abeyance during the subsistence of the usufructuary mortgage as it would be against the recitals of the written mortgage deed(24). But, where the terms of mortgage deed showed that there was implied surrender of leasehold rights between the parties, on the date of mortgage deed, decree passed in suit for redemption holding that the plaintiff was entitled for possession of property, would be legal(25). There cannot be merger of lease and mortgage in respect of the same property since neither of them is a higher or lesser estate than the other. Even if the rights of the lessee and the rights of the mortgagee in respect of a property were to be united in one person the reversion in regard to the lease and equity of redemption in regard to the mortgage would be outstanding in the owner of property(26).

It is the duty of the mortgagee or those who have held as his assignees to 'identify' fully the property mortgaged and if he or they fail to do that, they will come within the principle of Wake v. Conyers(27), namely, that 'The Court in cases relating to the confusion of boundaries proceeds upon the same principle as it does where an agent or bailiff, or any other person, who is under an obligation express or implied to keep his own property separate from the property to another mixes them together. For under such circumstances he will have the onus thrown on him of distinguishing his own property and if he is unable to do so the other person will be entitled to the whole property.' (28)

Section 63 provides that where mortgaged property in possession of the mortgagee has during the continuance of the mortgage received any 'accession,' the mortgagor, upon redemption shall in the absence of a contract to the contrary, be entitled to such accession. The mortgagee will be bound thus to deliver possession not only of the property originally mortgaged but also of the accession. In the undermentioned cases(29), it was held that a mortgagee in possession should hand over to the mortgagor on redemption all the lands of which he has got possession in his capacity as mortgagee even though some of them did not form part of the property originally mortgaged.

Where through mistake the mortgagee is put in possession of more land than that specified in the mortgage deed, the mortgagee is bound to deliver possession of the whole property placed in his possession(30-31). The principle of equity will come to the rescue of mortgagor to redeem the property mortgaged with any excess extent found also at the time of redemption so long as such excess extent was found to be part of the mortgaged property and the position and status of the mortgagee as such mortgagee. The mortgagee in instant case could not prove that the excess extent was attributable to any lease hold of adjacent property and therefore the mortgagor was entitled to redeem the entire mortgaged property including the excess extent(32). However, no redemption can be granted in favour of mortgagors in a suit filed by mortgagee for possession of suit land which possession is wrongfully denied to the mortgagee by the mortgagors in usufructuary mortgage(33).

The mortgagee must restore possession to mortgagor not only lands originally mortgaged but also the land that have come into his possession as mortgagee(34).

Where though in the mortgage deed there was no stipulation to the effect that the mortgagee shall be placed in actual possession over the property but it was provided nonetheless that he shall be entitled to realise the rent from the tenants of the mortgagor and by taking advantage of such term the mortgagee could take possession of the mortgaged property, the mortgagor was entitled to claim possession on payment of sum due. A mortgagee in possession may be either in actual possession of the property or in receipt of rents and profits and thus depriving the mortgagor of control. The position of the mortgagee thus gaining possession over the items of property mortgaged would be akin to that of a trustee(35).

The expression "where the mortgagee is in possession of the mortgaged property" means where the mortgagee is in possession 'by virtue of the contract of mortgage'. Where the mortgagee not being entitled to possession under the mortgage enters into possession wrongfully, he cannot insist that the mortgagor cannot sue for possession without redeeming the mortgage(36). In Hub Ali v Wazirunnissa(37), a mortgagee by conditional sale took possession of the mortgaged property without instituting the necessary proceedings for foreclosure under the Bengal Regulation XVII of 1806, it was held that his entry into possession was wrongful and that the mortgagor could sue for ejectment without suing for redemption.

It has been held that, as the sale of property under a mortgage decree, obtained in a suit to which the person in whom the equity of redemption entirely vested was not a party, conferred no interest on the auction-purchaser, his possession was that of a trespasser and not of the mortgagee and hence the mortgagor was not entitled to ask for delivery of possession by him under this section(38).

(A) Mortgagee's right to crops.

As has been seen in Note 9 on S. 51, a mortgagee in possession cannot be said to believe in good faith that he is 'absolutely' entitled to the mortgaged property. A usufructuary mortgagee, therefore, is not entitled, under the last paragraph of S. 51, to claim the crops growing on the mortgaged land at the time of redemption. But in the undermentioned Burma case(39) the equitable principle underlying S. 108(i), which recognizes the lessee's right to crops in respect of leases of uncertain duration was held applicable in respect of usufructuary mortgages, which are similarly of uncertain duration, and the usufructuary mortgagee was held entitled to all the crops growing on the land at the time of redemption provided that such crops were sown or planted by the mortgagee or his tenant without notice of the intended redemption.

18. Re-transfer of mortgaged property.

In an English mortgage or a mortgage by conditional sale, the mortgagor has a right, on redemption to have the property re-conveyed to him(1). In England, even if the mortgagee cancels the mortgage the legal estate is not re-vested in the mortgagor in the absence of a regular transfer deed, even though the cancellation operates as a release of the mortgage(2). This principle does not apply in this country. The mortgagor is the legal owner of the property whether it is re-conveyed to him or not. The re-conveyance is merely a useful protection for the mortgagor(3). It is held by Full Bench of Delhi High Court.(4) that retransfer is not necessary in every case. In some cases only acknowledgment is sufficient.

As has been seen in the Notes on S 54, the buyer in a contract for sale must tender a conveyance for execution by the seller. On this principle the mortgagor, who is entitled to a re-transfer, and who, therefore, stands in the position of a buyer must tender a proper conveyance to be executed by the mortgagee. Where the conveyance tendered contains 'incorrect' recitals the mortgagee is entitled to refuse to execute the reconveyance so tendered. Where, however, there are no recitals at all and all persons interested in the equity of redemption, concur in the conveyance tendered, the mortgagee cannot refuse to execute(5).

This section deals with the right of the 'mortgagor' to obtain a re-conveyance on redemption. Section 91, however, provides that persons other than the mortgagor, and referred to therein, are entitled to redeem. Where in the case of an England mortgage or a mortgage by conditional sale, a person other than the mortgagor redeems the mortgage, he will also be entitled to claim a re-transfer of the property(6). Where the mortgagor transfers his equity of redemption to another and there is no personal liability to pay, he is no longer a "mortgagor" and cannot claim to redeem the mortgage(7).

In England, a mortgagee, after tender of the mortgage amount is not bound, after he has notice of a puisne mortgage to re-convey the property to a nominee of the mortgagor without the consent of the puisne mortgagee(8).

The ordinary rule in England is that the mortgagor must bear the costs of the re-conveyance(9).

The reason is that the mortgagor asks in 'equity' to be relieved of the legal consequences of his own act (which has made the mortgagee absolute owner at law) and while, on the one hand, the Court of equity preserves the right to redeem, it will, on the other hand, allow redemption on terms which are fair(10). This section also requires that the re-conveyance is to be at the cost of the mortgagor(11).

19. "Mortgaged property."

"Mortgaged property" means such interest in specific immovable property as the mortgagor has offered as security, whatever that interest may be. It would include the mortgagee-right under a mortgage and consequently the "mortgaged property" in the case of a 'sub-mortgage' is the mortgagee-right mortgaged to him(1). The sub-mortgagee can sue to bring to sale the mortgagee right alone(2). It would follow that the mortgagee can sue for redemption of his sub-mortgage(3). A sued B, the mortgagee, and C, the sub-mortgagee, for redemption. B died and his legal representatives were not brought on the record. It was held that there was no privity between the mortgagor A and the sub-mortgagee C and that, therefore, the suit abated on the death of B(4).

20. Right to registered acknowledgment.

Instead of requiring the mortgagee to re-transfer the mortgaged property, the mortgagor may require him to execute an acknowledgment in writing that any right in derogation of his interest transferred to the mortgagee has been extinguished. Such acknowledgment should, if the mortgage is for more than one hundred rupees, be necessarily registered under S. 17 (1)(b) of the Registration Act, 1908 (1). If the mortgage is for 'less' than one hundred rupees, such acknowledgment is not compulsorily registrable under the Registration Act. This section, however provides that 'if the mortgage has been made by a registered instrument,' then the mortgagor is entitled to have a 'registered acknowledgment, irrespective of the consideration for which the mortgage was executed

Consequently, where the mortgage has been registered, the mortgagee cannot refuse to give a registered acknowledgment on the ground that the acknowledgment is not compulsorily registrable under the Registration Act by reason of the mortgage being for less than one hundred rupees. But where there was only the endorsement on the back of the registered mortgage deed to the effect that "received all money of the deed", and there was neither any re-delivery of possession or execution of any registered deed as required by S 60 or S 17 of Registration Act, the mortgage property cannot be held to be redeemed. In such a case, it could not be said that the endorsement itself was sufficient as parties were all related.(2)

21. Proof of redemption.

There is no particular form in which redemption is required to be made. It is not necessary that there should be a registered deed to that effect. It can be evidenced by the fact of the payment of the mortgage money and restoration of possession(1) or other facts and the conduct of the parties. Thus, where the mortgagor sold his property to the mortgagee and the same price equal to the mortgage-money, due on the date, was appropriated by the mortgagee towards the mortgage in his accounts, it was held that the sale deed and the conduct of the parties were sufficient proof of redemption of the mortgage (2). An 'unregistered receipt, however, falling under S 17 (1)(c) of the Registration Act, cannot be used as evidence of redemption of a mortgage. But it can be considered as evidence of the fact that on a particular date, a particular amount has been paid and coupled with other circumstances, such as delivery of possession, it can be good evidence to show that the mortgage has been redeemed in fact.(3)

A usufructuary mortgage by a document can be redeemed only by executing another document and not by setting up a story that it was orally redeemed (4).

22. Extinguishment of right to redeem by act of parties.

The act of the parties sufficient to extinguish the right to redeem must be such as shows a 'release' of the right of redemption by the mortgagor. A mere acquiescence or silence where the mortgagee is claiming as owner(1) or a mere mutation of names in the revenue registers(2) is not sufficient to operate as an extinguishment of the right to redeem. Nor can a presumption as to the extinguishment of the right to redeem be drawn from the mere fact of mortgagor's delay, which falls short of the period of limitation, in enforcing the right.(3) In order to deprive the mortgagor of his right of redemption, it must be categorically and strictly established that either by acts of parties as the decree of competent Court, the right of redemption has been extinguished. Even an incomplete decree or decree not involving decision on merits will not constitute sufficient ground to extinguish the right to redeem.

Mere mention of that settlement had arrived at under the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Act ipso facto is not sufficient to presume extinguishment of the right to redeem when there is no mention as to what kind of settlement was made (4) Mere admission by the mortgagor that there is default in payment on due date does not make the usufructuary mortgagee owner of the property. Title by adverse possession cannot be claimed unless both parties are cognizant of their rights and there can be no acquiescence (5) Possession by a mortgagee whose mortgage has been discharged by the payment of mortgage money, does not by the mere act of extinguishment of the mortgage become adverse to the mortgagor (6) Further, the "act of parties" must mean acts to which both the mortgagor and mortgagee are parties.(7)

By mere re-occupying the suit lands without asserting a hostile title against the mortgagor it could not be said that the right of redemption, which was there with the mortgagor had extinguished. A trespasser would not extinguish the right of the real owner unless he enters upon the immovable property and physically ousts him from occupation as well as from possession and sets up an adverse title in himself.(8)

mortgage where the mortgagee does not accept it (9)

If the mortgagor deposits the price of redemption fixed by the Court the mortgage comes to an end.(10)

Again, the act of parties extinguishing the right to redeem must be one which is independent of the mortgage transaction and not part and parcel of it (11) Otherwise, it will be a clog on redemption and consequently void. Thus, a condition in the mortgage deed itself, on default of payment on a certain date, the mortgagee shall become the absolute owner, will not operate to extinguish the right to redeem on that date.(12)

In the instant case it was found that the sale deed was in reality executed as a supplement to the anomalous mortgage. It was agreed that the loan would carry interest. Possession of suit property was given to mortgagee, thus it was usufructuary mortgage period of 5 years was agreed or payment of balance amount, property would be reconveyed to mortgagor. Thus it was not out and out sale but was usufructuary mortgage. The mortgagee was therefore entitled to redeem mortgage on fulfilment of its terms.(13)

The Act of parties which may result in the extinguishment of the right of redemption under the proviso to Section 60 must be an act or transaction subsequent to the mortgage (14)

Where the property which is subject to usufructuary mortgage is sold by the mortgagor to third person, the mortgagor ceases to have any interest in the mortgaged property on execution of sale deed. The purchaser third party acquires interest in the property including the right to redeem the mortgage. Thus subsequent sale of the property by the mortgagor in favour of the mortgagee would be ineffective and of no consequence. The limitation for redemption of mortgage would be governed by Art. 61 of the Limitation Act and not by Art. 65 (15)

When the mortgage is extinguished by act of parties, the act must take the shape and observe the formalities which the law prescribes. One method is by payment in cash. In that event nothing is necessary beyond the payment. But the agreement is to transfer immovable property exceeding Rs. 100/- in value, the writing and registration are necessary. Mere delivery of possession under an oral agreement is not enough.(16)

A purchase by the mortgagee 'subsequent' to the mortgage of the equity of redemption will extinguish the right to redeem (17) In order that there can be valid extinguishment of right of redemption which creates a corresponding right in the immovable property in the mortgagee there

tioned case(22) Supreme Court held that when the mortgagor/vendor agrees to sell the mortgaged property to the mortgagee/putative vendee in possession, the mortgagee's status is subsumed or merged in his rights as a putative vendee under S 53 A against the transferor provided of course the pre-conditions for the application of S 53 A are fulfilled. In such a situation equity of redemption in mortgagor/vendor is lost. He cannot reclaim possession of mortgaged property. If the agreement is to transfer immovable property is extinguishment of the debt and the property is worth more than hundred rupees an instrument in writing and registered are necessary to pass title. A mere oral agreement and delivery of possession under such agreement will not be sufficient to achieve that purpose (23-24) Where under an agreement of sale between the mortgagor and the mortgagee in possession mutation of the mortgagee's name is effected as owner in part performance of the contract it may have the effect of extinguishment of the right (25) In granting relief under S 53-A the question whether a contract is specifically enforceable or not has no bearing at all. Where the mortgagee is in possession of the mortgaged property in pursuance of the agreement for sale executed by the mortgagor in his favour, and the mortgagee has performed his part of the contract under the said agreement, the right of redemption of mortgage under S 60 would not be available to the mortgagor and that right would be deemed as extinguished (26) Where under an agreement of purchase the mortgagee purchases the property the Deed can be relied upon to prove part performance leading to extinguishment of the right to redeem (27) Where, once a mortgage is admitted, the 'onus' will, however, be on the mortgagee to show that the mortgage has been extinguished by a subsequent sale.(28)

The right to redeem, given to a mortgagor under this section, does not come to an end when the mortgagee having a power of sale under the mortgage deed enters into a contract of sale in the purported exercise of that power, the right to redeem comes to an end only when the conveyance in pursuance of the contract is executed. The mortgagor can therefore redeem the mortgagee at any time before the completion of the sale (30) Mortgagor has right to redeem mortgage before confirmation of auction sale by Court (31) However, where the property was sold and sale deed was executed and registered, pending disposal of suit, the mortgage would be extinguished and suit for redemption could not be decreed.(32)

The right to deposit the amount due to the mortgagee and avert sale of mortgaged property is conferred on the mortgagor-judgment debtor under scheme under O. 34 as substituted in Kerala, only prior to the sale itself and not subsequent to the sale.(33)

A mortgagee may —

- (a) obtain a decree on his mortgage and, at the sale in execution thereof, purchase the property with the leave of the Court;
- (b) obtain a decree on a money claim 'unconnected' with the mortgage, and at the sale in execution of such decree, purchase the mortgaged property with the leave of the Court;
- (c) purchase without the leave of the Court the mortgaged property where it has been brought to sale in execution of a decree for money obtained by a third party against the mortgagor.

Case (a) — It has been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mahabir Prasad v Macnaghten(1) that the position of the mortgagee is the same as that of a stranger purchaser that he gets an irredeemable title and that the equity of redemption is extinguished by the purchase (2)

The right of redemption could subsist in case only where the conveyance was not completed by execution of sale deed and registration of same in pursuance of the auction. Where sale had been completed and the conveyance had been effected the mortgage itself had become extinguished then there remains nothing for plaintiff to redeem.(3)

In such a case the prior mortgagee as an assignee of the equity of redemption has a superior right to redeem the subsequent mortgage and not the mortgagor who has lost his right to redeem (4)

Case (b).— Section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, as it stood prior to 1908, prohibited a sale of the mortgaged property in execution of a money decree obtained by the mortgagee, whether the decree was upon a claim connected or unconnected with the mortgage. This was also the law under the Civil Procedure Code of 1859 (5) The present O 34, R. 14 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, provides that a mortgagee shall not be entitled to bring the mortgaged property to sale in execution of any decree obtained by him for money in satisfaction of a claim 'arising under the mortgage'. It is, therefore, clear that in the class of cases contemplated in case (b) above, the mortgagee will get an irredeemable title and the right to redeem would be extinguished.(6)

Case (c). In this case also the mortgagee will get an irredeemable title to the property (7)

Where the mortgagee purchases the mortgaged property at a Court sale in execution of his 'own decree, but without the leave of the Court,' the sale is not 'void', but is only 'voidable', and may be 'set aside' on an application under O 21, R 72 sub-r (3) of the Code of Civil Procedure. The mortgagee will be regarded only as a trustee for the mortgagor in such cases and the right of redemption will not be extinguished. A sale in contravention of O 34, R 14 of the Civil Procedure Code is also not void but is only a voidable one(8) and the position of the mortgagee purchaser at such a sale until confirmation of the sale is, similarly, that of a trustee for the mortgagor.

A sale may also be set aside if the mortgagee had availed himself of his position as a mortgagee to procure some facility or advantage leading to the purchase or connected with it (9) Thus, if a mortgagee in possession, who is bound to pay the revenue, rent or other public charges, commits default in paying such amount, and at the revenue or rent sale purchases the property himself or in the property (11) it was however held by the Supreme Court in the undermentioned case (12) Where the real effective cause for the rent sale was the default in payment of rent by the mortgagor and not the default of the mortgagee in the payment of a very small portion thereof, that the right of redemption stood extinguished by the sale and hence his suit for redemption against the mortgagee-purchaser was to be dismissed. According to the High Court of Patna, however, a right of redemption once extinguished by the sale, cannot be revived by the subsequent purchase by the mortgagee, unless the rent or revenue sale is 'fraudulent.' (13)

A mortgage of land was created by executing zarpeshgi deed. The mortgagee obtained a decree in mortgage suit fraudulently by suppressing material facts and by playing fraud upon the Court. The mortgagee himself purchased the land in auction sale. Subsequently he sold it to third party. Held that all that the third party had really purchased was the zarpeshgi interest of the mortgagee. In the eye of law it amounted to purchase of equity of redemption. Thus the mortgagor was entitled to seek redemption. (14)

Where however property subject to mortgage is sold at the instance of a third party on account of default both of the mortgagor and the mortgagee, the mortgagee's default being substantial and the mortgagee purchases the property at the Court auction the mortgagor is entitled to redeem the mortgage. The purchase by the mortgagee of a 'part' of the mortgaged property has not, in the absence of fraud, the effect of extinguishing the whole mortgage-debt, even where the value of the property purchased is equal to the amount due on the mortgage decree. The part of the property purchased is only chargeable with a proportionate part of the mortgage-debt and the purchase has the effect of extinguishing that portion only.(16)

A purchaser of a part of the mortgaged property who is not made a party to the suit on the mortgage by the mortgagee retains his right of redemption only with respect to portion of the property purchased by him and not the entire property (17)

In case of successive mortgages a prior mortgagee who purchased the mortgaged property becomes entitled as assignee of the equity of redemption to redeem the subsequent mortgage. If there is a conflict between the right of the prior mortgagee as assignee of the equity of redemption to redeem the puisne mortgage and the right of the puisne mortgagee to redeem the prior mortgage the right of the prior mortgage takes priority. In such a case the transferees of the prior mortgagees were also held entitled to possession of the property (18)

24. Subsequent mortgagee purchasing at sale held by prior mortgagee under his power of sale.

In Shaw v Bunny(1) where a first mortgagee duly exercised his power of sale, a subsequent mortgagee who purchased the property at such sale, in the absence of anything to impeach the 'bona fides' of the transaction, was held to acquire the same irredeemable title as if he were a stranger. "If, indeed, he had availed himself of his position as a mortgagee" said Lord Justice Knight Bruce, "to procure some facility or advantage leading to the purchase or connected with it, that might have made a difference."(2) Where the property was brought to sale under the prior mortgage owing to the failure of the subsequent mortgagee to pay it off as agreed to by him and the subsequent mortgagee bought the property at the sale it was held that the mortgagor's right to redeem the property was not affected.(3)

25. Mortgagee purchasing at sale held by himself under his power of sale.

In the undermentioned case of the Bombay High Court(1) it has been held that a purchase by the mortgagee himself at a sale held by him under a power of sale given to him on his mortgage is a 'nullity.' In an earlier case(2) of the same High Court, however, it was held that if the mortgagor agreed in such a case that he would not dispute the sale, the mortgagee would get an unimpeachable title.

Where power is reserved in the mortgagee to sell the property without intervention of the Court, in selling the property the mortgagee does not act as an agent of the mortgagor and until the sale is complete by registration the mortgagor has a right to redeem.(3)

26. Extinguishment of right to redeem by decree of Court.

The decree of Court referred to is the final decree in a foreclosure suit under O 34, R 3 and the final decree in a redemption suit under O 34, R 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure (1) The corresponding old Ss 87 and 93 of the Transfer of Property Act used the word "Order" and the present section also uses the word "order". In view of the use of the word "decree" instead of "order" in O. 34, Rr 3 and 8, this section has also been amended by substituting the word "decree" for the word "order". A decree for 'possession' in favour of a mortgagee who is entitled to such possession under the terms of his mortgage does not extinguish the mortgagor's right to redeem (2) In a decree for redemption the Court declares the amount due to the defendant at the date of such decree for the principal and interest on the mortgage, the costs of the suit, if any awarded to him and other costs, charges and expenses properly incurred by him up to that date in respect of his mortgage security together with interest thereon and if the plaintiff pays into Court the amount so found or declared within the stipulated period, the defendant is barred to deliver up to the plaintiff etc. all documents in his possession or power relating to the mortgaged property and also retransfer the property to plaintiff at his cost free from mortgage. Only on passing such decree and on the mortgagor depositing in Court the price of redemption as directed by the decree it can be said that the right of redemption got extinguished by decree of Court.(3)

(A) Final decree for redemption or for foreclosure.

Where under a mortgage with possession, the property is leased back to the mortgagor and the mortgagee obtains a preliminary decree on the mortgage but there is no application for final decree the mortgagee only loses his right to recover money by sale of the property but otherwise the security remains intact. The leasing back of the property arises because of the mortgage with possession. If the security is good and considered to be sufficient by the mortgagee he should not be driven to file a suit on his mortgage when he can file a suit for realisation of the monies due under the rent note. Under the provisions of Order 34, Rule 4, Civil PC the mortgagee cannot deprive the mortgagor of his right to redeem excepting by proceeding on his mortgage. So long as the mortgagor has a right to redeem the mortgage he can always pay off the mortgagee and get back possession. This position would continue so long as the property is not sold under a final decree for sale under the provisions of Order 34, Civil PC. The rights of a mortgagee do not merge in his rights a second suit would not be barred and another set holding that it would (13) The conflict has now been set at rest by the said decision in Reghunath Singh's case (14) where a decree for redemption had been passed in the following terms:

"It is ordered and decreed that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for possession by redemption of mortgage in the following terms, namely that he should pay Rs. 4,208-6-0 by the 15th November 1896, that if he will pay the said sum he will get all costs and that in case of default this case will stand dismissed"

No payment was made, but a fresh suit for redemption was instituted. It was held by their Lordships that the decree was not in terms of the old Ss. 92 and 93 of the Act, that the right to redeem was a right conferred on the mortgagor by enactment of which he can be deprived only by means and in manner enacted for that purpose and strictly complied with, that the above decree did not extinguish such right and that a second suit for redemption was maintainable.

It has been held that an order under S. 12 U.P. Agriculturists' Relief Act releases the mortgaged property from the burden of the mortgage inasmuch as it has the effect of both a preliminary and final decree passed in an ordinary redemption suit and therefore there is no right to redeem, after such an order has been passed (15). So also where after the passing of a decree for redemption the mortgaged property vested in the State under the Bihar Land Reforms Act it was held that the mortgagor lost his right to the property and the decree became infructuous as by the vesting of the property in the State it became free of all encumbrances.(16)

The mortgagees were in possession of the mortgaged property for more than fifty years, the decree for redemption of mortgage had become final against them and during the execution proceedings S 4A of the Kerala Land Reforms Act came into force, the decree-holder mortgagor deposited the mortgage amount and value of improvements and the executing Court ordered delivery of property to mortgagor. On such payment thereafter the mortgagees continued to remain in possession only as judgment debtors illegally stricting to the land. The relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee between the parties got shaped. If the mortgage money has been received by the mortgagee and thereafter he refuses to perform the acts which he is bound to do under S 60, the mortgagor can enforce his right to get back the mortgaged documents, the possession of mortgaged property and the reconveyance of that property through Court, thus the mortgagee in the instant case could not invoke S 4A of the Kerala Land Reforms Act for claiming to be deemed tenant (17)

Even though a suit under Sec 12 of the Redemption of Mortgages (Punjab) Act of 1913 is dismissed it does not affect the right of the mortgagor to redeem the mortgage by having resort to a suit in the Civil Court.(18)

Even after the foreclosure if the mortgagee sues on the personal covenant to pay he thereby opens the foreclosure and the mortgagor may thereupon redeem (19)

(B) Final decree for sale.

The old S 89 of the Act providing for an order absolute for sale in a suit for sale on a mortgage provided that on the passing of such order, the defendant's right to redeem and the mortgage security became both extinguished (20) This really was against the principle of law that a decree for sale is only a judgment on the debt and though the debt merges in the judgment, the collateral security does not so merge. As observed by Lord Ellenborough in Drake v. Mitchell (21)

"A judgment recovered in any form of action is still but a security for the original cause of action, until it be made productive in satisfaction to the party, and, therefore, till then, it cannot operate to change any other collateral concurrent remedy which the party may have"

The Courts thus naturally found difficulty in applying the rule in S 89, and several views inconsistent with that section were expressed. Thus, the mortgagor was held entitled, notwithstanding an order absolute for sale, to apply to stop the sale under the provisions of the old Code of Civil Procedure corresponding to O 21, R 69 of the present Code(22) or to apply to set aside the sale under the provisions corresponding to the present O. 21, R. 89 (23) This view was inconsistent with the view that the right of redemption was extinguished by the order absolute for sale. In some cases (24) it was even held that it was the actual sale and distribution of proceeds that extinguished the right to redeem, and not the order absolute for sale.

The words as to the extinguishment of the right to redeem and of the mortgage security have now been omitted in O. 34, R. 5 of the Code corresponding to the old S. 89, and it is now definitely laid down in Mt. Sukhi v. Ghulam Safdar Khan (25) by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the law under the present O. 34, R. 5 is the same as it was before the Transfer of Property Act was passed, namely, that a decree for sale does not extinguish the debt (26) The amendment of O. 34, R. 5 relating to the payment of the mortgage-money at any time before the confirmation of the sale also makes this view perfectly clear. (27)

Where in a redemption suit though the preliminary decree for payment and then a final decree for sale of property was passed, however, the mortgagee did not execute the final decree and continued to remain in possession of property a second suit for redemption of mortgage would be maintainable and it could not be said that there was merger of mortgage debt in the decretal debt (28)

But where in pursuance of the mortgage decree the properties are sold and the sale is 'confirmed', the right to redeem would be extinguished (29) The sale would be binding on the parties to before the sale the amount of the decretal debt and costs and thereupon the execution proceedings will cease — It is not necessary that the person holding the equity of redemption should wait until the property is actually put up for sale)

a fresh suit on the same cause of action is barred. It was held by the Madras High Court that where a suit for redemption is withdrawn without the leave of the Court, a fresh suit for redemption with regard to the same mortgage cannot be brought and that O 23, R 1, Civil P C must be taken to override the provisions of this section in this matter.(37) But a Full Bench decision of the Bombay High Court which ran counter to the reasoning of the above decision, and which was with reference to O 22, R 9, Civil P C, held that the general terms of the Rule cannot override the specific provision of this section and that so long as the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee continues and so long as the mortgage has not been extinguished by the decree of the Court or by the act of the parties the mortgagor is entitled to go to a Court of law to enforce his right (38) The conflict now stands resolved by the decision(39) of their Lordships of the Federal Court who impliedly approved the Bombay High Court's view in the undermentioned cases(40) and reversed the Madras High Court's decision. Their Lordships observed :

"If the right of redemption is not extinguished provisions like O 9 R 9 or O 23 R 1 will not debar the mortgagor from filing a second suit because, as in a partition suit the cause of action in a redemption suit is a recurring one."

28. Clog on redemption — General.

As has been seen in Note 38 on S 58, the mortgagee in England became at law the absolute owner of the estate immediately the mortgagor committed default in payment of the mortgage money on the date specified. The Courts of Equity considered this rule harsh, and this harshness was relieved by declaring it to be against conscience and unreasonable that the mortgagee should retain as owner, what was intended as a mere security and by adjudging that the breach of the condition should not prevent the mortgagor from redeeming his property. So that even though the mortgagor lost the legal right to redeem, he, nevertheless, had an equity to redeem on payment of the mortgage-money.

No sooner, however, was this equitable principle established, than its evasion began to be attempted by introducing in the deed various stipulations against the right of redemption. It was necessary for the Courts of Equity if the right to redeem subsequently to the legal forfeiture was to be maintained, to hold, and they accordingly held that the debtor could not even by the most solemn engagements entered into at the time of the loan preclude himself from the equitable right to redeem. The ground on which this was rested was that the debtor, at the time of the loan being distressed, the mortgagee cannot be allowed to take advantage of his necessities and introduce stipulations hampering redemption. In Toomey v. Conset(1) it was observed as follows:

"The policy of this Court is not more complete in any part of it than in its protection of mortgages and, as a general rule for that purpose, a mortgage once redeemable continues so till some act is done afresh by the mortgagor to extinguish the redemption and a man will not be suffered in conscience to fetter himself with a limitation or restriction of his time of redemption. It would hurt the distressed and unwary and give unconscionable advantage to greedy and designing persons."

In Spurgeon v. Collier(2) the Lord Keeper observed:

"It puts the borrower too much in the power of the lender who being distressed at the time is so inclinable to submit to any terms proposed on the part of the lender."

In Vernon v. Bethell(3) the Lord Chancellor observed:

This Court, as a Court of conscience, is very jealous of persons taking securities for a man and converting such securities into purchases. And therefore I take it to be an established rule that a mortgagee can never provide, at the time of making the loan, for any even or condition on which the equity of redemption shall be discharged and the conveyance absolute. And there is great reason and justice in this rule for necessitous men are not truly speaking free men but to answer a present exigency, will submit to any terms that the crafty may impose upon them (4).

It became, therefore, established as a principle, not to be departed from, that "once a mortgage always a mortgage" in other words, that an estate could not at one time be a mortgage and at another time cease to be so by one and the same deed. As a consequence of this principle it came to be held that a "clog" on the equity of redemption was void and unenforceable. This means that any provision in the mortgage deed which attempts to deprive the mortgagor of his right to redeem absolutely and at any time, after the mortgage-money has become payable, is void.(5)

It will be seen from the above discussion that in order that a particular condition or stipulation may amount to a clog on redemption it is necessary that—

- (1) it must seek to prevent the mortgagor from redeeming absolutely or at any time after the money has become due;
- (2) it must be part of the same transaction as the mortgage deed,
- (3) it must have been entered into by the mortgagee in his character of mortgagee.

This principle of clog on redemption applies in this country also. This section is not prefaced by the words "in the absence of a contract to the contrary" and this indicates that the mortgagor cannot contract himself out of his right of redemption. (6) A contract which amounts to a clog on the equity of redemption may be regarded as opposed to public policy and consequently as void under S 23 of the Contract Act. (7) The principle — once a mortgage always a mortgage — is recognised in several provisions of the Act. It is founded upon an equitable view of the primary object of a contract of mortgage. The object of this section is to legalise the equitable right to redeem and permit redemption even when the right is expressly abandoned or even postponed by the contract of mortgage which is the subject-matter of the suit for redemption. (8) The landlord had by registered deed executed simple mortgage of the rented property in favour of tenant who was already in possession of the property. The terms of the registered deed were sought to be varied by executing unregistered deed. But the same could not be taken into consideration in view of S 92 of the Evidence Act. The landlord was entitled to decree for redemption but was not entitled to recover possession since the mortgagee was already in possession in capacity as tenant. (9) The undermentioned cases to the contrary cannot be regarded as good law. (10)

It has been held in some cases (11) that it is not possible to lay down any hard and fast rule as to what should and what should not be regarded as a clog on redemption, and that each case must be decided on its own facts and circumstances. The observations must be understood as subject to the three requisite stated above.

(The amount advanced under mortgage nature of security offered by mortgagor circumstances in which mortgagor was compelled to secure the amount, terms and conditions on which amount was in fact advanced and other alternatives to which mortgagor could have taken recourse for obtaining sum ad

In determining whether a particular clause in a mortgage deed is a clog on redemption, the Court has to look, not to events as they have or have not happened, but only to the possible or probable effect of such clauses on the right of redemption (12)

Long period for redemption together with factors such as financial condition of mortgagor, the clause obliging the payment of interest even in case of usufructuary mortgage not periodically but at a time of ultimate redemption imposing burden on mortgagor to redeem, clauses permitting construction of building and debiting the mortgagor with an obligation to pay for the same, would amount to clog on equity. (13)

The circumstances in which the mortgagor was compelled to secure the amount, terms and conditions on which the amount was in fact advanced and other alternative to which the mortgagor could have taken recourse for obtaining the sum advanced are relevant factors for determining whether particular term of redemption amounts to a clog on equity of redemption (14)

(A) Right to redeem absolutely.

A right to redeem absolutely may be said to be clogged by any stipulation 'which prevents the mortgagor from getting back the mortgaged property as free and unfettered as if there was no mortgage. This test was stated by Lord Macnaghten in Noakes and Co v Rice (15) in the following words :

"When the money secured by a mortgage of land is paid off the land itself, and the owner of the land in the use and enjoyment of it must be as free and unfettered to all intents and purposes as if the land had never been made the subject of the security."

This test was applied by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mehrban Khan v. Makhna (16) In that case a mortgage provided that the mortgagee was to be in possession for 19 years. If at the end of the period the mortgagor paid off the mortgage money the property was to belong as to a limited interest therein only to the mortgagor, and as to the other interest to the mortgagees. It was held that this provision constituted a clog on redemption and was as such void. It follows that a provision in the mortgage deed or in a document forming part of the same transaction that the mortgagee should, even after redemption, continue in possession as a tenant or in some other capacity will be a clog on redemption (17) Stipulation in mortgage deed that mortgagee would con-

vanced, would have to be considered before it is held that a particular term amounts to a clog because it is unreasonably long :  AIR 1914 All 334 (336) 36 All 551 (DB)  AIR 1929 Oudh 30 (31) 4 Luck 147 (DB)  AIR 1914 Oudh 379 (381) 17 Oudh Cas 313  AIR 1925 All 643 (644) (DB)  AIR 1931 All 380 (384) 53 All 580 (DB)

It is, however, only the subject-matter of the security that the mortgagor is entitled to get back on redemption free from all obligations relating to the property and arising under the contract of mortgage. Where the property mortgaged is already subject to any obligation, the mortgagor cannot on redemption get back the property free from such obligation and such obligation cannot be considered as clogging redemption. Thus, in De Bears Consolidated Mines v British South Africa Co. Ltd.(22) A advanced to B, a Chartered Company, a certain sum of money to be repaid as provided. It was also provided that B should grant to A an exclusive right to work for a certain number of years diamodifersous mines in B's territory, and that A should be entitled to take as security, certain debentures contemplated to be issued by B. Subsequently, A took the debentures but they were paid off before the expiry of the period fixed for woking the mines. B in an action claimed that the payment of the debentures put an end to the contract for exclusive rights which was a clog on redemption. It was held that what was mortgaged was only the assets subject to the already existing contract for grant of exclusive rights, that the redemption of the mortgage could only release the property charged, i.e. the property subject to the contract and that the contract did

(B) Right to redeem at any time after the due date for payment.

Any condition or stipulation which prevents the mortgagor from redeeming at any time after the date fixed for payment of the mortgage-money will be a clog on redemption (23). Thus, where a mortgage document provided a period of five years for redemption and further stated that if the mortgagor did not redeem by that time, the mortgagee was entitled to take the possession of the mortgaged property for twelve years during which period the mortgagor was not entitled to redeem, it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the stipulation postponing redemption was a clog on redemption and was void (24). The contrary view expressed in the cases noted below (25) cannot be considered to be good law. Where in a usufructuary mortgage it was provided that the mortgagor was entitled to redeem after sixty years on one particular day only, it was held by the Allahabad High Court that the stipulation limited the right of redemption in a most unreasonable manner and was therefore a clog on redemption (26).

A usufructuary mortgage redeemable within period of 8 years was created. The mortgage deed further stipulated that if the mortgage money is not repaid on expiry of the stipulated period the mortgage deed will be treated as 'absolute sale deed'. The obvious purpose of the said stipulation was to take away the right of redemption. Such stipulation is statutorily forbidden by S. 60. Thus on failure of the mortgagor, to repay the loan, the mortgagee did not acquire any absolute title over the mortgaged property. His right remained to be only that of mortgagee(27).

The provision that if the mortgagor failed to tender the mortgage money within 4 months of the expiry of the term of mortgage (which was 5 years) the property would be deemed to be owned by the mortgagee with the mortgage amount originally advanced being treated as the purchase price, is a term which by itself is a clog on redemption and hence is not liable to be given effect to(28).

A transaction of mortgage cannot be made irredeemable altogether nor made illusory because redemption of mortgage is inherent in every transaction of mortgage and is the very essence of a mortgage unless enforcement of such right has become time-barred. Merely because the mortgage is not redeemed within the stipulated period of 7 years and the mortgagee continues in possession, it could not be said that the property could not be redeemed. The right of redemption cannot be controlled by agreement. Thus the mortgagee in possession would not become tenant under S. 4(c) of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act(29).

Where the mortgagor lets the mortgaged property to the mortgagee who is to hold it until the mortgage-money is paid, the covenant is not a clog as there is nothing to prevent redemption at any time(30). So also if mortgagor allows normal period of limitation to expire, he can only file suit on basis of deferred date of redemption but will be precluded from saying that deferred date of redemption amounts to clog on redemption(31).

(C) Stipulation must be part of the same transaction as the mortgage.

The doctrine of clog on the equity of redemption applies only to stipulations entered into as part of the same transaction as the mortgage, affecting the right of redemption(32)

"There is no doubt" said Vice-Chancellor Kindersely, in Gossip v. Wright(33), "that the broad rule is this. The Court will not allow the right of redemption in any way to be hampered or crippled in that which the parties intended to be a security, either by any contemporaneous instrument with the deed in question or by anything which this Court would regard as a simultaneous arrangement or part of the same transaction". In Fairclough v. Swan Brewery Co.(34). Lord Macnaghten said after referring to the decision in Gossip v. Wright(35) "It is now firmly established by the House of Lords that the old rule still prevails and that equity will not permit any device or contrivance being part of the mortgage transaction or contemporaneous with it to prevent or impede redemption" (36). It follows that the equitable doctrine of clogging the equity of redemption is not applicable to subsequent and independent contracts qualifying the right to redeem (37). Thus, a subsequent contract for sale of the equity of redemption to the mortgagee and for delivery of possession to him of the property is not invalid as a clog on the equity of redemption (38). In Shankar Din v Gokul Prasad (39) their Lordships of the Privy Council said "there is nothing in law to prevent the parties to a mortgage from coming to any arrangement afterwards qualifying the right to redeem". In the undermentioned case (40), however, where a subsequent agreement provided that if the amount subsequently lent was not paid within a particular time the stipulations in the former deed were not to be in force, it was held that the Court will not allow an additional advantage to be obtained through the necessity of the debtor and that the principle "once a mortgage always a mortgage" would apply. It is submitted that this view is not correct.

quent contract not to redeem a mortgage without paying unsecured debt due to the mortgagee though not coming within the doctrine of clog on redemption, was yet not enforceable as being inconsistent with recognised principles of English law which are applicable to India as rules of justice, equity and good conscience and that the principle of English law was that a mortgagor cannot be compelled as a condition of redemption to pay sums which are not secured upon the mortgaged property notwithstanding a covenant to pay them as a condition of redemption. According to the undermentioned case(42) of the Chief Court of Oudh, such a subsequent contract is unenforceable as a clog on redemption and according to other cases(43) of the same Court it would be enforceable against the mortgagor personally but not against his transferees. The Madhya Bharat High Court has also taken a similar view and held that while the stipulation in the subsequent contract would be void as a clog on redemption the debt or obligation created by the contract would not be a clog(44). It is submitted that the view that such agreements are clog on redemption is not correct.

(D) The stipulation must have been entered into by the mortgagee in his character as such.

The doctrine of stipulations clogging redemption entirely depends upon such stipulations being made by the mortgagee in his relation as mortgagee. It has nothing to do with stipulations made by him in a different capacity as that of a vendee. Where A purchased property from B for $51,000, $5000 of which was to be paid in cash and the balance secured by a mortgage by A and B and the agreement of sale stated that A should give B a certain option, failing to do which, he will pay B $5000 in addition to the balance of the purchase-money secured by the mortgage, it was held that this was not a clog on redemption(45).

(E) Effect of clogging stipulations.

The mere fact that a stipulation or covenant is a clog on redemption does not invalidate the mortgage as a whole(46) but only renders the stipulation ineffective. The Courts have power and they will relieve the mortgagor from such stipulations whether by them he forfeits wholly his right to redeem or they have merely the effect of restricting such right(47).

29. Clog — Anomalous mortgage.

Section 98 provides that the rights and liabilities of the parties to an anomalous mortgage are to be determined by their contract as evidenced by the mortgage deed and, so far as such contract does not extend, by local usage. It has been held by the Privy Council in Mahomed Sher Khan v Raja Seth Swami Dayal(1) that even in cases of anomalous mortgages the rights and liabilities depend on the terms of the contract as controlled by the Transfer of Property Act. The terms of the contract cannot offend the terms of S. 60 and clog redemption. The provisions of one section cannot be used to defeat those of another unless it is impossible to effect a reconciliation between them. See also the undermentioned cases to a similar effect(2).

The contrary view that the principle of clog on redemption does not apply to anomalous mortgages, expressed in some cases(3), is no longer good law. In the cases noted below(4) it was held that a provision for renewal of kanom being permissible under the customary law of Malabar is not a clog on redemption.

30. Stipulation giving mortgagee option to purchase the property.

A stipulation in the mortgage deed for an option to the mortgagee to purchase the mortgaged property will be one for a collateral advantage which clogs the right of redemption and is therefore void(1). The reason is that if the stipulation is valid, the mortgagor cannot, on payment of the mortgage-money, get back the property free of all obligations under the contract of mortgage. (See Note 28). The case is stronger still where the mortgagor stipulates that he will not sell to any one except the mortgagee. The mortgagee, in fact, is, in such a case, given an absolute right to prevent a sale to any other person(2).

the view that such a stipulation was void, rested on a well recognised rule, independent of the principle of clog on redemption, that a mortgagee is not allowed at the time of the loan to enter into a contract for the purchase of the mortgaged property. Lord Londley in the same case, rested his view on such stipulation being a clog on redemption.

A stipulation for pre-emption by the mortgagee may or may not be a clog on redemption. If the stipulation is for pre-emption at any time before redemption it is not ordinarily a clog on redemption(4). But if the right is exercisable even after the mortgage is redeemed(5) or is exercisable at a fixed price(6) or at a concession price(7) it may be a clog on redemption. See also the under-mentioned case(8).

31. Stipulation against redemption by persons other than the mortgagor.

A condition in the mortgage deed that the mortgage is redeemable only during the life of the mortgagor is void. The mortgage is nevertheless redeemable by his heirs(1). So also, where a mortgage is made redeemable by the mortgagor and the heirs male of his body, it is redeemable by the assignee of the mortgagor(2).

32. Provision for a long period for redemption, if a clog.

A provision in the mortgage deed fixing a period for redemption and providing that the mortgage shall not be redeemable before that date is not a clog on redemption, if the period fixed is a reasonable one(1). In Bradley v. Carrutt(2) Lord Macnaghten said "everybody knows that when money was placed out on mortgage as an investment nothing was more common than to make the mortgage irredeemable for a certain limited time. It was an old and well established practice, and a very reasonable practice too". In Morgan v. Jeffreys(3) it was held that a postponement of redemption for a short period may not be unreasonable if the mortgagee also during that period is bound not to call for his debt during that period, but that a proviso restraining redemption for 28 years was unreasonable and void, at least, where there was no corresponding restriction preventing the mortgagee from calling in his money during that period. In Davies v. Symons(4), a covenant that the mortgagor will not redeem for 20 years was held to be a clog on redemption.

Mortgagor executed a mortgage deed of land. The amount of mortgage was virtually the market price of the land. The mortgage was redeemable after 90 years. Held, that there was no clog on redemption of mortgage(9).

Where as per the agreement between the mortgagee and mortgagor the last date of redemption was 15th August, 1986 but besides that it was left to mortgagor even to redeem the property before expiry of said date, held that as there was no question of postponing date of redemption for any indefinite or long period and as the property could be redeemed even before last date of repayment, it cannot be said that there was any clog on equity of redemption(10).

The clause in mortgage that the mortgagees would become owners of the mortgaged property if mortgage was not redeemed at the end of 20 years is void being opposed to the provisions of A P Prevention of Agricultural Lands Alienation Act and operates as clog on redemption(11).

Right of redemption is a statutory right. Provision in deed hampering or preventing redemption would be void. It is a question of fact whether a term is oppressive and places a clog on right of redemption. Where a substantial extent of land is mortgaged for a paltry sum and redemption is stipulated after 99 years, such term places clog on redemption and has to be avoided(12).

A right of redemption does not remain independent of the property itself. A sale of property that too to a stranger who had nothing to do with the mortgage and who was not a party to the same would convey a complete title to that property to him and once the title to that property goes, the equity of redemption shall also accompany the property. The stranger would then be in a position to substitute himself in the place of plaintiff mortgagor and to step in his shoes(13).

33. Stipulation for collateral advantage.

Originally, in England, every stipulation in the mortgage deed for a collateral advantage to the mortgagee was held void, whether the equity of redemption was thereby clogged or not(1). "A man shall not have interest for his money on a mortgage" said the Master of Rolls in Jennings v Ward(2), "and a collateral advantage besides for the loan of it". This was rested on two grounds: firstly, that to allow such an advantage to be gained was contrary to the policy on which the Statutes of Usury were founded, and, therefore, was contrary to public policy(3); secondly, that the mortgagor being under the control of the mortgagee is not in a position to contract with the mortgagee on principal at the time of redemption and not within the term if he chose, is a clog on the equity of redemption.  AIR 1922 Oudh 283 (285) (DB). equal terms, and that a Court of Equity will regard a contract for a collateral advantage as an oppressive one not to be enforced⁽⁴⁾ The Usury Laws were repealed in the year 1854, and the first ground of the view was no longer available. The second ground, however, was held applicable notwithstanding the repeal of the Usury laws and stipulations for collateral advantage were held to be not valid⁽⁵⁾, though in some cases⁽⁶⁾ it was held that where the stipulation was, as a matter of fact, not oppressive, it was enforceable. In Biggs v. Hoddinot⁽⁷⁾ the previous cases were reviewed and it was held that a stipulation for a collateral advantage was not invalid unless it could be said that it operated as clog on redemption, or was unconscionable and oppressive in which latter case the contract would not, like any other oppressive contract, be enforced. The facts of that case were that a mortgage of a licensed house by a publican to a brewer provided that the loan should continue for a period of five years and contained a covenant that the mortgagor should not, during the continuance of the security, sell, on the premises, beer other than that supplied by the mortgagee. It was held that the covenant for the collateral advantage neither clogged redemption nor was oppressive and was therefore valid. The principles stated in Biggs v. Hoddinot⁽⁸⁾ were approved by the House of Lords in Noakes & Co v Rice⁽⁹⁾. In that case a covenant in a mortgage of a leasehold public house provided that the mortgagor will not, during the continuance of the term, whether or not any principal or interest was still owing on the security, sell on the mortgaged premises any malt liquors except such as shall have been purchased from the mortgagees. It was held that this was a clog on redemption insofar as it purported to "tie" the public house after payment of principal moneys and interest due on the security. Lord Macnaghten observed as follows:

"It seems to me to be contrary to principle that a mortgagee should stipulate with his mortgagor that, after full payment of principal, interest and costs, he should continue to receive, for a definite or an indefinite period, a share of the rents and profits of the mortgaged property as the result of an obligation arising from the contract made when the mortgage was created."

In Bardley v Carritt⁽¹⁰⁾ a stipulation in a mortgage of shares for a collateral advantage to the effect that the mortgagor undertook to use his best endeavours to secure that the mortgagee should "always thereafter" be employed as broker for the company was invalid as constituting a clog on redemption. In Morgan v. Jaffreys⁽¹¹⁾ a mortgage of licensed premises provided a term of 32 years, during which the mortgagor was bound to deal exclusively with the mortgagee in liquors at current market rates. The mortgagee could, however, call for the money earlier but continue the "tie" for 31 years. It was held that the stipulation was a clog on redemption and therefore void.

Where the deed of partnership between mortgagor and mortgagee was the part of the same mortgage transaction and the mortgagee did not contribute any capital but was entitled to run the business in any manner he wanted to do to the exclusion of mortgagor and it was provided that there would be first change in respect of advances made by mortgagee, such deed of partnership must be held to have been created to promote and protect interest of mortgagees alone and it would put clog on equity of redemption(12).

The law on the validity of stipulations for collateral advantages in mortgage deeds must now be taken to have been finally settled by the decision of the House of Lords in Kreglinger v New Patagonia Meat and Cold Storage Co (13), which must be regarded as the leading case on the point. In that case A advanced money to B upon security of a floating charge over all his property present and future and agreed not to demand repayment for a period of five years, but B was to be at liberty to repay the debt at an earlier period on giving notice. The agreement also contained a provision that B should not sell any sheepskins to any purchasers other than the lenders for a period of five years from the date of the agreement so long as the lenders are willing to purchase the same at an agreed price. The loan was paid off before the expiration of the five years. It was held by the House of Lords that the option of purchasing the sheepskins was not terminated but continued for the period of five years. Lord Haldane, L.C., said :

"A collateral advantage may be stipulated for by the mortgagee provided that he has not acted unfairly or oppressively, and provided that the bargain does not conflict with the third form of the principle—this is, that a mortgage (subject to the apparent exceptions in the case of a family arrangement to which I have already referred) cannot be made irredeemable, and that any stipulation which restricts or clogs the equity of redemption is void. It is obvious that the reason for the doctrine in this form is the same as that which gave rise to other forms. It is simply an assertion in a different way of the principle that once a mortgage always a mortgage, and nothing else."

The result is that the mortgagor can, even at the time of the loan, agree to give some collateral advantage to the mortgagee provided—

- (a) it is not unfair, or
- (b) it does not clog the equity of redemption or is not otherwise inconsistent with the right to redeem.

Kreglinger's cases(14), was followed in Re Cuban Land and Development Co. Ltd (15) and it was held that a collateral bargain with debenture stock-holders of a company to pay them one third of the surplus assets in the event of winding up of the company and which did not in any way prevent the redemption of the debentures on payment of the amount due was not invalid.

The principles stated above have been applied in this country also. In Venkataraman Gattu v Subadravamma(16) where a mortgage with possession was made by A in favour of B, and it was provided that Rs. 4,000 per year were to be allowed to the mortgagee for certain charges that would be incurred by the mortgagee for the usual annual repairs, etc., to the mortgaged property, it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that this was not an agreement for a collateral advantage that can be objected to. Where the mortgagor of a mill agreed to pay the mortgagee remuneration as manager of the mill, it was held not to be bad(17). Where A borrowed money from B for building a factory and mortgaged the factory and stipulated that he would pay two and a half per cent. commission in perpetuity on the income of the factory, it was held that it was bad(18). In the undermentioned case(19), A mortgaged to B for Rs. 1200 his karchha built tiled shop situated in a

It was held that in the circumstances of the case, the stipulation was not unconscionable or oppressive and did not amount to a clog. See also the undermentioned cases(20).

34. Clog — Penalty in case of default.

A high rate of interest(1) or a provision for compound interest on default(2) is not a clog on redemption. But if such a provision amounts to a penalty within the meaning of S. 74 of the Conmortgagee shall not stipulate for any collateral advantage for himself, nothing can be said against it, and he can enforce it, always assuming that the bargain is not unconscionable or oppressive. Nor is there any such principle, namely, that where a collateral advantage is stipulated for by the mortgagee as a condition of the loan, that advantage or contract is to be presumed to have been or made under pressure. There is no such presumption, but each case must be decided according to its own circumstances. Observations of Sir Francis Jeune in Stanley v. Wilde, (1899) 2 Ch 474, Approved.)

tract Act the Court will relieve against the penalty(3) Excessive interest not amounting to a penalty may also be relieved against under the provisions of the Usurious Loans Act, 1918(4) But apart from these provisions, there is nothing to authorise the Court to interfere with the sanctity of contracts(5) In Aziz Khan v Duni Chand(6) where the mortgagor undertook to pay interest at 25 per cent per annum, and also to pay compound interest at that rate in case of default in payment, it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that in the absence of evidence that the contract was entered into under pressure or undue influence, no relief could be given on grounds of mere hardship(7).

A stipulation that the mortgage shall be redeemable only on payment, at a future time or on the happening of a given event, of a larger sum than that advanced, even though interest is made payable in the meanwhile is not a clog(8) Thus, in the undermentioned cases(9) it was held that a stipulation for payment of deorha (one and half times the principal amount advanced) at redemption was not a clog on redemption Where it was stipulated that on default of payment on a particular day the mortgage could only be redeemed by payment of one mura of rice for each rupee of the mortgage money, and the price of rice rose in the market, it was held that the stipulation was a penal one and should not be enforced(10)

35. Clog — Stipulation that mortgage will not be redeemed before paying other amounts due.

A stipulation to combine two or more mortgages is valid, and is not a clog on redemption This is recognised by S. 61 See Note 5 on that section

Where the subsequent mortgage is not only for the second advance but incorporates the prior mortgage, then the former is really a mortgage for both the amounts and the stipulation to pay them both together is merely a stipulation to pay the mortgage money secured and is not a clog on redemption(1).

Where the mortgagor sells a portion of the mortgaged property after the first mortgage and then executes a second mortgage, stipulating that he will not redeem the first without redeeming the second, the stipulation is not binding on the purchaser(2).

A stipulation in a mortgage that the mortgagor will not redeem it without paying an earlier personal debt was held not to be a clog on redemption in cases before the Act(3). In cases coming under the Act such a stipulation in the mortgage will clearly be a clog on redemption(4). A mere stipulation, however, that the mortgagor will, at the time of redemption, pay other sums also is not a clog on redemption, if the redemption itself is not fettered thereby(5).

36. Hard terms — Not a clog.

The mere fact that the terms of the mortgage are hard is not a clog on redemption(1).

37. Clog — Miscellaneous.

Where a mortgage deed provides that the mortgagor should pay the mortgage money within the stipulated time out of his own pocket without selling or charging the mortgaged property, such a provision would be a clog on the equity of redemption(1).

Their Lordships of the Privy Council said :

"It is very doubtful indeed, if it would not be illegal as amounting to an encroachment on a mortgagor's right to redeem the mortgage property from whatever source he might procure the funds to do so."(2)

A stipulation that the mortgagor shall redeem without recourse to a loan from anybody(3) or that he will not alienate his property without the consent of the mortgagee(4) is similarly a clog on redemption. But a stipulation that the mortgagor might redeem before the due date if he could do so without alienating other property of his was held good as being a special concession personal to the mortgagor and not available to his assignee(5).

39. Clogging provisions, when should be impeached.

It has been held in a Nagpur case(1) that relief against a clogging provision is an equitable relief which is not granted as a matter of course but granted only if impeached within a reasonable time. Where the mortgage was executed in 1880 and the suit was brought in 1920, it was held that relief against a stipulation amounting to a clog on redemption should not be given. The same view was taken by the Ajmer Judicial Commissioner's Court also in the undermentioned case(2). A contrary view is taken by the Rajasthan High Court(3). It is submitted that the first view is not correct. In this country the right of redemption is not an equitable right as it is in England, but a statutory right which cannot be qualified by any contract to the contrary.

40. Provision for reasonable notice before redemption.

In England, the mortgagor must, after default, give six months' notice to the mortgagee of his intention to redeem, or six months' interest in lieu of notice(1). The reason is that at law the mortgagor has, after default, lost his estate and can be let in to redeem only in equity, and a Court of Equity will not assist him unless he does equity and it is equitable that he shall give six months' notice to enable the mortgagee to provide another place for the money(2). The rule of six months' notice does not apply, however, where the mortgagee takes possession of the mortgaged property. Such conduct is equivalent to demanding the mortgage amount and the mortgage can be redeemed immediately if possession is so taken(3). On the same principle, where the mortgagee sues for the recovery of his money, he cannot claim six months' notice or interest in lieu thereof. He can claim interest only up to the date of payment(4). The reason of the rule of six months' notice does not apply to equitable mortgages and consequently the rule itself does not apply to such mortgages(5).

In this country, there is no such rule requiring any notice to be given before redemption(6). But, under the present section a provision for reasonable notice before payment or tender of the mortgage-money may validly be made by the parties(7). It cannot, therefore, be considered a clog on redemption. Where a deed provided for notice by the mortgagee as well as by the mortgagor and the mortgagee gave notice for payment, it was held that a little delay by mutual agreement on the part of the mortgagor to pay the amount did not necessitate a notice by the mortgagor or payment of interest in lieu of notice(8). Where a deed provided that if the mortgagee wanted payment he must give notice before the beginning of the cultivation season of the particular year, it was held that this provision did not disable the mortgagor from redeeming the mortgage at any time(9).

There has been a difference of opinion as to whether a provision for redemption only in a particular month or season of any year is valid. In the undermentioned cases(10) it has been held that such a provision is not a clog on redemption and is valid. A contrary view was expressed in the cases noted below(11). In Suppan Chettiar v Rangan Chetty(12) where the mortgage deed provided for a right of redemption only on one particular day of the year, it was held that this was a clog on redemption. The fourth paragraph of this section furnishes a test for determining whether such provisions are valid or not. If the provision is one which can be regarded as providing for reasonable notice, having regard to the nature of the property mortgaged and to the other circumstances, it will be valid(13). If, however, the provision is not a reasonable one, but is intended in substance to fetter the right of redemption, it will not be valid.

41. Redemption piecemeal of mortgaged property — Last paragraph of the section.

In Mirza Yadalli Beg v. Tukaram(9). A mortgaged several fields to X and subsequently sold one of them to B, X filed a suit on his mortgage for foreclosure without impleading B, obtained a decree, and, in execution thereof, went into possession of nine fields. B then sued for redemption of the entire mortgage. Their Lordships of the Privy Council observed

According to English law the respondents (B) would have been entitled to redeem the mortgagee in its entirety, subject only to the safeguarding of the equal title to redeem of any other person who had a right of redemption, a point which has not arisen so far in the present case. The respondents being transferees of part of the security, by English law, if it applied, would on the one hand, be entitled to redeem the entire mortgage on the properties generally and, correlatively could not compel the mortgagee to allow them to redeem their part by itself. This would be so as the result of principle unless something had happened which extinguished the mortgage in whole or in part such as an exercise of a power of sale originally conferred on the mortgagee by his security or such conduct on the part of the transferees as would estop them from asserting what normally would have been their right."

Their Lordships further observed that the concluding part of S. 60 did no more than declare applicable what was just the law as established in England

There are, however, three ways in which the integrity of a mortgage can be broken up(10)—

(1) by operation of law.

(2) by act of parties at the time of the contract of mortgage, and

(3) by act of parties subsequent to the contract of mortgage

The first case arises under the last paragraph of this section where the mortgagee acquires or all the mortgagees acquire the share of a mortgagor. See also the undermentioned case(11) for another instance of the integrity of a mortgage being broken by operation of law under the provisions of the Evacuee Interest (Separation) Act, 1951.

Where a mortgagee in possession acquires a portion of equity of redemption, the mortgage is not extinguished completely but only to extent of his acquiring mortgagor's interest. This is also clear from the last para of S. 60. Mortgage subsists as far as other co-sharers are concerned. Thus mortgagee would be entitled to benefit of S. 5 of the Kerala Land Reforms Act(12)

Where the mortgagee brings a suit for sale in respect of only a portion of the mortgaged property and in execution of the decree in the suit purchases such portion, it has been held that this section does not apply to the case but that as the mortgagee himself splits up the mortgage, the integrity of the mortgage is broken and the remaining portion of the mortgaged property can be redeemed on payment of a proportionate part of the mortgage-money(13)

The last paragraph of this section comes into play only where there are more mortgagors than one interested in mortgage security and the mortgagee acquires the share of one of them. If there is only one mortgagor and the mortgagee acquires a part of the security, then the last paragraph will not come into play at all. In such a case, the mortgagee would still be entitled to enforce his mortgage against the remaining properties for the whole of the remaining amount due on his mortgage(14).

There is, however, nothing to prevent the parties interested in agreeing to a piecemeal redemption(15). Where there are more than one mortgagors all of them should be parties to such an agreement(16). This agreement may be incorporated specifically in the mortgage deed itself or may be by subsequent arrangement. (See S. 67(d).)

In Nathumal v. Raman Mal(17) a provision in a mortgage deed of several houses, namely, "if I sell any house I will pay the entire sale-proceeds thereof to the mortgagee and will not take credit for interest on the amount paid", was construed as meaning that the mortgagor was to have the power to redeem part without redeeming the whole of the mortgaged property. In Jawahar Singh v. Baldeo Singh(18), where J being interested in a four annas share of the mortgaged property sued for redemption of that share only, and stated in the plaint that if the mortgagee objected to the redemption of a share, he was willing to redeem the whole, but the mortgagee did not accept the latter offer, it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the mortgagee not having accepted the offer of J for redemption of the whole mortgage, J was entitled to redeem the four annas share only. A, the father and B, C and D the members of a family, mortgaged certain property to X. A sued for redemption and the suit was dismissed. Then B, C and D sued for redemption of the whole property. It was held that the dismissal of the suit by A operated to exclude A's share from the mortgage and, therefore, B, C and D could redeem only their shares(19). A, B, C and D, mortgagors sued separately to redeem their shares and decrees were passed in the suits of A and B for such redemption, without objection by the mortgagee. But on appeal in the other two suits of C and D the mortgagee claimed that their suits for partial redemption ought not to be allowed. It was held that the passing of the decree in the suits of A and B had the effect of breaking up the integrity of the mortgage(20). See also the undermentioned cases(21).

While it is true that under the last para of S. 60 the co-mortgagor cannot redeem the entire hypotheca and has to redeem only the mortgagor's share, that principle does not apply if the purchase of a share by the mortgagee is after the filing of the suit for redemption by the co-mortgagor. In that case the co-mortgagor can sue for redemption and possession of the entire hypotheca and the mortgagee cannot cling on to possession of the property by purchasing after suit a share of hypotheca, however small, from the non-redeeming co-mortgagors(23).

Where a co-mortgagor had discharged the entire mortgage debt which was joint and several liability of himself and his co-mortgagor he would be in equity entitled to be subrogated to the rights of mortgagee redeemed and to treat the non-redeeming co-mortgagor as his mortgagor to the extent of the latter's portion or share in the hypotheca and to hold that portion or share as security for the excess payment made by him(24).

Where one of the co-mortgagors redeemed usufructuary mortgage, he would be entitled to possession and the only right of the co-mortgagors would be to contribute their shares of the amount spent by the redeeming co-mortgagor in redeeming the mortgage and seeks a partition and separate possession of their shares in the property(25).

If a suit by one of the co-mortgagors without impleading the other mortgagor for redemption is decreed and there is a failure to deposit the amount within the time specified in the decree, a final decree for foreclosure in such a suit does not debar the other heir from redeeming the property. But in such a case in absence of evidence to the contrary he is entitled to redeem to the extent of his share only(26).

Where a decree was passed in a suit for redemption that the plaintiffs who were legal representatives of original mortgagors were entitled to redeem as the original mortgage to the extent of 70 cents of land covered under the mortgage deed and Purakkadam deed on payment of mortgage amount, the question of breaking of unity of mortgage would not arise when the entire 70 cents of suit property was covered under mortgage deed and Purakkadam deed which were held to be invalid and not binding on plaintiffs(27).

42. Mortgagee allowing redemption of a share, if splits up security as to the rest.

Before the amendment of the section by the introduction of the word "only" there was a difference of opinion on the question whether the fact that the mortgagee allows one of several shares in the mortgaged property to redeem his share on payment of a proportionate part of the mortgage-debt, splits up the mortgage so as to entitle the other sharers also to redeem their shares only on payment of their proportionate part of the debt, one view being that the mortgage was so split up(1), the other being that the mortgage remained indivisible except as to the portion in respect of which the mortgagee allowed redemption, and that, therefore, another sharer was not entitled to redeem his share only(2). The introduction of the word only in the section now overrules the former view and gives effect to the latter(3).

A obtained a preliminary decree for sale on his mortgage against B, C and D. B and C applied to the Debt Relief Court and obtained relief, not with respect to the entire mortgage-debt, but with respect to what was considered a proportionate liability of B and C under the mortgage. This settlement was accepted by the mortgagee A. A claimed to recover the entire mortgage amount from D. It was contended on A's behalf that he was entitled to proceed against D, who was not party to the settlement between A on the one side and B and C on the other, with his remedy under the decree and that the contingency contemplated by the proviso to S. 60, not having arisen, the mere fact that there was a settlement by the Debt Relief Court with respect to part of the debt should not stand in his way of obtaining a decree for the entire amount due under the mortgage against the other party viz., D. It was held that no doubt, the principle laid down in S. 60 was not applicable to the facts of the present case. But where the mortgagee accepts a settlement with some of the persons interested in the mortgaged property and agrees to recover from them a proportionate part of the debt payable by them out of the property owned by them and has submitted to the scheme of payment enforced on him by operation of the provisions of the Relief of Indebtedness Act it would be most inequitable to allow him to recover the entire debt again from the other co-mortgagors. The Courts are therefore at liberty in view of the special circumstances to treat the settlement as between the mortgagee on the one side and the co-mortgagors on the other as an adjustment of a part of the claim which reduces the liability of the other co-mortgagors under the mortgage(4).

43. Mortgagee releasing part of mortgaged property from mortgage, if splits up security.

A mortgagee is entitled to release from his mortgage security any part of the mortgaged property and enforce the whole mortgage against the other properties(1). Before the amendment of 1929 there was a difference of opinion as to the effect of such a release. One view was that the security was split up thereby and another person interested in part of the property was held entitled to redeem his share(2). The mortgagee himself was held bound to abate the debt in proportion to the property released(3). Another view was that such a release was equivalent to a purchase by the

It has been held in the case noted below(9) that such a release by the mortgagee may be inferred very appropriately in a case where he purchases the property for an entirely independent consideration but not where what is purchased is the equity of redemption.

If a part of the mortgaged property is released by the mortgagee under a registered document to enable the mortgagor to repay a debt due to the mortgagee if the release is not conditional it becomes operative to the full extent even though the promised amount of debt is not paid(10).

44. Mortgagee acquiring share in property.

It has been seen already that a purchase by the mortgagee of the whole of the equity of redemption will extinguish the right of redemption and the mortgage security. The result, however, of the acquisition by the mortgagee of a part of the mortgaged property is not to extinguish the mortgage in its entirety, but only pro tanto in respect of that part(1). Under S. 82 the mortgaged properties are bound to contribute rateably to the mortgage-debt so that when the mortgagee himself acquires a part of the property he is bound to pay himself a quota of the mortgage debt and the mortgage-debt rateably due to him in respect of that part is thus discharged(2). Except where the mortgagee or a co-mortgagee has acquired in whole or in part the share of a mortgagor a co-mortgagor will not be entitled to redeem only his own share(6).

Where the petitioner acquired 1/3rd share in the mortgaged property and the opposite party mortgagee acquired 1/6th share in it, the petitioner is entitled to redeem his share(7).

The effect of purchase by mortgagee from some only of the mortgagors entitles the other mortgagors to redeem their share(8).

But there is a conflict of opinion on the question whether in such a case it is open to a sharer in the residue left after the mortgagee's purchase of a share in the mortgaged property to redeem the whole of that residue without the consent of the mortgagee. One view is that he is not entitled to redeem more than his share(9). This is based on the decision of the Privy Council in Nawab Ajmud

Ali Khan v. Jowahur Singh (10), where the mortgagee having purchased one of several shares in the mortgaged property, one of the persons interested in another share claimed to redeem not only his share, but also the other shares not purchased by the mortgagee. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that this could not be allowed. They observed as follows:

"The appellant (mortgagee) now complains that the plaintiffs have been allowed to redeem as against him the villages other than their own village of Hosseinpore, i.e. to put themselves in his shoes as mortgagee in respect of these villages. The Courts below, however, seem to their Lordships to have mistaken the effect of the former decision of the Sudder Court. It merely ruled that the plaintiffs were bound to offer to redeem the villages in question, it did not rule that they were entitled to do so, or to acquire the interest of the mortgagee in them against his Will. They (i.e., their Lordships) think that the appellant (mortgagee), if desirous of retaining possession of these villages as mortgagee, is entitled to do so against the plaintiffs, whose right in that case is limited to the redemption and recovery of their village of Hosseinpore upon payment of so much of the sum deposited in Court as represents the portion of the mortgage-debt chargeable on that village."

A contrary view has been expressed in the undermentioned cases (11), namely, that a sharer in the mortgaged-property is entitled to redeem all the shares other than those purchased by the mortgagee including the shares belonging to the other sharers. For this view the cases noted below(12) have relied on the decision of the Privy Council in Mirza Yadalli Beg v Tukaram(13). According to the Orissa case(14) the earlier decision of the Privy Council in Nawab Ajmat Ali Khan's case denying the ordinary right to redeem the whole mortgage to one of the several mortgagors on the mortgagee purchasing a share in the mortgaged property, must be treated as overruled by the later pronouncement of the Privy Council. It is submitted that the second view is not correct. The opinion that the Aziz Azimat Ali's case must be treated as overruled by the later Mirza Yadalli Beg's case is open to serious doubt(15).

Where one of mortgagees acquires by purchase a part of mortgaged property, it cannot be said that the mortgage over that portion has merged in the sale. The purchaser-mortgagee is in no different position from an outsider so far as his rights conferred by his purchase are concerned. The mortgage remains one and undivided and if redeemed at all, can only be redeemed in its entirety. The purchaser-mortgagee cannot insist that the mortgagor should redeem only that part of the property which has not been purchased(16).

A purchase by the mortgagee of a part of the property in execution of a decree obtained by him on a prior mortgage of the said part only, will not, however, entitle the mortgagor to redeem the other part by payment of a proportionate amount(17). Thus, where X is mortgaged to A first and then X and Y are mortgaged to him under another mortgage, and in execution of a decree on the first mortgage A purchases X, the mortgagor cannot redeem Y from the second mortgage by merely paying the proportionate part of the debt. He must pay the entirety of the mortgage debt(18). The reason is that the second mortgage is only subject to the first mortgage. By the sale in execution of the decree obtained on the latter mortgage, the property sold disappears from the second mortgage and the entirety of the debt attaches to the property Y.

"Under the first head of objection it was strongly argued that the apportionment should have been made according to the actual and ascertained values of the several mouzas and not according to the amount of revenue assessed on and payable in respect of, each mouzas to Government.

The words "proportionate part of the amount remaining due on the mortgage" mean 'proportionate to the value of the properties mortgaged'. In Nawab Ajmat Ali Khan v Jowahir Singh(19) a mortgagee had become owner by purchase of a share of the equity of redemption. The owner of another share was held entitled to redeem on payment of a sum equal to the share of the mortgage amount proportioned according to the value of the properties comprised in the mortgage and in the share. Their Lordships of the Privy Council observed

"The proportion of the debt chargeable on each village ought to vary according to the actual value of the village, and the amount of Government revenue assessed on a village may not always be a correct criterion of its actual value and Y as sale in favour of mortgagee was subsequent to sale in favour of A and could not deprive him of his right to redeem both the properties.)]

On the other hand, there might be a difficulty in applying the principle contended for by the appellant to cases in which the amount payable by a mortgagor seeking to redeem, is not ascertained, as in this country, by inquiry and account, but must be calculated and tendered or brought into Court by him before the commencement of the suit."

That was a case before the Transfer of Property Act. The last difficulty pointed out by their Lordships no longer exists in view of the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code providing for such inquiry and account. In Bishesur Dial v. Ram Sarup(20) a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court followed the case of Nawab Ajmat Ali Khan v. Jowahir Singh(21) and it was held that "when the mortgagee buys at auction the equity of redemption in a part of the mortgaged property, such purchase has, in the absence of fraud, the effect of discharging and extinguishing that portion of the mortgage debt which was chargeable on the property purchased by him, that is to say, a portion of the debt which bears the same ratio to the whole amount of the debt that the value of the property purchased bears to the value of the whole of the property comprised in the mortgage". mortgagee's rights are determined including his right to retain possession of the purchased property, if the mortgage is a necessary one; the mortgagee can, however, sue afresh in respect of his purchase. But there is nothing to prevent the Court for the sake of convenience, to decide in the same suit how much mortgage-money is to be chargeable on the property purchased by the mortgagee and to allow redemption of the rest on payment of the proportionate amount(29)

It has been held in the undermentioned case(30) that where a subsequent mortgagee acquires a share in the equity of redemption, the last paragraph of S. 60 applies, so as to enable him to redeem his share only from the first mortgage on payment of a proportionate part of the amount due on that mortgage. It is submitted that this view is not correct. The word "mortgagee" clearly refers to the mortgagee under the mortgage sought to be redeemed and not any other mortgage that might have been subsequently made by the mortgagor.

The principle of the mortgage security being split up by the mortgagee acquiring a portion of the mortgaged property cannot apply to a maintenance charge decree under which the claim is a recurring one. The principle can only apply with reference to a charge which has ripened into a present claim at the time of the acquisition of the share(31).

Two items of property, A and B, are first mortgaged to X, and then A alone is mortgaged to Y. X then buys both A and B. In such a case, it will be seen, the mortgagee acquires the whole of the equity of redemption and not only a share in it. But at the same time, under S. 101, X is entitled to keep alive the mortgage on A as against Y, the subsequent mortgagee. This means that X's mortgage is extinguished as regards item B but is kept alive as regards item A. In other words, the mortgage is split up, and Y can redeem A by paying a proportionate part of the mortgage-money. This is the principle underling the decision cited below(32).

45. Undivided property — Mortgagee purchasing share — Redemption.

Where undivided property belonging to several co-sharers has been mortgaged and the mortgagee purchases the undivided share of one of them, can the other co-sharers redeem their shares without suing for partition?

According to the Bombay High Court they are entitled to redeem and can only be allowed to redeem the whole leaving the mortgagee to bring a suit for partition like any other co-sharer.(1) High Court of Rajasthan also held the same view (2) According to two early cases of the Madras High Court(3) they are not entitled to redeem the mortgage wholly or partly until they have first ascertained their shares in a suit for partition. In later cases,(4) however, it has been held by the same High Court that a co-sharer can be allowed, in the same suit, to get a decree for partial redemption and partition.

The Calcutta High Court also has taken a view similar to the one expressed in the above mentioned later cases of the Madras High Court (5)

Where joint family property has been mortgaged and it is subsequently allotted to one member he or his transferee has a right to redeem the mortgage as partition need not be by registered instrument.(6)

If the mortgagee acquires the share in the equity of redemption the integrity of the mortgage is broken and the other mortgagor who owns only a share is entitled to redeem his share (7)

46. One co-mortgagor acquiring mortgagee right — Redemption by other.

Where one of several co-mortgagors acquires the mortgagee rights in the property, the question has arisen as to whether this section applies so as to allow the other co-mortgagors to redeem their shares alone. According to the undermentioned cases(1) such acquisition splits up the mortgage and the principle of this section applies so as to allow of piecemeal redemption by the other co-mortgagors. But according to the Calcutta High Court,(2) the rule that the integrity of the mortgage is broken when the mortgagee purchases a part of the equity of redemption does not apply to the converse case of a co-mortgagor purchasing the mortgagee right, so as to enable the other co-mortgagors to redeem piecemeal. In the case noted below(3) it was held that once one of the mortgagors redeems the whole mortgage, the mortgage comes to an end and the redeeming mortgagor is not a "mortgagee," that S 60 does not apply to the case and that, consequently, there is nothing to prevent the other co-mortgagors from getting back their shares on payment of the proportionate part of the mortgage-money.

Where one co-mortgagor gets the right to contribution against the other co-mortgagor by paying off the entire mortgage debt, a correlated right also accrues to the latter to redeem his share of the property and get its possession on payment of his share of the liability to the former. This corresponding right of the 'non-redeeming' co-mortgagor, to pay his share of the liability and get possession of his property from the redeeming co-mortgagor, subsists as long as the latter's right to contribution subsists. This right of the 'non-redeeming' co-mortgagor is purely an equitable right, which exists irrespective of whether the right of contribution which the redeeming co-mortgagor has as against the other co-mortgagor, amounts to a mortgage or not (4)

Where the Kamawan executed possessory mortgage of the property belonging to tarwad and one of the co-mortgagors redeemed the mortgage and subrogated himself into shoes of the mortgagee, the other co-owners are entitled to pay to the extent of their respective shares of mortgage amount and seek possession from co-mortgagor within 12 years from the date of redemption of mortgage by the co-owner.(5)

47. One mortgagor — Two or more mortgagees — Redemption by paying one alone.

Where A executes a mortgage in favour of B and C as tenants in-common no redemption could be effected by A of part of the property by paying to one of the mortgagees his separate debt. It may be different where the document really consists of two different mortgages combined in one deed in which case there may be separate redemption (1)

The mortgagor has no right, whatsoever, to pay the amount with one of the mortgagees ignoring another co-mortgagee. The receipt passed by one mortgagee will not amount to valid discharge and the mortgagor has no right to divide the amount and pay the same. Another mortgagee to whom no payment was made is entitled to recover the mortgage amount (2)

48. Suit for redemption.

The mortgagor, as against a person who is in possession as a mortgagee, has a right to redeem unless there is a contract between the parties or a merger or a special statute or an order of the Court which debars the exercise of the right.(1)

The suit for redemption by an agriculturist is not barred on ground that an application only has to be made before the Tahsildar. Though summary remedy is provided under the T.N. Debt Relief Act (1982) that does not prohibit the debtor from invoking jurisdiction of civil Court, the remedy under the T.N. Act is only additional remedy (2-3)

A benamidar can sue for redemption whether the beneficial owner is a party to the suit or not (4)

A mortgagor seeking redemption may alternatively claim that the mortgage has been paid off but that if anything is found due he is willing to pay it (5) Where the mortgagee of leasehold property escapes the payment of rent which he has to pay under the mortgage, it has been held that the mortgagee and not the mortgagor is entitled to the benefit of such non-payment and the mortgagor cannot claim at the time of redemption to deduct such sum from the mortgage money. (6)

Where in a suit for redemption, it is found that the mortgage is not valid, it has been held in the undermentioned cases (7) that the suit must be dismissed. Even if parties agreed to the factum of mortgage if the document is not registered a suit for redemption will not be tenable (8) According to this view, it will be open to the plaintiff to sue for possession on title (where possession has passed to the mortgagee) and then it will be open to the mortgagee to plead that he must in equity be repaid the amount advanced by him (9) The Calcutta High Court (10) and following that view the Madhya Bharat(11) Assam(12) and Pepsu High Courts(13) have held that if in such a case, the mortgagor proves his title he may be given a decree for possession. Same is the view of the Madras High Court(14) and the Burma High Court(15) also. The Allahabad and the Patna High Courts have held that the mortgagor under a void mortgage, who is entitled to recover possession on payment of the money received from the mortgagee should not be refused relief merely because he has filed a suit for redemption instead of a suit for possession.(16) The High Courts of Patna and Rajasthan have held that although a mortgage is not valid because of its non-compliance with the provisions of S. 59 a decree for redemption should be passed when the defendants are persons who having been inducted on the property as mortgagees had acquired by prescription the character of mortgagees of that property.(17) (See also S. 59 Note 3) In the unmentioned cases,(18) mortgagees in possession leased the mortgaged property. The mortgagor filed a suit for redemption against the mortgagee joining the lessees also as defendants. The lessees objected that as the mortgage had already been satisfied, the suit for redemption was not maintainable. It was held that lessees were entitled to raise such objection inasmuch as the mortgagees, from whom they derived their title, were competent to raise it. It was further held that the suit for redemption could not be treated as a suit for possession only.

Where suit for redemption of mortgage was dismissed only due to failure of mortgagors to pay mortgage amount within time prescribed by preliminary decree and such order of dismissal was not passed on any application by the mortgagees and it was passed without hearing mortgagors as to why the amount was not deposited within time, the order would be bad in law (19)

It is the essence of foreclosure and redemption suits that each party is entitled in such suits to enforce his rights against the others. If, on accounting, the balance is against any party, he must pay it.(20)

Mortgagor making payment of decretal amount in pursuance of compromise decree can seek direction from execution Court for return of possession in separate suit for recovery of possession is not necessary.(21)

21. (1978) 19 Guj LR 420 (443) (DB).

A suit for redemption cannot be met by a plea of a right of pre-emption under an agreement which under S 54 creates no interest in immovable property especially when a suit to enforce the right of pre-emption is barred by limitation (22) Nor can a mortgagee successfully plead in defence to the suit for redemption his right to sue for specific performance of a mere contemporaneous agreement for sale to him of the mortgaged property (23) A sub-mortgagee who has no privity of contract with the mortgagor, cannot resist the mortgagor's suit for a redemption on the ground that it is one for partial redemption, where no such objection has been raised by the mortgagees (24)

The property which was subject matter of the mortgage was sold for arrears of rent in execution of a rent decree and the mortgagor had not proved any default of rent on the part of mortgagee and also not pressed the application for setting aside the auction sale when the auction purchaser a relative of mortgagee had compromised with mortgagor to return the money in respect of mortgage executed in favour of mortgagee and therefore the property was transferred to auction purchaser. Held, the suit for redemption could not succeed (25)

In suit for redemption it is not incumbent that the question of paramount title raised by some other defendant must be decided under all circumstances (26) However it is held by the Kerala High Court in the undermentioned case (27) that the general principle that question relating to paramount title should as far as possible be excluded from the trial of a mortgage suit is not an absolute or inflexible rule to be applied without regard to the circumstances

Dismissal of a prior suit of redemption on merit on the ground that the mortgagor failed to prove the mortgage would operate as a bar to a subsequent suit for redemption (28)

Though suit for redemption is decreed a subsequent suit within limitation is not barred unless the right is lost in the meanwhile. Any number of suits for redemption of the same mortgage within period of limitation may be tenable unless the right has been lost by act of parties (29)

Successive suits for redemption of mortgage can be filed till right of redemption is not extinguished. Dismissal of earlier suit for redemption whether as abated or as withdrawn or in default would not debar mortgagor from asking a subsequent suit, so long as mortgage subsists and right of redemption is not extinguished. If the right to redeem is not extinguished under the old decree, that decree will not operate as res judicata against subsequent suit (30)

Where the earlier suit for redemption was dismissed on ground relating to which its jurisdiction stood ousted by a statute, the decision in earlier suit being void would not operate as res judicata to a subsequent suit for redemption of mortgage. In instant case the jurisdiction of civil Court to decide the question whether a transaction is "Ottium Kuzhikanavum" is ousted by the Kerala Land Reforms Act (1964) Therefore subsequent suit would not be barred by res judicata (31)

A decree for redemption in a redemption suit, unless it could be said to involve a decision that the mortgagor's right to redeem was extinguished, cannot operate as res judicata so as to prevent

Where during the pendency of a suit for redemption one of the defendants died and an application for the addition of his legal representatives was made after the period of limitation it was held that so long as the right to redeem was not extinguished it was in the interest of the parties to allow the suit to proceed with the representatives added as parties rather than drive the plaintiff to institute a fresh suit against the surviving defendants and the legal representatives of the deceased defendant. (38)

In a suit for redemption the mortgagor and the mortgagee are the only necessary parties and no third party can be added. But in a case where the mortgagor is dead and some of his heirs file a suit for redemption the heir who has not been joined as plaintiff can file a petition to be added as a necessary party and can be joined as defendant. (39)

In a suit for redemption the subject matter in dispute is not the property which has been given as security for the loan but it is the loan itself for which the security was given that constitutes the subject-matter. (40)

A suit for redemption is neither a suit in respect of rights or interest in land nor is it a suit for a proceeding for declaration or adjudication of any other right in regard to which proceedings can be taken under the Bihar Consolidation of Holdings Act. (41)

The principles of estoppel which are applicable to the case of a landlord and tenant equally apply to the case of a mortgagor and mortgagee in possession. Hence a mortgagee cannot resist a claim for redemption on the ground that the mortgagor has no title to the mortgaged property. (42)

Where a person claiming under a paramount title on the basis of decree against the mortgagor got only paper delivery the mortgagee who continued to be in possession cannot be said to have been dispossessed so as to entitle him to deny the mortgagor's right to redeem. (43)

The question whether a suit for redemption is at all competent may be raised for the first time in second appeal, if all the facts on which the question hinges are set out in the plaint and no new facts have to be found. (44)

Where each of the several mortgagors is entitled to redeem in his own right the entire mortgage, if two of such mortgagors obtain decrees for redemption in separate suits the later decree in no sense supersedes the earlier since the later decree in no way effects the title to redeem found in the former decree. Section 60 gives the right to a mortgagor to file a suit for redemption only against the mortgagee. Therefore where the defendant was neither a mortgagee nor derived any title to the suit from the mortgagees who were legally in possession a suit for redemption is incompetent against such defendant.(46)

Where mortgagee is allowed to pay himself the mortgage money from rents and profits of the property mortgagor has to file a suit for recovery of possession. But where the right to recover possession is on payment or tender of mortgage money or the balance thereof, under clause (b) of Section 62 it is in substance a suit for redemption(47).

Under the terms of a mortgage the mortgagee was put in possession with a stipulation that he was to pay certain amount by way of Michavaram and appropriate the balance towards interest and Michavaram remained unpaid the Michavaram amounts in his hands represented surplus profits realised from the property which were liable to be applied in redemption of the principal amount(48).

If the mortgagee continues in possession after payment of the mortgage money by 1921 and the suit is brought in 1966 it is merely a suit for possession simpliciter and not for redemption and will be in time as the mortgagee claimed to be in possession as a mortgagee and not adversely to the mortgagor as an owner(49).

A person claiming adversely both to the mortgagor and the mortgagee may be joined in a mortgage suit(50).

A mortgagor deposited the amount due under Sec. 83 and obtained delivery of the property and documents which reliefs he could have obtained in a suit for redemption. Thereafter if the mortgagor sues for rendition of accounts against the mortgagee it would be in enforcement of incidental rights which could have been granted in the suit for redemption the suit will be tenable because it is not a suit for redemption(51).

When there is no evidence to prove payment of mortgage money and no entry of such payment even in account books of mortgagor, title of mortgagor is also not proved — Suit for redemption dismissed(52).

Neither on authority nor in principle can it be said that the Court has no powers to appoint receiver under O 40, R. 1 of Civil P C in a pending mortgage suit if the other requirements of the law viz., it should be just and convenient to appoint a receiver having regard to the facts and circumstances of each case, are satisfied(53). Persons claiming title to mortgaged property in derogation of title to mortgagor are not necessary parties to suit for redemption filed by mortgagor. However, where the relief asked for in the suits was also the possession of suit properties and those persons claiming adverse title were therefore impleaded in the suit, the mortgagor cannot withdraw the suit against those persons at the appellate stage when he had failed in the trial Court to establish his title(54).

from the mortgagor, unless he has forfeited it by some improper defence or other misconduct(1). The right to such costs does not depend upon any exercise of that discretion of the Court, which, in litigious causes, is generally not subject to review(2). The reason for this was stated in Wetherell v Collins(3) to be that at law the mortgagee is the absolute owner of the property after default, and if the mortgagor claims redemption which equity gives him, it must be on terms indemnifying the mortgagee for all costs arising out of his legal acts. In Cotterell v Stratton(4) the reason was given by the Lord Chancellor as follows :

"The contract between mortgagor and mortgagee as it is understood in this Court, makes the mortgage a security not only for principal and interest, and such ordinary charges and expenses as are actually provided for by the instrument creating the security, but also for the costs properly incident to a suit for foreclosure or redemption. These rights resting substantially upon contract can only be lost or curtailed by such inequitable conduct on the part of a mortgagee or trustee as may amount to a violation or culpable neglect of his duty under the contract."

It follows from the above, that in a suit by the mortgagee for recovery of his amount where there was no valid tender of the amount before suit(5) or in a suit for redemption where there has been no such tender(6), the mortgagor must pay the costs of the suit. But if there was a valid tender and the mortgagee has refused it, the mortgagee will in a subsequent suit for redemption(7) or for

52. Limitation.

Under Art. 148 of the Limitation Act, 1908 (now see Art. 61(a) of the Act of 1963), the period of limitation for a suit for redemption against a mortgagee was 60 years and time ran from the date when the right to redeem accrued. Where the mortgagee transferred the mortgaged property as owner to a third person a suit for possession against such third person by redemption was governed by Art. 134 of that Act (now see Art. 61(h) of the Act of 1963) under which the period of limitation was 12 years from the time when the transfer became known to the plaintiff. See Notes on those Article AIR Commentaries on the Limitation Act, 7th (1997) Edition.

Where after executing mortgage by conditional sale, the mortgagors died before the period of re-conveyance expired under S. 16(1) of the Limitation Act, the period of limitation would be computed from the time when the L.R. of the deceased became capable of instituting the suit for redemption of mortgage and recovery of possession. Consequently when the suit was filed within the period of 30 years from the date when the L.R. of mortgagor attained majority the suit would not be barred by time(1).

If the period of mortgage is fixed and mortgagor is to pay some amount after the expiry of that period, the mortgagor may tender that amount to the mortgagee and his right to recover possession would accrue after the period of mortgage has expired. Where no mortgage period is fixed and option is given to the mortgagor to pay the mortgage money and thereafter recover the possession, he is entitled to pay mortgage money at any time and thereafter seek recovery of possession. If the mortgagee refuses to deliver the mortgaged property time to bring the suit would run from that period(2). If mortgagee comes into possession of the property pursuant to usufructuary mortgage, his possession has a lawful origin. A mere assertion of adverse title on his part cannot affect the subsisting equity of redemption of the mortgagors or operate to shorten the period of limitation prescribed for a suit for redemption(3).

Article 61(a) of the Limitation Act, 1963 refers not only to a suit to redeem but also a suit to recover possession of immovable property mortgaged. In the instant case the mortgage ceased to exist on 10-1-1953 by operation of Madras Agricultural Relief Act (1938) as amended by Act 24 of 1950 and upon that date the mortgagor acquired the right to recover possession of mortgaged property. The suit for recovery of possession is thus covered by Art. 61(a), Art. 65 would not apply as on 10-1-53 the possession of the mortgagee did not become adverse to that of mortgagor(4).

Where the Court declares that the stipulation in the mortgage deed that redemption could be enforced only after expiry of 99 years is a clog on redemption, the starting point for limitation for filing the suit for redemption would be the date on which the offending clause in the mortgage deed was struck down by the Court(5).

A suit for redemption of usufructuary mortgage filed within 29 years of execution of mortgage deed and delivery of possession is not barred by limitation in view of Art. 61(a) of the Limitation Act (1963)(6).

In the instant case it was not proved that the mortgagor had paid the mortgage money to the mortgagee and that since the mortgagor did not redeem the mortgage within the prescribed period of 30 years, the mortgagee became the owner of the mortgaged land(7).

By reason of the operation of the Madras Agricultural Relief Act (1938) as amended by Act 24 of 1950, the mortgage debt (incurred in 1923) had been wiped out on 10-1-1953. The limitation for filing suit for redemption would be 30 years under Art. 61(a) from 10-1-53 and not 12 years under Art. 65, the possession of the mortgagee could not be said to have become adverse to mortgagor from 10-1-53 and therefore Art. 65 has no application(8).

Where the terms of mortgage were hit by provisions of Usurious Loans Act, 1918 and the mortgagee could not also recover more than double the amount advanced, and he was also liable to render the accounts which he did not, it would be fair and reasonable that he had already recovered more than the amount advanced from the period of 63 years when he remained in possession and enjoyed the fruits of land, the mortgage would be deemed to have been redeemed during limita-

53. Adverse possession of equity of redemption.

Where a third person is in adverse possession of the mortgaged property for 12 years as full owner, a suit for redemption against him does not lie(1). It is only the perceptible act such as receipt of rents and profits by third party in assertion of possession of incorporeal right of equity of redemption which can establish an adverse title(2). 2. AIR 1977 Ker 204 (206) (DB).

"The circumstances relied on as evidence of adverse possession are — that since the dates of the execution sale no accounts have been demanded by or rendered to the mortgagors or their representatives, no payments of subsistence money which they were entitled to under the mortgages have been made to them, and the parties after the sale ceased to cultivate the land and left the village and renewed pallas have been granted to nominees of the mortgagees. If the purchasers had been independent third parties, and accounts had been rendered and payments made by the mortgagees to them instead of to the mortgagors, the circumstances relied on would have been cogent evidence of adverse possession of such third parties But there have been no separate dealings with the equity of redemption as a distinct subject of property. Their Lordships are satisfied that the possession has been that of the mortgagee throughout, and the question at issue is exclusively one between mortgagor and mortgagee. As between them, neither exclusive possession by the mortgagee for any length of time short of the statutory period of sixty years, nor any acquiescence by the mortgagor not amounting to a release of the equity of redemption, will be a bar or defence to a suit for redemption if the parties are otherwise entitled to redeem. It is almost unnecessary to add that a renewal of the parties or the making of a new settlement with Government in the name of nominees of the mortgagees did not alter the real title to the lands."(3)

The equity of redemption, where the mortgage is a simple one, or under some other form of mortgage under which the mortgagor is entitled to periodical payments from the mortgagees, is capable of adverse possession. See Note 7 on Arts. 64 and 65 in the AIR Commentaries on the Limitation Act, 5th (1976) Edn. The result of such acquisition is, however, not the extinguishment of the right to redeem, but the transference of such right to the acquirer(4). But where the mortgagee is in possession and the adverse possession is as against him the mortgagor's right to redeem will not be barred thereby(5).

Though a usufructuary mortgage of an occupancy holding by the tenant is void the relationship between the tenant and the mortgagee will be analogous to that of a mortgagor and a mortgagee and so long as the mortgage money remains unpaid the mortgagee has right to retain possession and such possession cannot in law be adverse to the rights of the mortgagor(6).

The mortgage remains so long as it is not redeemed and the suit for redemption is always maintainable in law notwithstanding dismissal of earlier suit. Once a mortgagee always a mortgagee. No mortgagee can claim the property to the detriment of the mortgagor so long as the right of mortgagor is not extinguished(7). A mortgagee cannot deny the mortgagor's title to the mortgaged property during pendency of mortgage, but this principle would not apply where the mortgagee in possession is evicted by a person having paramount title(8).

A possession which may be adverse to the mortgagee may not necessarily be adverse to the mortgagor unless there is assertion of title as against the mortgagor and something must be done or declared excluding the mortgagor's right to resumption of possession at will(9).

Where property of a Muslim mortgagor is sold to the mortgagee while the mortgagor Muslim is a minor by the de facto guardian the nature of mortgagee's possession does not become adverse by such act irrespective of the length of time of such possession(10)

A was put in possession of mortgaged property by the mortgagee after purported redemption of usufructuary mortgage and A claimed to be in possession not only of the mortgagee's right but also adversely to the mortgagor. B purchased equity of redemption of the usufructuary mortgage, claiming possession on the strength of his title against A. It was held that he was entitled to possession without redeeming the mortgage in favour of the mortgagee(11)

A person entering into possession of the property as a mortgagee and remaining in possession for a period exceeding 12 years does not acquire ownership by prescription so as to disentitle the mortgagor to redeem the property(12).

Possession of the mortgagee cannot become adverse to mortgagor so long as the right to redemption still subsists in the mortgagor(13)

The character as adverse possession depends on the animus possidendi of the person, under which the possession has been taken and continued. Though the mortgage as such may be invalid the possession having been taken on the footing of a mortgage such possession is not in derogation of the absolute title of the owner, but is at least permissive(14)

Merely because the mortgage debt is satisfied or the document returned after endorsement it does not alter the character of possession of the mortgagee converting it into adverse possession, particularly when there is no arrangement in regard to the possession or ownership between the parties(15).

As to adverse possession of the mortgagee himself of the equity of redemption, see Note 28 on Arts. 64 and 65 in the Commentaries above referred to.

A co-mortgagor, redeeming the whole property will not become owner by adverse possession because no question of adverse possession arises in between co-mortgagors and other co-mortgagors are entitled to redeem their respective shares(16)

A subsequent mortgagee of an equity of redemption made during the pendency of a suit on the earlier mortgage for foreclosure is bound by the decree though not made a party thereto(3). Where successive mortgagees brought suits on their mortgages without impleading the subsequent mortgagees but the prior mortgagee's suit as well as his purchase in execution of the decree was the earliest in point of time, it was held that he was entitled to redeem the subsequent mortgagees and the rule of lis pendens did not apply to the case(5).

Synopsis

1. Scope of section.
2. Assignment must be by registered instrument.
3. Costs.

1. Scope of the section.

Section 60 gives the mortgagor a right to require the mortgagee, under the circumstances stated therein, to re-transfer the mortgaged property to the mortgagor or to such persons as he may direct. Before introduction of S. 60A in 1929, the mortgagee could not be compelled by the mortgagor or any other person to assign the mortgage-debt to any one else, though, at his own option, the mortgagee was entitled to assign the mortgage-debt to any one he pleased.

The section was introduced by the amending Act of 1929 and is framed on the lines of S. 95 of the English Law of Property Act, 1925 (15 Geo. V, Ch. 20)(1). Sub-section (1) gives the mortgagor a right to compel the mortgagee, under the circumstances mentioned, to assign the mortgage-debt to such persons as he may direct. Sub-section (2) extends the right conferred by sub-section (1) to encumbrancers of the property, but provides that the requisition of an encumbrancer shall prevail over that of the mortgagor and that, as between encumbrancers, the requisition of a prior encumbrancer shall prevail over that of a subsequent encumbrancer. Sub-section (3) of the section excepts a mortgagee with possession from the operation of the section, as he is a person liable to account for the rents and profits under S. 76 and it might prejudice him to assign away the debt until the accounts are passed.

2. Assignment must be by registered instrument.

The interest of a mortgagee is intangible immovable property and the transfer of such interest can be effected only by a registered instrument (1). It was held in the nothing in the Act which

1. Section 95 runs as follows :

- "95 (1) Where a mortgagor is entitled to redeem, then subject to compliance with the terms on compliance with which he would be entitled to require a reconveyance or surrender, he shall be entitled to require the mortgagee, instead of re-conveying or surrendering, to assign the mortgage debt and convey the mortgaged property to any third person, as the mortgagor directs, and the mortgagee shall be bound to assign and convey accordingly.
- (2) The rights conferred by this section belong to and are capable of being enforced by each incumbrancer, or by the mortgagor, notwithstanding any intermediate incumbrance, but a requisition of an incumbrancer prevails over a requisition of the mortgagor, and as between incumbrancers, a requisition of a prior incumbrancer prevails over a requisition of a subsequent incumbrancer.
- (3) The foregoing provisions of this section do not apply in the case of a mortgagee being or having been in possession.
- (4) Nothing in this Act affects prejudicially the right of a mortgagee of land whether or not his charge is secured by a legal term of years absolute to take possession of the land, but the taking of possession by the mortgagee does not convert any legal estate of the mortgagor into an equitable interest.
- (5) This section applies to mortgages made either before or after the commencement of this Act, and takes effect notwithstanding any stipulation to the contrary.

expressly required that an assignment of a valid existing equitable mortgage treated before the T P Act was made applicable should be in writing and registered and that it could be assigned by delivery of the title deeds. -

3. Costs.

Section 60 provides that where the mortgagor requires the mortgagee to re-transfer the mortgaged property, the costs of such transfer shall be borne by the mortgagor. This section says nothing about the costs of the assignment of the mortgage but on the same principle, it is clear that it should be borne by the mortgagor.

^[60B. RIGHT TO INSPECTION AND PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS.— A mortgagor, as long as his right of redemption subsists, shall be entitled at all reasonable times, as his request and at his own cost, and on payment of the mortgage's costs and expenses in this behalf, to inspect and make copies or abstracts of, or extracts from, documents of title relating to the mortgaged property which are in the custody or power of the mortgagee.]

[A] See Foot-note (a) under S. 60A.

1. Scope of the section.

Prior to the year 1882 in England a mortgagee could not be compelled to deliver up to the mortgagor any documents of title until actual payment or tender of all that was due to him. Nor was the mortgagee bound to allow inspection of such documents, though, under special circumstances, inspection of the mortgage deed itself was allowed (1) By the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, (2) however, it was provided that the person entitled to redeem was entitled to inspect and take copies or extracts of the documents of title in the possession of the mortgagee. In this country also there was no provision corresponding to this, and it was held in some cases (3) following the English law, as it was before 1882, that the mortgagee was not bound to allow inspection of the documents of title until he was paid what was due to him under the mortgage. The English Law of Property Act, 1925, reproduced the said provision of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881.

This section was newly added in this Act by the Amending Act of 1929 substantially reproducing section 96, sub-sec (1) of the English Law of Property Act, 1925. (4) A mortgagor is now entitled to inspect and make copies of the documents of title relating to the mortgaged property which are in the custody or power of the mortgagee. He can exercise this right so long as his right of redemption subsists, but only at reasonable times and at his own costs and on payment of mortgagee's costs and expenses in that behalf.

I. Analogous law.

This section corresponds to S. 93 of the Law of Property Act, 1925 (15 Geo V Chap. 20(1)) which runs as follows :

"93 (1) A mortgagor seeking to redeem any one mortgage is entitled to do so without paying any money due under any separate mortgage made by him, or by any person through whom he claims solely on property other than that comprised in the mortgage which he seeks to redeem

This sub-section applies only if and as far as contrary intention is not expressed in the mortgage deeds or one of them.

(2) This section does not apply where all the mortgages were made before the first day of January eighteen hundred and eighty-two

(3) Save as aforesaid, nothing in this Act in reference to mortgages affects any right of consolidation or renders inoperative a stipulation in relation to any mortgage made before or after the commencement of this Act reserving a right to consolidate."

2. Scope of the section.

This section abolishes what is known in England as the doctrine of consolidation (1) Under

"96 (1) A mortgagor as long as his right to redeem subsists shall be entitled from time to time at reasonable times, on his request and at his own cost and on payment of the mortgagee's costs and expenses in this behalf to inspect and make copies or abstracts of or extracts from the documents of title relating to the mortgaged property in the custody or power of the mortgagee. This section applies to mortgages made after the thirty-first day of December, eighteen hundred and eighty-one, and takes effect notwithstanding any stipulation to the contrary."

the English law as it stood prior to 1882, where A held a mortgage on property x and also a separate mortgage on property y belonging to the same mortgagor, the mortgagor could not exercise his right of redemption of one of the properties alone without redeeming the other also at the same time. This is known as the doctrine of consolidation of mortgages (2) As was stated by Lord Selborne in Jennings v. Jordon(3) :

"A mortgagee, who holds several distinct mortgages under the same mortgagor, redeemable, not by express contract, but only for virtue of the right which (in English jurisprudence) is called equity of redemption, may, within certain limits, and against certain persons (entitled to redeem all or some of them), consolidate them, that is, treat them as one, and decline to be redeemed as to any, unless he is redeemed as to all."

This doctrine was applied in this country also before the Act came into force (4)

The doctrine rested upon the principle enunciated by the maxim "he who seeks equity must do equity(5)" Thus, if A held a mortgage for Rs. 500 over property x worth Rs. 1,000, and another mortgage for Rs. 1,000 over property y, and the latter property became depreciated and its value reduced to Rs. 500, the mortgagor would be glad to clear off the mortgage on property x by payment of Rs. 500, while the mortgagee would be anxious to get the mortgage over property y cleared off as the security became insufficient. The right of redemption being an equitable right, the Court, in such cases, applied the maxim "he who seeks equity must do equity" and held that the mortgagee could consolidate both the mortgages and that the mortgagor could not redeem the one without redeeming the other(6).

But the rule became so extended as to cause an intolerable grievance to persons dealing with estates in mortgage. Accordingly, the rule was partially abolished by S. 17 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 and 45 Vict., C 41) (7). Under that section, there was no consolidation of mortgages except where there was a contract to the contrary. The old S. 61 of the Indian Transfer of Property Act was enacted in the same terms as S. 17 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, which has been repeated in S. 93 of the Law of Property Act, 1925 (15 Geo V Ch. 20)(8).

The old S. 61 did not apply where several mortgages were executed over the same property. There was a conflict of opinion on the question whether in such case, the mortgagor was bound to redeem all the mortgages together. One set of cases held that the mortgagor was entitled to redeem each mortgage separately(9) and another set of cases held that he was not so entitled(10). In Ramaravaningar v Maharaja of Venkutagiri(11) the question came up before the Privy Council and their Lordships held that the section implied that the mortgagor could not redeem one or some only of such mortgages. And this view was followed in later cases(12).

The present section alters the law as laid down by the said Privy Council decision. As the section stands, it is quite clear that where a mortgagor has executed several mortgages in favour of the same mortgagee over the same property, he is, in the absence of a contract to the contrary entitled to redeem any of them without at the same time redeeming the other.(13) Hence even if there is a mortgage with possession and a leaseback of the mortgaged properties to the mortgagor and a charge is created on the equity of redemption for arrears or rent, still the two transactions cannot be treated as one and the same compelling the mortgagor to redeem the same as such(14).

In a suit for redemption the mortgagor should state, in the event of there being more mortgages than one, which mortgage he is seeking to redeem(15).

3. "Mortgagor."

The word "mortgagor" includes not only the mortgagor himself but also his heirs and survivors.(1) and successors in title This is made clear by S 59A which enacts that persons in this chapter to mortgagors . . . shall be deemed to include references to persons deriving title from them" Thus, if A as a manager of the joint Hindu family, executes a mortgage deed, and after his death A's as manager of the joint Hindu family, executes another mortgage deed in favour of the same mortgagee, agreeing to repay the second mortgage money along with the first, this section will apply(2).

It is, however, necessary that the title of the mortgagor in respect of each mortgage must be in the same hands. This section, therefore, will not apply where one mortgage is by A as the sole mortgagor, and the other mortgage, by A jointly with B(3) On the same principle, where there are two or more mortgagors, one of them alone cannot, by executing a mortgage with a contract for consolidation, affect the right of his co-mortgagors to redeem the original mortgage(4).

4. "Same mortgagee."

A executes a mortgage x in favour of B, B transfers the mortgage in favour of C A, thereafter executes another mortgage y in favour of C in which he contracts that he will not redeem mortgage x without redeeming y Can it be said in this case that the mortgages x and y are in favour of the "same mortgagee" and can C claim to consolidate the two mortgages? Yes, C having taken a transfer of mortgage X from B is the "mortgagee" under mortgage x (see S 59A). The subsequent mortgage y was executed in favour of the "mortgagee" of mortgage x, that is, the "same mortgagee" This section will, therefore, apply.(1) In England also, the rule of consolidation has been held to apply to mortgages to different persons becoming vested by transfer in the same mortgagee (2) It is, however, necessary that the title of the mortgagee in respect of each mortgage, must be shown to be vested in one and the same hand. Thus, a mortgage to A and B jointly could not be consolidated with a mortgage in favour of A alone(3).

If there are several mortgages or charges on the same property and the mortgagee is in possession in a suit for redemption the mortgagee can use it as a shield to compel the redemption of all the mortgages and there is no bar of limitation to such a defence in Travancore Cochin(4).

5. "Contract to the contrary."

It has been seen in the Notes on section 60 that any provision in a mortgage document which prevents, evades or hampers redemption, is a clog on the equity of redemption and is, as such, void. This section may be said to be statutory exception to a certain extent to the said rule. In other words, the right conferred by Ss. 60 and 62 to redeem a mortgage upon payment of the mortgage-money due under that mortgage is qualified by the provisions of this section (1). It is open to the parties under this section to enter into a contract to combine two or more mortgages, and to agree that one shall not be redeemed without redeeming the others also(2).

Thus, a contract, that the first mortgage shall not be redeemed unless the second mortgage is redeemed,(3) or that the second mortgage shall not be redeemed unless the first is redeemed,(4) or that neither the first nor the second shall be redeemed separately(5) is perfectly valid and binding on the mortgagor.

The section refers to "two or more mortgages" but will, in view of S 100, apply where one document is a mortgage and the other a charge. Consequently, where there is a contract that a further charge created on property shall not be redeemed without redeeming an earlier mortgage, the contract is perfectly valid and enforceable.(6)

But, where the mortgagor executes subsequently a simple bond and agrees that he will not pay up the simple bond without redeeming the mortgage, and such agreement cannot be construed as creating a charge on the property, this section can have no application(7).

The contract to the contrary, being in derogation of the right of redemption, must be clearly and unequivocally expressed and must be strictly construed.(8) An agreement under the second mortgage that it would be redeemed within specified time and would pay the amount under the second mortgage before redeeming the first mortgage cannot be construed as amounting to the mortgagor agreeing not to redeem the first mortgage until the second mortgage was redeemed (9) The onus of establishing such a contract is on the mortgagee(10).

Subsequently stipulation by the mortgagor that the advance will be paid before the mortgage property is redeemed is not bad in law(11).

the contrary was enforceable(13) The decision was affirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council(14) Compare the undermentioned cases(15) in which the words in the subsequent mortgage deed to the effect that the mortgage-money due under the deed would be paid first or along with the mortgage money due under the earlier deed, without any words restraining the mortgagor from redeeming the earlier mortgage without payment of the money due under the later mortgage have been held not sufficient to constitute a contract to the contrary within the meaning of this section

(3) The later of two mortgages contained in provision "The mortgagor shall not be entitled to redeem this present mortgage without paying to the trustees (meaning the mortgagees) all subscriptions or other moneys that may be secured to the trustees by any other mortgage executed by the mortgagor or by any person through whom he may claim" It was held that a contrary intention within the meaning of S 17 Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 and 45 Vict C 41) corresponding to this section, was clearly expressed(16).

(4) A mortgaged distinct estates to a building society A's first mortgage contained a covenant to observe all the rules of the society One of the rules provided that if the society had more than one mortgage from any member, such member should not have power to redeem one property alone without the consent of the Board It was held that the covenant to observe the rules amounted to an express covenant that the society should have power to consolidate(17).

(5) A executed in favour of B different mortgage deeds relating to different plots of land at the same time Each deed contained a clause which ran "When I, the mortgagor, will pay up the entire money secured on the other mortgage deeds which have been executed today I would get my land redeemed from the mortgagee" It was held by the High Court of Lahore that the agreement did not amount to consolidation of the transactions into one transaction The clause merely contained a collateral agreement as to the date when the right of redemption in each was to be exercised(18)

(6) A executed a usufructuary mortgage in favour of B and later on a second mortgage in his favour to secure further advances It was agreed at the time of the second mortgage that if he not paid annually, the mortgagee could if he so desired sue to recover the money due on the second mortgage It was also agreed that the first mortgage should not be redeemed without the redemption of the second mortgage also being effected It was held that as the money due under the second mortgage bond could be realized notwithstanding that the first mortgage bond remained unredeemed, the agreement did not amount to a contract to the contrary within the meaning of this section(19)

mortgages notwithstanding that one of them was barred by limitation (2) A contrary view was expressed in the undermentioned cases (3) Under the present section it is clear that B cannot make any such claim in the absence of a contract to the contrary

7. "Redeem any one such mortgage."

The words "redeem any one such mortgage" mean merely "pay off any one such mortgage" and not necessarily redeem the property by compelling the performance of the several acts in relation to the mortgaged property referred to in clauses (a), (b) and (c) of S 60. Thus, where X executes three different mortgages of the same property to A, X will, under this section, be entitled to pay off any one of them without, at the same time, paying off the others. But so long as any one of the mortgages remains unpaid, he cannot compel the mortgagee to perform the several acts referred to in clauses (a), (b) and (c) of S 60. In Raja Janaki Nath Roy v Raja Pramatha Nath Mulia (1), X executed four mortgages on different dates to Y over the same properties. He then mortgaged the four mortgages on different dates to Z over the same properties. He then mortgaged the same properties to Z and he latter paid the first three mortgages, but not the fourth. The question arose as to whether Z was entitled to priority over Y in respect of the mortgages paid off. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that by paying off the three mortgages, Z must be deemed to have "redeemed" them within the meaning of S 92, although he could not have compelled X to perform any of the acts mentioned in clauses (a), (b) and (c) of S 60. Their Lordships, after stating that there is a distinction between the redemption of a mortgage and the redemption of the property mortgaged, observed :

"In their Lordships' opinion it is clear that the words in the section 'mortgage has been redeemed' refer, merely to the payment of the mortgage-money and not to an extinction of the mortgagees rights over the mortgaged property."

8. Persons against whom the right of consolidation, if at all, is available.

The right to consolidate, in cases where it is applicable is available against the original mortgagor, (1) against his successors-in-title, if the equities of redemption remained united (2) and against the assignee of the equity of redemption of part only of the lands mortgaged, if the mortgagee has acquired the right to consolidate previously to the assignment (3)

The amendment of the section has no retrospective effect(1).

The principle applicable to Travancore and Cochin before the amendment of Section 61 was that all mortgages over the same property and in favour of the same person must be simultaneously redeemed and Section 61 as amended is not retrospective(2)

11. Waiver of right to consolidate.

A right to consolidate can arise under the present section only when there is a contract for consolidation. But the mortgagee may waive his right and when once it is waived, it cannot be enforced subsequently. A made four mortgages in favour of B and subsequently made another mortgage in favour of C the consideration being that C should discharge B's mortgages. C discharged the first three mortgages in favour of B, but not the fourth. Subsequently B sued on his fourth mortgage impleading C as a subsequent mortgagee. The latter set up prior mortgage rights in respect of the mortgages discharged by him. It was held that B's conduct in receiving payment in respect of the three prior mortgages operated as a waiver of his right to consolidate his mortgages and that consequently C was entitled to priority in respect of the mortgages so paid off(1)

1. Legislative changes.

This section has been amended by S. 25 of the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, 20 of 1929, by making the following changes :

- (1) The words "together with the mortgage deed and all documents relating to the mortgaged property which are in the possession or power of the mortgagee" are new "In order to make S. 62 comprehensive" observe the Select Committee, "we have on the lines of S. 60 provided that the mortgagor has a right to require the mortgagee to deliver back the mortgage deeds and other documents relating to the mortgaged property"(1)
- (2) The words "or any part thereof a part only of the mortgage money" in Cl. (b) have been substituted for the words "the interest of the principal money" in order to bring it in conformity with S. 58(d)(2).
- (3) The words "the mortgage-money or the balance thereof" in Cl. (b) have been substituted for the words "the principal money" The reason for the amendment given by the Special Committee is "Clause (b) of the section is limited to a case where out of the rents and profits of the mortgaged property the mortgagee is entitled to recover only the interest due to him on his principal The clause should also be made applicable to cases where the rents and profits are to be appropriated in payment of a part of the mortgage-money, i.e. in payment of either interest in part or principal in part or both in part To effect this change the words "principal money" should be changed into "the balance of the mortgage-money(3)."

2. Scope of the section.

Section 60 deals with a right of redemption, i.e. a right to require the mortgagee on payment of the mortgage-money to do the various things referred to in that section. It applies to all mortgages generally. This section is a special provision which is supplementary to the general provisions of S. 60 (1) and deals with insufauctuary mortgages only (2) It provides for a right to recover possession from the usufructuary mortgagee in the two cases specified. Although a suit for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage necessarily involves a prayer for possession and is in substance a suit for possession(3), a suit for possession under this section is not necessarily a suit for redemption. For, in a case falling within Clause (a) of the section, the mortgagor is not entitled to pay the mortgage-money and claim back the property. He has to allow the mortgagee to continue in possession till the mortgage debt is paid off from the usufruct of the property itself. His suit for possession is, therefore, not one for "redemption."(4) (See S. 60, Note 4). But a right to recover possession on payment of the mortgage-money or the balance thereof under Clause (b) of the section appears really to be a suit for redemption. Such a right has been provided for under S. 60 itself and prima facie clause (b) seems to be redundant (5). If after the mortgage-money has been paid, the mortgagor goes to Court to enforce his demand as to recovery of documents and possession, that would not be to enforce his right of redemption which was really his right to make those demands on payment of the mortgage-money. The right to demand the mortgagee to do certain things on payment of the mortgage-money is different from enforcing the demands subsequent to the payment of the money(6).

But there is this distinction. Clause (b) comes into operation where by contract between the parties the mortgagee is authorised to appropriate the rents and profits of the mortgaged property towards partial deduction of either the principal amount or interest or both. There may be cases where accounts may have to be taken before a redemption of the mortgage is granted. Wherever the mortgagor claims satisfaction of the mortgage debt with the usufruct the suit is not necessarily a suit for possession. In a pure redemption suit also there may be a prayer for account for redemption and for possession. If the mortgagor claims that the entire mortgage-money had been satisfied and nothing is due on the basis of the mortgage, it is for the Court to determine whether or not there is satisfaction of the mortgage. Therefore such an allegation is immaterial so far as the determination of the question whether the suit is one for possession or one for redemption is concerned. A suit purely for possession arises only when the case falls under Cl. (a) of S. 62(7).

In cases covered by clause (a) of Section 62 the mortgagor's suit cannot be a suit for redemption but for recovery of possession. But a right to recover possession on payment or tender of the mortgage money or the balance under Clause (b) is in substance right of redemption and to that extent Section 60 and Section 62(b) overlap(8).

All suits where relief claimed is possession of the property from the mortgagee are covered by Section 6(x) of the Court-fees Act(9).

Where the mortgage debt is already discharged in a self-redeeming mortgage a suit for redemption is unnecessary(10).

In England the position of a mortgagee who is to continue in possession till the satisfaction of the mortgage-money by reception of the rents and profits is that of a tenant by elegit and as soon as the principal amount and interest are satisfied his estate ceases and the mortgagor may maintain an ejectment (11). This corresponds to the provision in Clause (a) of this section(12).

As has been seen in the Notes on S. 58, usufructuary mortgages are of three kinds

- (1) Where the rents and profits are to be appropriated in lieu of interest
- (2) Where they are to be appropriated in lieu of the principal and interest
- (3) Where they are to be appropriated in part towards the principal or interest or both

Clause (a) of this section applies to the second class of cases and clause (b) to the first and third classes of cases.

Prior to the amendment of 1929, clause (b) applied only to the first class of mortgages referred to above, and not to the third. It was held that the section provided a summary remedy and did not apply when an elaborate accounting was necessary (13). The amendment has now widened the scope of the section and in cases now coming under clause (b), the Court will have to go into the question of accounts between the parties.

Though a mortgage may not be a self-liquidating mortgage in the first instance, it may become a self-liquidating mortgage at a later stage, e.g. by virtue of a statutory provision like that contained in the U.P. Debt Redemption Act, 1940, which by reducing the rate of interest and providing that the usufruct shall be calculated and its excess over the interest will be taken in satisfaction of the principal amount, has effected a change in the terms of subsisting usufructuary mortgages (14).

The Act does not apply to transactions arising prior to the Act. But the rule in the section was applied as the general law in force before the Act was passed (15).

3. Suit for possession by co-mortgagor.

Where a usufructuary mortgage is to be redeemed on payment one of the several co-mortgagors can redeem and recover possession of the entire property on making the necessary payment. Under S. 92, such a redeeming co-mortgagor is subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee whom he redeems. But the right to redeem and recover possession accrues only where the whole of the mortgage-debt is paid for mortgagee is entitled to hold possession till the whole of the debt secured by the mortgage has been paid. One of several co-mortgagors, therefore, cannot bring a suit to recover possession of a share of the mortgaged property on the allegation that the amount of the loan due on that share has been satisfied (1).

Where the mortgage-debt is fully satisfied out of the rents and profits of the property one of the several co-mortgagors has no right to take possession of the shares of his co-mortgagors, he can recover possession only of his own individual share (2).

Where, however, a co-mortgagor redeems the mortgaged property and obtains possession, he will be subrogated to the position of the mortgagee and his possession, therefore, will be that of a mortgagee and not adverse, as against the other co-mortgagors. As seen in S. 60 Note 4, the question whether the mortgage has been "redeemed" does not necessarily depend upon whether the mortgagor has actually paid any amount under the mortgage. Even in a case where the mortgage has been paid out of the usufruct of the property, it may be held in the particular circumstances of the case, that a co-mortgagor has redeemed the property (3).

usufructuary mortgagee is automatically determined by the terms of the contract the mortgagor can maintain a suit for ejectment.)

4. "Recover possession."

On payment of the mortgage-money by the mortgagor to the mortgagee the mortgage comes to an end and the right of the mortgagee to remain in possession also comes to an end.(1) If after the receipt of the mortgage-money the mortgagee refuses to deliver back the possession and perform the acts he is bound to do, the non compliance with the demands does not make the mortgage continued.(2) But the mortgagor can enforce his right to get back the possession and the mortgage deed and other documents relating to the mortgaged property, through Court(3).

Where the property is mortgaged by landlord with tenant by way of usufructuary mortgage, question whether in redemption of mortgage, mortgagor is entitled to recover actual physical possession of property depends upon recitals in the mortgage deed. The mortgage deed in instant case showed that tenancy rights were to be surrendered on redemption. Therefore mortgagor was entitled to recover possession. Mere absence of signature of mortgagee as one of the executant of document is insignificant(4).

Where the mortgagor has executed two mortgages both "usufructuary, in favour of the mortgagee, the former cannot, on the satisfaction of one of the mortgages only, recover possession of the property. The reason is that the mortgagee, under the second mortgage, is entitled to continue to hold possession of the property till the debt on that mortgage also is paid off(5). But where a usufructuary mortgage is followed or preceded by a mortgage, under which the mortgagee is not entitled to hold possession of the property, the satisfaction of the usufructuary mortgage will entitle the mortgagor to get back the possession of the property(6).

Where the usufructuary mortgagee is in possession for more than prescribed time the mortgage is deemed to be discharged and the mortgagor is entitled to recover possession from the sub-mortgagee who cannot claim to prescribe any adverse title(7).

Where on refusal of a usufructuary mortgage to accept the mortgage amount the mortgagor deposited the entire amount in Court under Section 83 of the T P Act and obtained possession of the mortgaged house, but the mortgagee filed a suit for injunction and possession, the suit cannot be decreed though mortgage subsisted due to the mortgagee's refusal to receive the amount(8).

The mortgagee is bound to give possession of the mortgaged property to the mortgagor in the condition in which it was mortgaged. Thus, where there was a Kompura in the mortgaged property when the mortgagee took possession of the property, the same was not existing at the time of redemption, and there was no evidence that it fell down by natural causes, it was held that the mortgagee was liable to pay damages for the Kompura to the mortgagor(9).

Upon redemption of a usufructuary mortgage a tenant-mortgagee whether could be directed to deliver actual or physical possession of the mortgaged property to the lessor-mortgagor depends upon whether there was implied surrender of lessee's rights when the usufructuary mortgage was executed in his favour by the lessor mortgagor. And this obviously depends upon what was the

there was no suit for redemption while the mortgage in the present case was one which could only be brought to an end by a suit for redemption, though it had been found on taking accounts under the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act that the mortgage had been discharged out of the usufruct. 16 All 254 was also doubted.)

intention of the parties at the time of execution of the mortgage deed in favour of the sitting tenant to be gathered from the terms and conditions of the mortgage transaction in the light of the surrounding circumstances of the case(10)

A contractual right of pre-emption expressly given to the mortgagee under a deed of usufructuary mortgage cannot be pleaded as a valid defence to a suit to recover possession brought by the vendee of the mortgagor, it can only be enforced by a suit for specific performance(11)

Where the tenants were inducted in the property and the owner thereof executed successive usufructuary mortgage however the tenants, continued as such the tenants on redemption of mortgage would be entitled to protection of Rent Control Act(12)

It was concurrently found by both lower Courts that a tenant was inducted by the mortgagee during subsistence of usufructuary mortgage and after the mortgage was redeemed, the tenancy came to an end. The mortgagor was therefore entitled to recover possession. Since no substantial question of law was involved, the High Court refused to interfere in second appeal(13)

5. Clause (a).

This clause applies to that form of usufructuary mortgage in which the creditor is let into possession on the understanding that he is to enjoy the usufruct till the whole of the mortgage-debt is liquidated (1) This form of mortgage resembles a vivum vadium in which no time is fixed for redemption.(2) and the mortgagee is entitled to remain in possession till the entire mortgage-debt is wiped off from the rents and profits of the property(3) The words, "when the money is paid" in this clause, mean when the money is paid from the rents and profits and do not include a payment by the mortgagor (4) A suit therefore, to recover possession of the property by the mortgagor before the debt is satisfied out of the rents and profits is premature and must be dismissed (5) The undermentioned decisions(6) which have allowed the mortgagor to recover possession of the property by making a cash payment before the mortgage-money is recovered out of the rents and profits, it is submitted, are not correct.

The clause does not say that a different rule is to be applied when, by the contract a term of years is fixed. Where it is the intention of the parties as expressed in the deed that the mortgagee is to take the rents and profits for a certain period, on the expiry of which the mortgage-money is to be deemed to be satisfied, the mortgagor cannot, before the expiry of the period, recover possession of the mortgaged property.(7) But the mere creation of a term is by no means conclusive on the point. The term fixed must form the essence of the contract. Where it does not form the essence of the contract, the mortgagor is entitled to recover possession of the property as soon as the mortgage-debt is satisfied from the rents and profits, even before the expiry of the term(8).

Even in cases where the term fixed forms the essence of the contract, the mortgagor may be allowed to recover possession of the mortgaged property before the end of the term on equitable grounds(9). Thus, where the mortgagee breaks any of the conditions agreed upon between the parties, he cannot insist on the condition that he must be allowed to remain in possession of the property for the term fixed (10) In Narasimha Rao v Seshayya,(11) it was, under the contract of mortgage, agreed that the mortgagee should pay three different sums for different purposes and appropriate the balance, namely eighty rupees, towards the mortgage-debt. The debt was to be wiped off within 55 years. The mortgagee failed to pay any of the amounts as agreed to by him for several years. Devadoss, J., while allowing the mortgagor to recover possession before the end of the term observed :

"In this case the mortgagee undertook to pay three different sums for three different purposes and he not having paid those sums as agreed to by him, I think, it is equitable that he should not be allowed to insist upon one of the terms of the mortgage deed being given effect to, when he himself gives a go-by to the other terms of the deed. The mortgagee remaining in possession for a number of years is in consideration of his not only applying a portion of the rents and profits towards his debt but also in consideration of his meeting certain demands which ought to be met out of the income of the property. In a case like this, I think a Court of Equity ought to give relief to the mortgagor and allow him to redeem the property before the expiry of the term."

A mortgagor suing under this clause to recover possession sues on his proprietary right. In Nidha Sah v Murlī Dhar,(12) A executed in favour of B, what purported to be a mortgage with possession for 14 years. The deed provided that on the expiration of the term, the mortgagor shall come into possession without settlement of account. When the term expired, B refused to give up possession of the property on the ground that owing to the misrepresentation of the mortgagor he had not received the entirety of the premises comprised in the deed. B claimed the right to hold the property until he had recouped himself. It was held by the Judicial Committee that A was entitled to rely on his proprietary right and in the absence of any stipulation express or implied in the mortgage-deed depriving him of the right to recover possession, he was entitled to succeed. It has been held in the undermentioned cases(13) that it is open to a mortgagor in a suit for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage to rely upon his title and recover possession, if it is found that the mortgage relied upon is void.

In a suit to recover possession of the property on the allegation that the usufruct has liquidated the principal and interest, it is for the mortgagor to show that the whole of the mortgage-debt is paid off (14). In such a suit, the production of accounts by the mortgagee showing the actual collections made by him during his possession becomes necessary (15) except where the rents and profits are estimated and the term fixed, or where the receipts from the mortgaged property are agreed to be taken in lieu of interest and a defined portion of the principal (16).

As to what is "mortgage-money" see Note 17 on S 58 and Note 10 on S 60.

6. Clause (b).

Clause (b) contemplates two classes of usufructuary mortgages: (i) where the rents and profits are to be appropriated in lieu of interest, and (ii) where they are to be taken in part-payment of interest, or of principal or of both. Prior to the amendment of this section in 1929 this clause was as seen in Note 2, restricted to the first class of mortgages only.

In usufructuary mortgage the stipulation that mortgage shall be redeemed within a period of five years is incapable of changing the character of mortgage as usufructuary because such term may only act as a proviso for redemption. In a usufructuary mortgage, it is proper to have such a term in view of S 62(b)(1). Where no term for the payment of the mortgage money has been prescribed, the right accrues as soon as that part of the mortgage-debt which has to be satisfied out of the rents and profits has been so satisfied. Where a term is prescribed the right arises after the expiry of the period. (2) See Note 8.

Where the rents and profits are to be taken in lieu of the interest the mortgagee takes his chance of the rents and profits being greater or less than the interest which might have been reserved by the mortgage-bond (3) and the mortgagor is entitled to recover possession of the mortgaged property on payment of the principal money only (4).

Under S 76, the mortgagee in possession is bound to apply the receipts from the property towards the satisfaction of the mortgage-debt. Any sum therefore which the mortgagee retains in violation of the terms of the contract must be applied in reduction of the mortgage-money. Thus where under the terms of the mortgage, the mortgagee was to receive the rents and profits in lieu of interest and pay a certain sum of the rents and profits as malikana to the mortgagor which sum never paid, the mortgagor was held entitled to redeem on paying the principal after deducting the unpaid malikana (5). But the principle stated above has not been applied in cases where the mortgagor has not suffered any loss due to the violation of the terms. Thus, in Prosanna Kumar v. Girish Chandra, (6) it was held by the High Court of Calcutta that the mortgagor could not get credit for any rent paying on account of the mortgaged properties to the landlord, which was not actually paid by him. See also the undermentioned cases (7).

Where, therefore, a melkanomdar brings a suit for redemption but the melkanom is found to be void, he being in the position of a person entitled to only a limited right to redeem the mortgagee is not entitled to recover possession of the suit property.

A executed a usufructuary mortgage in favour of B, the rents and profits to be appropriated in lieu of interest. A failed to deliver possession of a portion of the mortgaged property, but B took no steps to call for additional security. It was contended in the redemption suit that the failure on the part of A to secure to B the possession of the mortgaged property entitled B to claim interest in lieu of the rents and profits of the property, of which he was dispossessed. It was held that B had acquiesced in his dispossession and was, therefore, not entitled to claim interest on the mortgage-money on account of dispossession (8). In cases covered by Cl (a) if the mortgagee loses some lands due to partition and fails to bring in suit for making up the deficiency as provided in the contract, in a suit for redemption by the mortgagor he could not claim deficiency of profits due to loss of a part of the mortgaged property (9). Where there was no express provision for the payment of interest but there was a clause that, should the mortgagor fail to compensate from his other properties for the loss of possession suffered by the mortgagee, the latter would be entitled to whole mortgage-money with costs and damages, it was held that the mortgagee was entitled to interest for the part of the debt proportionate to the portion of the property of which possession was not given to him (10).

A personal covenant by the mortgagor to pay year by year, the deficiency in the profits is not sufficient to enable the mortgagee to add the deficiency to the principal (11).

There can be no question of accounting in cases where the rents and profits are to be appropriated in lieu of interest. See section 77.

7. Lease to mortgagor.

Where the mortgagee leases back the property to the mortgagor, the question arises whether the arrears of rent can be taken into account at the time of redemption of the mortgage. If the mortgage and the lease form part of one transaction, namely the transaction of mortgage, the lease providing only the mode in which the interest upon the mortgage is to be paid, the mortgagor cannot redeem the mortgaged property without paying the arrears of rent (1). In Imdad Hasan v. Badri Prasad (2) Knox, Acting C.J. and Banerji, J., observed:

"In this view, the arrears of the lease money due to the mortgagee must be deemed to be arrears of interest. As under the terms of the mortgage, the mortgagee is entitled to remain in possession until the principal amount and interest have been realized, he has the right to continue in possession so long as the interest payable to him is in arrear, and the plaintiffs are not entitled to redeem without payment of the arrears."

This view has, however, been dissented from in the undermentioned case (3) Where, however, the two transactions of lease and mortgage are independent transactions, the mortgagor cannot be compelled, as a condition precedent to the redemption of the mortgage, to pay off the arrears of rent due under the lease.(4)

8. "When the term..... has expired."

There is nothing to prevent a term being fixed in a usufructuary mortgage, for the mortgagee's enjoyment, during which the mortgage cannot be redeemed (1) That this is so, is clear from the words "when the term, if any, prescribed for the payment of the mortgage-money has expired" in clause (b) of the section But the term fixed must not operate as a clog on redemption As to when a term fixed in the mortgage for payment will or will not amount to a clog on redemption, see Note 32 on Section 60.

A mortgagee who has failed to get possession for a portion of the period fixed, by reason of the fault of the mortgagor, is not thereby entitled to get the period extended or added to (2)

This section cannot prevail against the provisions of S. 26G of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885 as amended by Bengal Act VI of 1938) Even if a term is fixed until the expiry of which the mortgagor is not entitled to redeem the mortgagor can sue to recover possession of the property after 15 years.(3)

Quite often debt laws provided for redemption of mortgage before expiry of fixed term For example under Bihar Money Lenders Act 22 of 1975 a mortgage is automatically redeemed after 7 years and in such a case the mortgagor is entitled to possession whatever other terms of the mortgage may provide.(4)

Where, under the terms of the usufructuary mortgage, the mortgagee is to take the profits in lieu of interest and the mortgagor is to redeem on payment of the principal at the end of the stipulated period, the mortgagor cannot recover possession at the end of the period until he pays or tenders or deposits into the Court the principal (5) If in such a case the mortgagor is also liable under the terms of the mortgage to pay interest in default of payment of principal at the end of the stipulated period and there is nothing in the deed to show that such interest is not to be a charge on the property then the mortgagor cannot recover possession until he pays or tenders or deposits into Court the principal together with such interest (6) Even where the mortgagee fails to advance the full amount contracted for, the mortgagor cannot sue for possession before the expiry of the period fixed. The remedy of the mortgagor lies in damages (7) Where premises in possession of a tenant were mortgaged to him and the tenant to remain in possession as mortgagee and no interest was to be paid the period of redemption being fixed for 10 years the tenancy right is extinguished after the period and the owner mortgagor is entitled to possession.(8) See also S 58, Note 18 and S 60, Note 5.

9. Successive suits for possession.

A dismissal of a suit for possession under this section on the ground that it is premature, does not bar a subsequent suit claiming the same relief.(1) As to whether where a conditional decree for possession on payment of the amount due is passed and nothing is done under it, the decree bars a subsequent suit for possession - see section 11, Notes 40 and 116 of the AIR Commentaries on the Code of Civil Procedure, 10th (1985) Edition.

10. Claim for surplus collections.

It is well established that a claim to surplus profits against the mortgagee is one arising from and connected with the right to redeem the property. The cause of action for both the claims is the same and consequently, the mortgagor suing for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage, must also claim surplus profits therein. Where a suit for redemption is filed in the first instance and subsequently a suit for the surplus profits is filed, the latter would be barred under the provisions of O 2, R. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908.(1)

11. Limitation.

A suit to recover possession under this section was governed by Art 148 of the Limitation Act, 1908(1) (see now Art. 61 (a) of the Act of 1963).

A deed of usufructuary mortgage was executed on 14-4-1842. This deed did not contain any provision for repayment of the mortgage-money. In a subsequent document executed on 26-4-1862 between the mortgagors and mortgagees, while affirming the prior mortgage, there were alterations in its terms, one of which was that the mortgaged properties would be enjoyed by the mortgagees for a period of 40 years from the date of the document. K, a minor member of the mortgagee family, was not a party to this subsequent document. On 20-4-1944, a suit for redemption was filed by an alienee of the mortgagors. The defence to this suit was that K was not bound by the deed of 1862, and that in respect of K's share that deed could not save limitation. It was held that in view of the fact that K had obtained the enjoyment of the mortgage in respect of his share for a period of 40 years certain, he must be taken to have elected to apply to his share the terms of 1862 document. Having in this way accepted benefit and thus approbated that document, neither he nor his successors could be heard to say that the mortgage in 1842 was independent of 1862 and that the limitation ran out on the lapse of 60 years from 1842. Time would run only from 1902 because the mortgagors could not redeem the property including K's share for 40 years from 1862 (2)

A suit for possession brought more than 12 years after deemed redemption is not time barred (3)

Recovery of possession on redemption of a usufructuary mortgage will be barred only after the lapse of 12 years from the date when the Court under Section 19A of Madras Act 4 of 1978 declares that the mortgage/debt had been completely scaled down under Section 9-A of that Act as a result of the mortgagee being in possession of the property for 30 years (4)

In the case of a non-self-liquidating usufructuary mortgage of 1884 the right to redeem or recover possession extinguished in 1944 and a suit brought in 1951 under the provisions of the U P Debt Redemption Act 15 of 1940 will not be tenable (5)

Where usufructuary mortgage of 1909 was redeemed in 1921 but possession continued with the mortgagee in some other capacity suit by the mortgagor for possession in 1966 would be barred as a result of the combined effect of Art 148 of the Limitation Act, 1908 read with Section 30 and Art 61(a) of the new Limitation Act, 1963 and it would not be a suit for redemption but a suit to which Art. 65 of the Limitation Act 1963 would apply (6)

12. This section and section 61.

Section 61 allows consolidation of mortgages only where there is a contract to that effect in the mortgage deed. In the absence of such a contract, no right to consolidate can be claimed. Where therefore, a usufructuary mortgage is followed or preceded by a simple mortgage or a deed of further charge (to which all the provisions applying to simple mortgages apply under S 100) and there is no contract to the contrary within the meaning of S 61, the mortgagor has a right, on the mortgage-debt being satisfied, to recover possession of the mortgaged property under this section without at the same time redeeming the other mortgages (1). On the other hand, where the mortgage deed contains a contract to consolidate the charges, the mortgagor cannot recover back the possession of the property without redeeming all the charges (2)

The old section 61 did not apply where several mortgages were executed over the same property, and in such a case, the mortgagor was compelled to redeem all the mortgages together even in the absence of a contract to the contrary (3). Where, therefore, a usufructuary mortgage was followed by a simple mortgage over the same property the mortgagor could not exercise the right conferred by this section. (4) To avoid this inconsistency it was held in Zahid Ali v Kedar Nath (5) that S 62 contemplated the existence of one transaction and did not at all touch the case where the usufructuary mortgage having been executed, other mortgages by way of further charge had been executed. A similar view of this section was taken by Niamatullah, J., in the Full Bench decision of the High Court of Allahabad (6) The amendment of S. 61 in 1929 has removed the inconsistency and made it quite clear that even in the case where the several mortgages relate to the same property, the mortgagor is, in the absence of a contract to consolidate, entitled to redeem any one of them without at the same time redeeming the others. In view of this amendment, the above decisions are no longer law.

63. ACCESSION TO MORTGAGED PROPERTY.— Where mortgaged property in possession of the mortgagee has, during the continuance of the mortgage, received any accession, the mortgagor, upon redemption, shall, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, be entitled as against the mortgagee to such accession Accession acquired in virtue of transferred ownership.

Where such accession has been acquired at the expense of the mortgagee, and is capable of separate possession or enjoyment without detriment to the principal property, the mortgagor desiring to take the accession must pay to the mortgagee the expense of acquiring it. If such separate possession or enjoyment is not possible, the accession must be delivered with the property; the mortgagor being liable, in the case of an acquisition necessary to preserve the property from destruction, forfeiture or sale, or made with his assent, to pay the proper cost thereof, as an addition to the principal money. ^A[with interest at the same rate as is payable on the principal, or where no such rate is fixed, at the rate of nine per cent. per annum].

In the case last mentioned the profits, if any, arising from the accession shall be credited to the mortgagor.

Where the mortgage is usufructuary and the accession has been acquired at the expense of the mortgagee, the profits, if any, arising from the accession shall in the absence of a contract to the contrary, be set off against interest, if any, payable on the money so expended.

1. Scope of the section.

This section and S. 70 are both based on the principle enunciated by the maxims accessio cedit principali (the increase follows the principal) and accessorium non ducit sed sequitur suum principale (that which is the accessory or incident does not lead but follows, its principal) (1) This

1. AIR 1921 Mad 627 (628) (DB) (NOTE: — It is gratifying that the exposition of the law in section provides that the mortgagor shall, upon redemption, be entitled to the accession received during the continuance of the mortgage, and S 70 provides that the mortgagee shall be entitled to such accession as part of his security. They merely enact the law as it was applied before the Act was passed.(2)

It is, however, necessary for the application of this section or of S 70, that the property or right claimed by the mortgagor under this section or by the mortgagee under S 70 should constitute an "accession." The word "accession" has not been defined in the Act. In the Roman law "accessio" is the general name given to every accessory thing, whether corporeal or incorporeal, that has been added to a principal thing from without, and has been connected with it, whether by the powers of nature or by the will of man, so that in virtue of this connection it is regarded as part and parcel of the thing (3). The question whether a particular thing is regarded as part and parcel of another thing must be decided in the light of various facts(4) — in some cases, upon the intention of the parties, in some, upon the law applicable thereto and in some, upon both. The following notes dealing with various forms of accessions will make this clear. It must be remembered that the expression "accession" is not confined to physical acquisitions or additions to the mortgaged property but will include also the acquisition of an interest in property (5).

2. Accretions to land.

Where there is an acquisition of land from the sea or a river by gradual, slow and imperceptible means, there, from the supposed necessity of the case, and the difficulty of having to determine year by year, to whom an inch, or a foot, or a yard belongs, the accretion by alluvion is held to belong to the owner of the adjoining land (1). Such an accretion will be an "accession" to the adjoining land within the meaning of this section, and if the accession is made while the adjoining land is in the possession of the mortgagee, the mortgagor will, on redemption, be entitled to such accession also (2) Where a village was mortgaged without specification of boundaries and subsequently additions to the village were made by the Survey Officers, it was held in an old Bombay case, that the mortgagor was entitled on redemption to the additions so made (3) Where through mistake the mortgagee was put in possession of more land than that specified in the mortgage deed, it was held that though the mortgagee did not come in possession of the extra land as accretion to the land specified in the mortgage he was bound to deliver possession of the whole land on redemption to the mortgagor.(4)

3. Buildings, etc., erected on mortgaged land.

Where the owner of mortgaged land himself builds thereon, the maxim quicquid plantatur solo solo cedit (whatever is attached to the earth becomes part of it) will apply, and the building will become an accession to the mortgaged property and the mortgagee would be entitled to the security of such accession under S 70.(1) See illustration (b) to that section

But the maxim referred to above has no application in this country to cases where a stranger builds on the land of another upon a bona fide but mistaken belief of title.(2) The rule of law applicable to such cases is that the stranger may remove the building erected by him on being evicted by the true owner (3) Unless and until, therefore, the person erecting the building gives up his right to remove the building, it cannot be said that it is an accession to the property. If he gives up such right the building will become an accession to the property (4) The question whether he has given up the right and so rendered the building an accession will depend upon the facts of the particular case.(5) Where, under a contract with the mortgagor A built a pucca house on the mortgaged property, one of the stipulations in the contract being that A should live in it for a certain rent as long as the house stood on the land, it was held that the house must be regarded as an accession to the mortgaged property.(6)

6. AIR 1935 Rang 420 (422) (DB) (The rule as to accession applies to representatives of mortgagor and mortgagee also.)

The fact that the person building on the mortgaged land is the mortgagee himself does not, it is submitted, make any difference in the application of the principles stated above. Prima facie he would also be entitled to remove the building unless he has given up such right and treated the building as part of his security. If he had so treated it, then it will be an "accession," with the result that he cannot remove it but can only enforce his mortgage against it as part of his security and claim the costs of the erection, if any, allowable under the second paragraph of the section.

In the undermentioned case (7) it was, however, assumed that a stable built by the mortgagee on the mortgaged land was an accession to the mortgaged property but the mortgagee was allowed to remove the building. It is submitted this view is not correct.

Where the mortgaged property is a kachcha house and the mortgagee in possession substitutes in its place an entirely new building it has been held that it is not an accession within the meaning of this section as there is no addition to the old building but that the case is one of improvement governed by S. 63A. (8)

In the case of machinery brought into a mortgaged building, it may not be possible always to treat it as an "accession." It may be necessary in some cases to consider how far the definition of the expression "attached to the earth" in S. 3 of the Act will bear upon the decision of the question (9). Where the machinery installed in a building is in the nature of a "fixture" (thereby creating a thing attached to another thing for the permanent use of the latter) (10) as, for example, an electric installation in a building, it will be an "accession" to the building (11).

4. Tree fallen on land.

Where, by natural causes, a tree falls on the mortgaged land in the possession of a mortgagee under a mortgage under which he is entitled to take the produce of the property for interest, the tree cannot be said to be an addition to the property and is therefore not "accession" to the property within the meaning of this section. The mortgagee is entitled to it as part of the produce of the property (1). It was, however, held in the undermentioned case, (2) by the High Court of Travancore-Cochin, that a mortgagee under an Otti deed does not get a right to appropriate fallen trees, his right being restricted to taking the income of the properties and that consequently in such a case the mortgagee is liable for the value of the timber found missing.

5. Acquisitions by the mortgagee.

An acquisition made by a mortgagee is not necessarily an "accession" to the mortgaged property within the meaning of this section so as to entitle the mortgagor to claim its redemption. In order that it may constitute an "accession" it must have been acquired in the manner mentioned in S. 90 of the Trusts Act, 1882. that section runs as follows :

"Where a tenant for life, co-owner, mortgagee or other qualified owner of any property, by availing himself of his position as such, gains an advantage in derogation of the rights of the other persons interested in the property, or where any such owner, as representing all persons interested in such property gains any advantage, he must hold, for the benefit of all persons so interested, the advantage so gained, but subject to repayment by such persons of their due share of the expenses properly incurred, and to an indemnity by the same persons against liabilities properly contracted in gaining such advantage."

In Sorabji v. Dwarkadas(1) it was argued before their Lordships of the Privy Council that S. 63 of this Act entitles the mortgagor on redemption to treat acquisitions by the mortgagee as accessions to the mortgaged property without regard to the question whether the mortgagee had any special advantage by reason of his position as mortgagee in acquiring them an element necessary for the application of S. 90 of the Trusts Act, 1882. Their Lordships negatived this contention and observed as follows :

"There is nothing inconsistent with that section (S. 90 Trusts Act) in the provisions of S. 63 of the Transfer of Property Act, as to accessions to mortgaged property and the terms on which the mortgagor may upon redemption obtain the benefit of them. The word "accession" is not defined in the Act, but the section deals expressly with accessions which have been acquired at the expense of the mortgagee and would appear to be clearly applicable to cases in which a subordinate tenure has admittedly been acquired by the mortgagee as an accession to the mortgaged property. Whether the term 'accession' as used in this section, should also be held to cover acquisitions which the mortgagee has made for his own benefit but is bound under S. 90, Trusts Act, to hold for the benefit of the mortgagor need not be decided..... In the present case it is sufficient to say that their Lordships are clearly of opinion that S. 63, Transfer of Property Act, cannot be read as entitling the mortgagor to recover acquisitions made by the mortgagee for his own benefit in circumstances which do not bring him within S. 90, Trusts Act."

(Case not

It has been held by the Patna High Court in the undermentioned case(3) that a mortgagee may, if he chooses, keep an acquisition made by him taking advantage of his position as a mortgagee, for his own benefits, and that the question whether it is to be treated as part of the security depends upon the intention of the mortgagee. It is submitted that this view is not correct. The case is clearly one governed by S. 90 of the Trusts Act, and if the acquisition is one falling within the section, then it will be an accession to the mortgaged property quite apart from any intention of the mortgagee (4). It is open to the mortgagee to show that he acquired the advantage by the mortgagor's consent, or after a contest with him before the grant of the advantage, or otherwise so openly and fairly that he is equitably entitled to keep it (5). A mortgagee in possession, while purchasing any subordinate interest under his mortgage in execution of a decree for rent for that subordinate interest which he was entitled to receive as a mortgagee, cannot be said to have purchased it by taking advantage of his position as a mortgagee or in derogation of the rights of the mortgagor. His purchase stands on the same footing as a purchase by a stranger. Hence it cannot be an accession to the mortgaged property under S. 90, Trusts Act or S. 63, Transfer of Property Act (6).

It has been held by the Rangoon High Court that an extension into adjoining Government waste land made by the mortgagee is not an accession to the mortgaged property (7). The reason appears to be that such an acquisition was not made by reason of his position as mortgagee.

Under the section the mortgagor is entitled to the accession on redemption. The combined effect of S. 90, Trusts Act, and this section is that till the redemption of the security, the accession does not become the absolute property of the mortgagor.(8)

When a co-sharer acquires Sri and Khudkasht rights or plants a grove in his dual capacity as a co-sharer and mortgagee he cannot be said to have acquired these rights as co-sharer only and those rights would be governed by Section 63.(9)

A mortgagee in possession of an Undukoor or undivided half share of property and obtains assignment of adjoining property belonging to the Government on the strength of his possession of the former property he holds the other property for benefit not only of his mortgagor but of all persons interested in the former property in the other half share. The latter property is not an accession to the mortgaged within the meaning of Sec. 63 (10)

Where joint family property subject to mortgage is purchased by the mortgagee in a revenue sale it is not an accession to the mortgaged property.(11)

6. "During the continuance of the mortgage."

The section applies only to accessions received during the continuance of the mortgaged (1) Where a usufructuary mortgagee of a share of a village took, during the currency of his mortgage, a mortgage by way of conditional sale of an occupancy holding of a tenant of the village, but subsequent to the expiry of his own mortgage, foreclosed the mortgage by conditional sale, it was held that the mortgage by conditional sale having been taken during the currency of the mortgage, the right acquired by foreclosure of such mortgage must be held to be an accession to the mortgaged property and that the mortgagor would be entitled thereto on redemption.(2)

7. "Be entitled as against the mortgagee to such accession."

A mortgagor is not obliged to take an accession to the mortgaged property and pay for it. If he wishes to take it he must pay the mortgagee the costs of the acquisition if any under the second paragraph of the section.(1) It follows that he may give up his right to the accession and if he does so he cannot afterwards again claim it. 8. Suit to recover accession to mortgaged property — Nature of.

It has been held by the High Court of Lahore in Khan Muhammad v Girdhari Ram(1) that a suit, after redemption, to take over accessions to the mortgaged property is not one for redemption within the meaning of Art. 148 of the Limitation Act of 1908 but is one that will be governed by Art. 144 of that Act. Chevis, J., observed :

"The law is that the mortgagor is upon redemption entitled (not obliged) to take over the accession and if he desires to take it over he must pay the cost of acquisition. Only one redemption is spoken of. There may I conceive be cases in which the mortgagor is entitled to redeem first and to take over the accessions later on e.g. see Ram Bich Narayan Singh v Ambika Prasad Singh (2) a case in which it appears that plaintiff only became aware of the accessions after redeeming and retaking possession. But what is redeemed is the property mortgaged. What was mortgaged in this case did not include the occupancy rights now in question, and though plaintiff had a right to take over these rights at redemption I conceive that taking over these rights would have been, not part of the actual redemption, but an optional right which by law goes along with the right of redemption. I hold, therefore, that when a mortgagor after redemption, sues to take over accessions his suit is not really one for redemption. The redemption is already complete, everything that was once mortgaged having been already redeemed. The redemption being already complete the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee no longer subsists and the subsequent suit for accessions is not a suit against a mortgagee, and Art. 148 is not, in my opinion, applicable. (See now Arts 61(a) and 65 of the Limitation Act of 1963)

It must, however, be noted that in the above case, the separate possession and enjoyment of the accession was held to be 'clearly possible' and so the case fell under the first part of the second paragraph of this section. It is conceived that under the second part of the paragraph a suit for accession would be one for redemption.

9. Costs of acquisition.

The second paragraph of the section provides for the payment by the mortgagor of the costs of the acquisition of an accession in two cases —

- (1) where the accession has been acquired at the expense of the mortgagee and is capable of separate possession and enjoyment without detriment to the principal property and
- (2) where such separate possession and enjoyment is not possible but the acquisition was made with the assent of the mortgagor or was necessary to preserve the property from destruction, forfeiture or sale.(1)

(Usufructuary mortgagee re-building fallen

The question whether a particular accession is capable of separate possession and enjoyment without detriment to the principal property must be decided with reference to the facts of each case. It has been held in the undermentioned cases(2) that a building or a grove which was an accession to the land was not capable of such separate possession and enjoyment and if the construction or the planting of the grove was not made with the mortgagor's assent and was not necessary for the preservation of the principal property the mortgagor was not bound to pay any costs to the mortgagee on redemption. The contrary view held in some cases, namely that a grove planted(3) or a house built(4) on the mortgaged land is capable of separate possession and enjoyment within the meaning of this section, is, it is submitted, not correct. A well newly constructed on the mortgaged land by the mortgagee cannot be said to be capable of separate possession and enjoyment within the section. Nor can it be said that its construction is necessary to preserve the property from destruction or deterioration. Consequently, unless it is constructed with the mortgagor's consent, it should be delivered over to the mortgagor on redemption, and he is not bound to pay the cost thereof (5). Where an old well on mortgaged land which had been rendered useless from natural causes, was repaired by the mortgagee with the mortgagor's consent, it was held in the undermentioned case(6) that the new well may be looked upon as an accession to the mortgaged property and that the mortgagee can claim the amount spent therefor.

1. Scope of the section.

This section is new and was inserted by the amending Act of 1929. The section is not retrospective.(1) Section 51 is a general provision dealing with the improvements effected by transferee to the transferred property while Section 63-A is a special provision dealing with improvements effected by mortgagee in possession and the special excludes the general (2)

Before the introduction of this section there was a difference of opinion as to whether a mortgagee who had effected improvements on the mortgaged property was entitled to claim the costs thereof from the mortgagor. According to one set of cases, the mortgagee was not entitled to charge or to obtain any compensation for improvements effected by him unless such improvements constituted necessary repairs of the property or were necessary for the preservation of the property. (3) In another class of cases (4) following English decisions (5) it was held that a mortgagee was entitled to a charge for improvements if they were reasonable. In some cases (6) the value of improvements was allowed to the mortgagee by custom. According to the English law as summarised by Fisher on Mortgage :

"The improvements must always be reasonable having regard to the nature and value of the estate for, if it were not so, a weapon would be put in the mortgagee's hands with which he might greatly clog the right of redemption, which he has no right to make more expensive than is necessary to keep the estate in good repair and working order and to protect the title."

This section is based on the view so expressed above (7) In their report, the Special Committee after referring to the above cited passage from Fisher on Mortgage observed as follows :

"We prefer to adopt in India the view summarised in Fisher on Mortgage except that we do not consider it desirable to leave it to the Court to determine in each case what improvements are reasonable and what not. We accordingly propose to have a uniform and definite rule, namely that no mortgagee shall be entitled to charge for any improvements unless they are made to preserve the property from destruction or deterioration or unless they are necessary to prevent the security from becoming insufficient or made in compliance with the lawful order of any public servant or public authority. We accordingly propose to add a new S 63-A dealing with improvements. We have throughout guarded the right of private contract."

This section has no application to the Punjab to which Province this Act has not been extended. In some early decisions (8) It was held in cases arising in that Province that a mortgagee in possession was not entitled to compensation for the improvements he had effected without the consent of the mortgagor. But in later decisions⁽⁹⁾ it was held that the mortgagee in possession was entitled to be paid at the time of redemption the amounts spent by him on such improvements provided the sum spent was not unreasonable and the improvements had increased the value of the property. In Ramsaran Das v Bhagwan Singh⁽¹⁰⁾ it was observed that there was

"Nothing but ordinary Justice that the increase in the price of the property should not go into the pocket of the mortgagor without his reimbursing the mortgagee whose money was instrumental in raising the price of the property."

After the introduction of this section in the Act the decisions of the Lahore High Court have been in conformity with the provisions of this section ⁽¹¹⁾

The mortgagor cannot claim that the additional income to the mortgagee from the improvements should be taken into account at the time of redemption where the mortgagee is not entitled under the section to the cost of the improvements ⁽¹²⁾ Where the mortgagee allowed preliminary decree to be passed in a redemption suit without raising the plea that he had made certain improvements to the mortgaged property, and also did not file any appeal against the preliminary decree, he could not be allowed to raise the plea relating to improvements at the stage of final decree ⁽¹³⁾ Transfer of Property Act proceeds on the basis that in law ownership of a building is different from ownership in the land and that land and building could be owned by different persons in the eye of law. Therefore by relying upon Section 63A and S. 108(4) it cannot be said that the concept that the owner of the land becomes the owner of the building as it comes up, is recognised in this country ⁽¹⁴⁾ But the additional income due to the improvements must be credited to the mortgagor where the improvements are of the type mentioned in sub s. (2) and the mortgagor is bound to pay their costs with interest.

1A. "During the continuance of the mortgage."

In order that the section may apply the mortgaged property must have been improved during the continuance of the mortgage. If the improvements are made before the execution of the mortgage or after it is extinguished, the section has no application. In the undermentioned case of the Punjab(1) (decided before the introduction of this section) A mortgaged certain land to B who was already in possession as a tenant and had made considerable improvements during the period of his tenancy. There was no clause in the mortgage-deed providing for payment of compensation to the mortgagee in the form of value of improvements. A sued for redemption of his mortgage. B pleaded that he could not be ousted before he was awarded compensation for the improvements effected during the term of his tenancy. It was held that A was entitled to redeem the mortgage without paying any compensation for the value of the improvements and to be put in the same position as regards the mortgagee, qua the mortgagee, as he was at the time when he entered into the mortgage. In the case noted below,(2) the High Court of Jammu and Kashmir allowed compensation for the improvements made by the tenant of the mortgagee, upon redemption before the time fixed, by virtue of the Jammu and Kashmir Restoration of Mortgaged Property Act, 2006.

2. Improvements by auction-purchaser in execution of mortgage decree.

An auction-purchaser in execution of a decree under a prior mortgage to which the puisne mortgagee was not a party, cannot claim the amount spent by him on improvements, firstly, because he is not in the position of a mortgagee in possession and secondly, because the improvement cannot be said to be effected during the continuance of the mortgage (1) The position of a private purchaser from the prior mortgagee is however different.(2) He steps into the shoes of his vendor, as the expression "mortgagee" would include his representatives. (See S 59A) Similarly, when a purchaser from the mortgagor pays off a prior mortgagee he steps into the shoes of the prior mortgagee and is entitled to the costs of improvements effected by him as a prior charge as against the subsequent mortgagee.(3)

There is distinction between a suit against a mortgagee and a suit against an absolute transferee from the mortgagee. In latter case he is entitled to claim value of improvements.(4)

3. Nature of improvement, to the cost of which the mortgagee is entitled.

In order that a mortgagee may be entitled to the costs of an improvement made by him on the mortgaged property it must be shown that—

- (1) it was necessary to preserve the property from destruction or deterioration, or
- (2) it was necessary to prevent the security from becoming insufficient, or

The mortgagee is entitled to claim compensation for the improvements alleged to have been effected by her in the property comprised in the mortgage, in accordance with the provisions of S 17 of Kerala Compensation for Tenants Improvements Act 29 of 1958 (2)

The object of the restriction is to prevent the mortgagee from improving the property in such a way as to make it utterly impossible for the mortgagor, with his means, ever to redeem it, in other words, from "improving the mortgagor out of his estate (3)" Where, therefore, the improvements made by the mortgagee are not covered by sub-s (2), the mortgagor is entitled to the improvements without payment of the cost thereof to the mortgagee and the mortgagee or his assignee is debarred even from removing the materials of the improvements made by them on the property (4)

Entitlement for improvement as envisaged under S 63 A (1) is made subject to the requirement under S 63-A (1) Digging up of well cannot be stated to be an improvement as contemplated under S. 63-A Mortgagee would not be entitled to reimbursement of such expenditure (5)

A mortgagee not acting bona fide in effecting improvements is not entitled to the claim (6)

The costs of a suit instituted for recovery of possession of property do not come within any of the purposes mentioned in S 63-A (2) and cannot be considered an improvement and hence the mortgagee would not be entitled to them before redemption.(7)

Where the claimant (mortgagee) had a reasonable ground to entertain a bona fide belief that after expiry of the period stipulated for redemption of mortgage there was no intention on the part of the mortgagor to redeem and that he was therefore owner of the property and under that belief he had made improvements to the property he would be entitled to the improvements made by him under S 51, though his title might be defective. provement on the mortgaged property he must prove a contract permitting him to make the constructions and enabling him to recover the amount before redeeming the property (4) The question whether there is a contract to the contrary and what is its nature depends upon the facts and circumstances of each case (5) Where under the mortgage agreement the mortgagor made himself liable for reasonable improvements by the mortgagee, it was held that this condition did not justify the demolition and rebuilding of a house at a cost equal to several times the mortgage-debt (6) But where, under the terms of the mortgage, the mortgagor expressly agrees to pay at the time of redemption the costs of construction of any new building which the mortgagee may erect upon the mortgaged property after demolition of the old building, it has been held that the mortgagee would be entitled to such costs at the time of redemption even though the costs incurred are several times the mortgage-debt (7) The stipulation that the mortgagor shall pay the costs of 'shakasht' (breakage), and 'rekhat' (destruction) cannot be taken to mean that the mortgagor thereby binds himself to pay the expenses which the mortgagee may incur in breaking or demolishing the mortgaged property and then in rebuilding the same. Reasonably interpreted, the stipulation only means that the mortgagor takes upon himself to pay the costs of repairs or rebuilding in case of breakage or destruction, which are due to natural deterioration or by some other act of nature beyond the control of the mortgagee and not undertaken by him at his own initiative and out of his own sweet will (8) Where the mortgagor agree in the mortgage-deed that if the mortgagee constructed wells on the land he would recoup the mortgagee the costs thereof but the mortgagee after having constructed wells in a portion of the property purchased such portion himself. It was held that the contract did not contemplate the mortgagee himself purchasing the land and that it would be inequitable to allow the mortgagee to have the benefit of the wells and also to claim the costs thereof from the mortgagor (9) Where under the contract between the parties the mortgagor is not entitled to the improvements and the improvements are such that they cannot be severed from the land, the mortgagor must be held liable for the costs of the improvements as he will have the benefit of them (10)

The fact that the mortgagor did not object to the mortgagee constructing a house on the mortgaged property will not show that the property cannot be redeemed unless the amount spent by the mortgagee is also paid (11).

11. AIR 1956 Bhopal 13 (14)

5. The mortgagor shall be liable to pay the proper costs thereof.

The expression "mortgagor" would include his representatives (See section 59-A). A purchaser from the mortgagor must pay the mortgagee the costs of the improvements if he claims possession of the property as it stands(1). The mortgagor is liable to pay only those costs of improvements which have been properly and reasonably incurred(2). "Proper cost" means actual expenses or costs incurred for effecting improvements(3). Even in the case of natural decay or destruction of the mortgaged property by some unforeseen calamity, the expenditure on its repairs or rebuilding should be reasonable. What constitutes a proper and necessary expenditure is a question of fact depending upon the circumstances of each case. Among other things regard must be had to the nature, situation and value of the property mortgaged, financial condition and position of the mortgagor, the amount that he could and would have himself spent under the circumstances and the bona fide intentions of the mortgagee(4).

Where a person continues in possession as mortgagee he can repair the property keep the property in good condition. But he cannot effect constructions thereon. If he does so it is at his own risk and the mortgagors are not liable for expenses(5).

The statutory right of mortgagee to get proper cost is only the right to get out of pocket expenses incurred by him for effecting improvements and not the value or compensation for improvements(6).

In two cases before the introduction of this section, the question was raised before the Bombay High Court as to whether a person on whom the mortgage was not binding was liable to pay compensation to the mortgagee for improvements. In the undermentioned case(7) where the mortgagee from a Hindu widow for no necessity, effected improvements on the mortgaged property it was held that he was not entitled to claim from the reversioner any amount for the costs of the improvements. It was further held that the mortgagor could not even remove the materials of the building he had erected. In a later case(8), however, it was held that the reversioner would not be entitled to the improvements unless he compensated the mortgagee therefor, and that if the reversioner did not wish to make the compensation the mortgagee was entitled to remove the building erected by him.

The law of landlord and tenant and mortgagor and mortgagee in Travancore does not restrict the freedom of parties to make contracts regarding the cost of improvement. Value can be fixed either before or after the improvements. Where all the stipulated improvements have not been effected, the mortgagee is not entitled to claim more than the rateable proportion of the amount provided for in the mortgage deed. The mortgagee cannot disregard the directions of the mortgagor and effect such improvements, as in his wisdom he deems fit, and claim compensation for them. If the mortgagor does not wish to pay for them, the mortgagee is entitled to remove the material(9) (See also Note 9).

Where the parties have agreed as to how the improvements have to be valued and paid for at the time of redemption, the rights of the parties in regard to their contractual relationship have to be respected, even though it is at variance with the general rule relating to the value of the improvements. The improvements have to be valued at the time of redemption on the terms previously agreed upon, though such redemption is long after the expiry of the period fixed(10).

There is no justification for restricting the value of improvements payable to the usufructuary mortgagee to the amount advanced under the mortgage(11).

It has been held that full compensation should not be given for improvements in the shape of trees on non-warg lands like kumki in South Kanara(12).

Where the mortgagee of a garden plants substitute trees for those lost by age, he cannot claim, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, compensation for them on the expiry of the mortgage(13). This is in conformity with his liability to return the property back to the mortgagor on redemption in the same condition in which he received it. Section applies only when there is no contract between the parties. In absence of an agreement the question whether the mortgagor has to pay for the improvements will depend on whether the claim of the mortgagee comes within the term of the section and if there is an agreement it prevails over the section. But a mortgagee ought not to be allowed to improve the mortgagor out of his estate. The question whether the agreement in question amounts to a clog on redemption may be decided on facts(14). (See S. 76 Note 10)

The recovery of costs being exceptional the burden lay strictly upon the mortgagee. In absence of foundation laid upon facts, there can be no question of the Court awarding any sum to the mortgagee under S. 63-A(15).

6. "As an addition to the principal money".

Before this section was introduced it was held that the costs of improvement cannot be brought under the expression "amount due on the mortgage" within the meaning of S. 83(1). The provision in this section that the costs of the improvement are to be regarded as an addition to the principal money(2) now makes it clear that such costs will be included in "the amount due on the mortgage".

7. Interest on costs.

In a case before this section was introduced their Lordships of the Privy Council disallowed interest on the costs of improvement(1). See also the undermentioned cases(2). The section now makes it quite clear that the mortgagee is entitled to interest on the costs of the improvement in cases where such costs are allowable to him under sub-section (2)(3). Where the mortgage deed made an express provision for the payment of the cost of improvements, by the mortgagor and there was no stipulation as to payment of interest on the cost, it was held that there was contract to the contrary and interest on the money spent on the improvements was not payable by the mortgagor(4). Where the mortgagor agreed to pay interest on the costs but the rate of interest was not fixed it was held in the undermentioned case(5), which was decided prior to the introduction of this section, that the intention of the parties was that reasonable interest should be charged and not at the rate at which it was to be paid on the principal. Under the present section this decision cannot be good law.

See also the undermentioned case(6) which was also decided prior to the enactment of this section.

In a complete usufructuary or partially complete usufructuary mortgage cost of improvement does not bear interest for obvious reasons, the usufruct is supposed to wipe out all interest and the principal sum of the debt does not bear any interest either. But where the mortgage is not of the above type and the mortgagee is in possession and according to the document accounts of usufruct, expenses and interest have to be taken and interest on the cost of improvements have to be calculated, care should be taken to see that interest on interest is not taken in any form directly or indirectly. Costs of improvements have first to be deducted from gross produce and balance only applied to reduction of interest on debt(7).

8. Re-valuation of improvements at the time of execution of decree for redemption.

It has been held by the High Court of Madras in the undermentioned cases(1) that though a decree for redemption fixes the value of improvements made by the mortgagee, a revaluation of such improvements can be made at the time of execution of the decree if circumstances show that the value has increased or decreased subsequent to the decree. The decisions rest on the view that the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee continues notwithstanding the decree, until it is fully executed, and the mortgagor has right to ask for a revision of the amount awarded by the decree, if such revision is rendered necessary by events that have occurred since the decree.

A mortgagee is considered to be tenant under Travancore-Cochin Compensation for Tenants Improvement Act, 10 of 1956. The tenant on eviction is entitled to compensation for improvements made by him till an order of eviction is made against him. The order of eviction can be made only where mortgage money and value of improvements are deposited. The plea that relationship of mortgagor-mortgagee comes to an end on payment of mortgage money and so for improvements made thereafter mortgagee cannot get compensation is not tenable(2)

3. "Obtains a renewal."

The fact that the mortgagee was forced to renew the lease and that there was no collusion between him and the landlord does not prevent the application of the section(1)

The section must be applied so as not to conflict with S 9 of the Agra Rent Act (12 of 1881) and S 20 of the Agra Tenancy Act (2 of 1901).(2) Where an occupancy tenant had made a usufructuary mortgage of his holding, there being an arrangement between himself and the mortgagees as to the payment of rent and the rent fell into arrears, in consequence of which the landlord determined the tenancy and ejected the tenants and granted a new lease to the mortgagees, it was held that the mortgagor's attempt to treat the new lease as one for his benefit was really asking in effect for the transfer of the lease to himself, that this was prohibited by S. 9 of the Agra Rent Act, 1881, and that the mortgagor could not get the benefit of the lease(3).

Continued existence of relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee is essential in the application of Section 64 and Section 90, Trusts Act. With the extinction of the lease on the passing of a decree for eviction the mortgage created by the lessee comes to an end and subsequent lease obtained by the mortgagee does not attract Section 64. Therefore, the suit for redemption in such case is not tenable(4).

A mortgagee continuing in possession after the mortgage is extinguished by payment cannot be said to be adverse to the mortgagor(5).

4. Contract to the contrary.

The mortgagor can claim the benefit of the renewed lease, only if there is no contract to the contrary. In the absence of any such contract the section says that the mortgagor shall be entitled to the renewed lease. In the undermentioned case(1) Mookerjee, Acting C.J., however, expressed the opinion following English decisions that there is only a presumption that the mortgagee acquires the renewal of the lease for the mortgagor's benefit, that such presumption might be rebutted, and that where a new lease was obtained bona fide by the mortgagee after giving all parties interested notice and an opportunity of renewal, such new lease is not for the benefit of the mortgagor. It is submitted that this view is against the terms of the section.

5. Mortgagee of land obtaining re-settlement from Government in his favour.

In Khizarajmal v. Daim(1) their Lordships of the Privy Council observed that the renewal by the mortgagee of the patta for the mortgaged land or the making of a new settlement with the Government does not alter the real title to the land and that the mortgagor will be entitled to redeem the land so settled. The same principle will apply where the mortgaged land is inam land and is resumed by the Government. Where an inam land is resumed, the resumption has merely the effect of converting the land from a service tenure into land liable to pay assessment to Government. The mortgagor is, therefore, entitled to the land on redemption(2).

6. Costs of renewal.

This section does not say anything about the liability of the mortgagor to pay the costs of renewal of the mortgaged lease. Under the English law, such costs must be paid by the mortgagor with interest,(1) such interest being regulated by the interest payable on the money originally lent (2)

65. IMPLIED CONTRACTS BY MORTGAGOR.— In the absence of a contract to the contrary, the mortgagor shall be deemed to contract with the mortgagee—

- (a) that the interest which the mortgagor professes to transfer to the mortgagee subsists, and that the mortgagor has power to transfer the same,
- (b) that the mortgagor will defend, or, if the mortgagee be in possession of the mortgaged property, enable him to defend the mortgagor's title thereto;
- (c) that the mortgagor will, so long as the mortgagee is not in possession of the mortgaged property, pay all public charges accruing due in respect of the property;
- (d) and, where the mortgaged property is a lease ^B[* * *], that the rent payable under the lease, the conditions contained therein, and the contracts binding on the lessee have been paid, performed and observed down to the commencement of the mortgage; and that the mortgagor will, so long as the security exists and the mortgagee is not in possession of the mortgaged property, pay the rent reserved by the lease, or, if the lease be renewed, the renewed lease, perform the conditions contained therein and observe the contracts binding on the lessee, and indemnify the mortgagee against all claims sustained by reason of the non-payment of the said rent or the non-performance or non-observance of the said conditions and contracts,
- (e) and, where the mortgage is a second or subsequent incumbrance on the property, that the mortgagor will pay the interest from time to time accruing due on each prior incumbrance as and when it becomes due, and will at the proper time discharge the principal money due on such prior incumbrance

The benefit of the contracts mentioned in this section shall be annexed to and shall go with the interest of the mortgagee as such, and may be enforced by every person in whom that interest is for the whole or any part thereof from time to time vested.

[A] The words "for a term of years" were omitted by the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, 1929 (20 of 1929), S. 29.

[B] Words "nothing in clause (c) or clause (d) so far as it relates to the payment of future rent applies in the case of usufructuary mortgage" omitted, ibid.

The provisions in cls (a) and (d) of this section correspond to the provisions of S 7 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict., C. 41), now reproduced in S 76, subsection (1), cls. (c) and (d) respectively of the Law of Property Act, 1925 (15 Geo V, Ch. 20), which runs as follows :

"Section 76 (1) In a conveyance there shall, in the several cases in this section mentioned, be deemed to be included, and there shall in those several cases, by virtue of this Act, be implied, a covenant to the effect in this section stated, by the person or by each person who conveys, as far as regards the subject-matter or share of subject-matter expressed to be conveyed by him, with the person, if one, to whom the conveyance is made, or with the persons jointly if more than one, to whom the conveyance is made as joint tenants, or with each of the persons if more than one, to whom the conveyance is (when the law permits) made as tenants in common, that is to say

(c) In a conveyance by way of mortgage (including a charge) a covenant by a person who conveys or charges and is expressed to convey or charge as beneficial owner in the terms set out in Part III of the Second Schedule to this Act;

[Note.— The relevant provision in Part III of the Second Schedule to the above Act is as follows :—

"That the person who so conveys has, with the concurrence of every other person, if any, conveying by his direction, full power to convey the subject-matter expressed to be conveyed by him, subject as, if so expressed, and in the manner in which it is expressed to be conveyed"]

(d) In a conveyance by way of mortgage (including a charge) of freehold property subject to a rent or of leasehold property, a further covenant by a person who conveys or charges and is expressed to convey or charge as beneficial owner in the terms set out in Part IV of the Second Schedule to this Act;

[Note.— The provisions of Part IV of the Second Schedule to the above Act are as follows

"That the lease or grant, creating the term or estate for which the land is held, is at the time of conveyance, a good, valid, and effectual lease . . . and that all the rents reserved by, and all the covenants, conditions, and agreements contained in, the lease or grant, and on the part of the lessee or grantee and the persons deriving title under him to be paid, observed, and performed, have been paid, observed, and performed up to the time of conveyance .

And also that the person so conveying, or the persons deriving title under him, will at all times, as long as any money remains owing on the security of the conveyance, pay, observe, and perform, or cause to be paid, observed, and performed all the rents reserved by, and all the covenants, conditions, and agreements contained, in, the lease or grant, and on the part of the lessee or grantee and the persons deriving title under him to be paid, observed, and performed, and will keep the person to whom the conveyance is made, and those deriving title under him indemnified against all actions, proceedings, costs, charges, damages, claims and demands, if any, to be incurred or sustained by him or them by reason of the non-payment of such rent or the non-observance or non-performance of such covenants, conditions, and agreements, or any of them."

The last clause of the section exactly corresponds to S. 76 (6) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, which runs as follows

"The benefit of a covenant implied as aforesaid shall be annexed and incident to, and shall go with, the estate or interest of the implied covenantee, and shall be capable of being enforced by every person in whom that estate or interest is, for the whole or any part thereof, from time to time vested."

2. Legislative changes.

By the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, XX of 1929, the words "for a term of years" occurring in clause (d) were omitted as they were found to be unnecessary. The penultimate paragraph of the old section which provided that nothing in clauses (c) and (d) so far as it related to the payment of rent, applied in the case of usufructuary mortgages, was also omitted. The reasons for such omission have been given by the Special Committee as follows :

"This section relates to the implied covenants by a mortgagor, and provides in the penultimate paragraph that covenants regarding payment of public charges and future rent in the case of leasehold property do not apply in the case of a usufructuary mortgage. This provision is not clear. Covenants specified in the section are binding on a mortgagor in consequence of his obligation to preserve the mortgage security. No sufficient reason is apparent why, in the case of a usufructuary mortgage when possession is not delivered to the mortgagee, the mortgagor should not be under a duty to pay the public charges and future rent. It appears from the purpose underlying the Act that the provision at present contained in this paragraph was first introduced in Bill IV of 1879, when clauses (c) and (d) did not contain the words 'so long as the mortgagee was not in possession'. In the case of a usufructuary mortgage, if the mortgagor has not put the mortgagee in possession, it is as much his duty as it is in the case of any other mortgage to preserve the property on the security of which he has obtained a loan. The words 'so long as the mortgagee was not in possession' were added in sub-clauses (c) and (d) of section 65 in the final Bill, but apparently through inadvertence this paragraph was not omitted."

3. Scope of the section.

This section enacts that in the absence of a contract to the contrary certain contracts shall be implied in every transaction of mortgage, and that the benefit of such implied contract shall be annexed to, and go with the mortgagee's interest, and shall be enforceable by every person in whom such interest is, for the whole or any part thereof from time to time, vested.

Such contracts cannot, however, be said to be "covenants running with the land" (1) But a single Judge of the Calcutta High Court, has, in the undermentioned case, expressed a contrary view (2) As to the meaning of the expression "covenants running with the land", see Notes on S. 40.

The section does not apply to mortgages executed before the Act. Where a mortgage was executed in 1880 and the mortgagor lost his title to a portion of the property subsequently, it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the mortgagee could not claim any damages by reason of the diminution of his security (3)

4. Clause (a).

This clause provides for a statutory covenant for title similar to the one contained in S. 55 sub-section (2) with respect to sales. A breach of the covenant will occur where the mortgagor's title or his power to transfer the interest is found to be defective. The consequence of such a breach is not to render the mortgage itself void, (1) but merely to give rise to a right in the mortgagee to claim the reliefs referred to in Note 10.

It has been held in the undermentioned case (2) that the warranty of title contained in this clause, includes a warranty of quiet enjoyment. (As to the meaning of covenant for quiet enjoyment, see S. 55, Note 9.)

The right of the mortgagee on the implied contract under this clause must be distinguished from the doctrine of estoppel that may be applicable between the mortgagor and the mortgagee. As known to the mortgagee, in which case also there is no estoppel (6) See also the undermentioned cases(7).

But independent of any question of estoppel if as a matter of fact the title of the mortgagor is found to be defective the mortgagee will, by virtue of this clause, be entitled to claim compensation for breach of the implied contract. (See Note 10.)

The failure to disclose at the time of the mortgage the existence of a prior incumbrance is, according to the High Court of Calcutta, a breach of an obligation imposed by cl (a) of this section (8) A contrary view, namely that the mortgagor is not bound to disclose any prior incumbrances on the property has been expressed by the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur (9) It is submitted that this last view is not correct. Where a person professes to transfer an unincumbered interest in property, he clearly commits a breach of the implied contract, referred to in cl (a), if there is a prior incumbrance on the property.

It has been held by the High Court of Madras that the mere fact that the mortgagee had knowledge of the defect of title does not affect his right under this clause (10) It was observed by Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in the case cited that the mortgagee's "statutory right given by the breach of the covenant attached to the mortgage transaction under S. 65, Act IV of 1882, cannot be taken away except by an express release of such rights by the mortgagee or by acquiescence of such a very long duration that the release can be safely presumed" The High Court of Andhra Pradesh has also taken the same view (11) A contrary view that the mortgagee cannot, if he was aware of the defect of title at the time of mortgage, get any relief on the implied contract under cl (a) has been held in the undermentioned case (12) It is submitted that the fact that the mortgagee and the mortgagor were both aware of the defect in the title would be sufficient to show a "contract to the contrary" such as would prevent the implied contract under cl (a) from coming into existence at all.

(A) Breach of covenant when occurs.

Where the mortgagor has power to transfer the property on the date of the sale but the transaction is voidable at the instance of a third person, a breach of the implied contract for title will take place when such transaction is avoided by such third person and not on the date of the mortgage itself (13) (For a full discussion of the subject, see S. 55, Note 9.)

5. Clause (b).

This clause is only a legislative recognition of the principle that had been recognised even before the passing of this Act that a mortgagor was bound under the ordinary law of mortgage to indemnify the estate against expenses incurred in protecting the title(1).

A breach of the implied contract under this clause occurs when the mortgagor being in possession does not defend his title, or when the mortgagee is in possession, the mortgagor fails to assist him in defending the title. As to the remedy of the mortgagee on breach of this implied contract, see Note 10.

6. Clause (c).

The implied contract under this clause is that the mortgagor will, so long as the mortgagee is not in possession of the mortgaged property, pay all public charges accruing due in respect of the property. The clause does not apply where the mortgagee is in possession of the mortgaged property. Under S. 76, clause (c) it is the duty of the mortgagee himself in such a case to pay such charges from out of the income of the property.

A mortgagor commits a breach of the implied contract under this clause when he fails to pay any public charges accruing due in respect of the property. As to the remedies of the mortgagee in respect of such breach, see Note 10.

7. Clause (d).

Under S. 108, clause (j) a lessee may mortgage his lease hold interest, but the lessee will not, by reason of such mortgage, cease to be subject to any of the liabilities attaching to the lease. The consequence of non-payment of rent, the non-performance of the conditions and non-observance of the contracts binding on the lessee being the forfeiture or the determination of the lease with consequent loss to the mortgagee, this clause provides against such loss by enacting that the lessee (mortgagor) shall be deemed to contract with the mortgagee that the rent payable under the lease, the conditions contained therein and the contracts binding on the lessee have been paid performed and observed down to the commencement of the mortgage, and that the mortgagor will, so long as the security subsists, pay the rent etc., and indemnify the mortgagee against loss by reason of his default in doing so. Under S. 71 where the mortgagor obtains a renewal of the lease, the mortgagee is entitled to the security of the new lease and this clause, consequently, provides that the implied contract extends to the payment of rent, etc., of the renewed lease also.

The first part of the clause applies whether the mortgaged property is in the possession of the mortgagee or not. The second part of the clause relating to the payment of rent, etc., after the commencement of the mortgage applies only so long as the mortgagee is not in possession. A mortgagee in possession must, under S. 76, Cl. (c) pay out of the income of the property, all rent accruing due during such possession and also arrears of rent in default of payment of which the property may be summarily sold.

As to the remedies of the mortgagee on breach of the implied contract by the mortgagor, see Note 10.

8. Clause (e)

This clause places the obligation of redeeming prior mortgage on the mortgagor. As to the remedies of the mortgagee in case of a breach of this implied contract by the mortgagor, see Note 10.

Also see S. 72, Note 4.

9. "In the absence of a contract to the contrary."

An implied contract under this section arises only if there is no contract to the contrary. A contract to the contrary may be express or implied. In the undermentioned case(1) the contract which was alleged to have been broken was one to be implied by reason of clause (a) of this section. The mortgagee in that case knew all the circumstances when he took his mortgage and it was held on the fact of the case that there was an implied understanding between the parties that there should be no such contract as is referred to in clause (a) of this section.

10. Remedies of mortgagee on breach of the implied contracts under this section.

In respect of every one of the contracts referred to in the various clauses of the section the mortgagee has of course the general remedy, by way of damages under S. 73 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872.(1) This right to claim damages is not in any way taken away by S. 68 of the T.P. Act (2). The mortgagee has also other remedies open to him which may however, vary according to the particular clause of this section under which the implied contract falls.

(A) Contract falling under clause (a).

A breach of the implied contract referred to in this clause will be "default on the part of the mortgagor" by which the security is rendered insufficient within the meaning of S. 68, clause (b) and will entitle the mortgagee to sue for the mortgage-money (3). A mortgagee suing for damages for breach of the covenant of title is entitled to interest on the sum advanced by him (4). But though a usufructuary mortgagee who brings a suit for recovery of mortgage-money on the ground of want of title in the mortgagor is entitled to a decree on the basis of a personal covenant in the mortgage-deed he is not entitled to interest on the amount decreed so long as he continues in possession (5).

(B) Contract falling under clause (b).

Under S. 72, clause (c) the mortgagee may spend the necessary amount for defending the mortgagor's title to the property and add such amount to the mortgage-money. He may also if the property is lost by reason of the default of the mortgagor under this clause, sue the mortgagor for the mortgage-money under S. 68, clause (c).

(C) Contract falling under clause (c).

Under S 72, clause (b) the mortgagee may spend the necessary amount for payment of the public charges and add the amount so spent to the principal money(6) or independent of that section, claim to be reimbursed under S 69 of the Contract Act.(7) If the property is sold away and thus lost to the mortgagee by reason of the default of the mortgagor, the mortgagee can treat the surplus sale proceeds as substituted security and claim payment of the mortgage-money from out of it, or he can sue the mortgagor for such money under section 68, clause (c). If a mortgagor commits default in his duty under S 65(c) to pay the public charges due on the property in his possession and the land is sold or resumed by the Government for arrears of revenue and the mortgagor subsequently reacquires his original interest in the land, the original mortgagee is not extinguished(8)

(D) Contract falling under clause (d).

In this case also the mortgagee may under S 72, cl. (b) spend the necessary amount himself and add it to the principal money or may sue the mortgagor for reimbursement under S. 69 of the Contract Act, or, if the property has been lost by reason of the default for the mortgage-money under S. 68, cl. (c).

(E) Contract falling under clause (e).

In this case also the mortgagee will have a remedy under S 72, cl. (b) and S. 68, cl. (c) of this Act(9) and S 69 of the Contract Act(10). In addition he can claim subrogation rights under S 92 of this Act.(11) Where a puisne mortgagee of property obtained a decree for sale after redemption of prior incumbrances and the property was put up for sale after redemption of prior incumbrances but the sum realised was not sufficient even to cover prior incumbrances, it was held in the undermentioned case(12) that having regard to this section the puisne mortgagee was entitled to claim a personal decree under S 90 of the Act (now O 34, R 6 of the Code of Civil Procedure) for the amount due to him including the amount paid by him for redemption.

or if they are dead, then by or against their legal representatives (1) It cannot be enforced by or against third persons even though such third persons may be transferees of property from the contracting parties(2).

The last paragraph of this section is one of the exceptions to the said general rule and provides that the benefit of the contracts referred to in the section shall go with the mortgagee's interest. It does not say anything as to the burden of such covenants. Consequently while the benefit of a contract implied by this section can be claimed by the mortgagee and by persons to whom such mortgage interest may have been transferred, the general rule will apply in respect of the burden of the contract. Consequently, the implied contract cannot be enforced except against the mortgagor or his legal representatives. In Renga Srinivasa Chari v. Gnanaprakasa Mudaliar (3) it was held by the High Court of Madras that a contract implied by this section could not be enforced against a purchaser of the equity of redemption at a revenue sale. In Punugu Subbiah v. Ramireddi (4) it was held by the same High Court that a person who has acquired the equity of redemption by adverse possession could not be said to derive any title through the mortgagor and could not be proceeded against on an implied contract by the mortgagor under this section. Their Lordships did not decide whether the contract can be enforced against persons deriving title from the mortgagor but it was pointed out that according to the authorities in England, a covenant will not affect an assignee from the covenantor unless he is named in the contract (i.e., unless he is a party to the contract). In Syed Ibrahim v. Arumugathavee (5) where a covenant by the mortgagor was not one under this section, it was held by the same High Court, that such covenant could not be enforced against a subsequent incumbrancer of the mortgaged property. In the undermentioned case (6) however, it has been held by the Chief Court of Lower Burma that an implied contract under this section is enforceable against the purchaser of the mortgaged property from the mortgagor. It is submitted that this view is not correct.

The question arises, however, whether S. 59-A newly inserted in this Act by the amending Act of 1929 affects in any way the position as stated above. If that section applies the word "mortgagor" would include persons deriving title from him, and so the contract can be enforced against a transferee of the equity of redemption. It is submitted, however, that, in view of the express provision in the last paragraph of the section that the benefit of the contract will run with the mortgagee's interest and the absence of a corresponding provision that the burden of the contracts will run with the mortgagor's interest, it must be held that there is an "express provision to the contrary" within the meaning of S. 59-A, rendering it inapplicable to this section.

In order that a person may be entitled to the benefit of contracts referred to in the section the contract, i.e., the mortgage, must be subsisting and alive(7).

^[65A. MORTGAGOR'S POWER TO LEASE^B.— (1) Subject to the provisions of sub-section (2), a mortgagor, while lawfully in possession of the mortgaged property, shall have power to make leases thereof which shall be binding on the mortgagee.

(2) (a) Every such lease shall be such as would be made in the ordinary course of management of the property concerned, and in accordance with any local law, custom or usage.

(b) Every such lease shall reserve the best rent that can reasonably be obtained, and no premium shall be paid or promised and no rent shall be payable in advance.

(c) No such lease shall contain a covenant for renewal.

(d) Every such lease shall take effect from a date not later than six months from the date on which it is made.

(e) In the case of a lease of buildings, whether leased with or without the land on which they stand, the duration of the lease shall in no case exceed three years, and the lease shall contain a covenant for payment of the rent and a condition of re-entry on the rent not being paid within a time therein specified.

(3) The provisions of sub-section (1) apply only if and as far as a contrary intention is not expressed in the mortgage deed; and the provisions of sub-section (2) may be varied or extended by the mortgage-deed and, as so varied and extended, shall, as far as may be, operate in like manner and with all like incidents, effects and consequences, as if such variations or extensions were contained in that sub-section.]

1. Scope of the section.

This section makes it quite clear that a mortgagor in lawful possession has a right to lease the mortgaged property and lays down the conditions which are to be satisfied if the lease is to be binding on the mortgagee(1).

Prior to the enactment of this section by the Amending Act of 1929, the mortgagor's power to lease the mortgaged property was the subject-matter of conflicting judicial decisions. Three different views have been expressed by the Courts in India upon this question. Relying upon the rule of

English Common Law under which the mortgagor had no power to lease(2) it was held in some cases(3) that a mortgagor could not ordinarily, without the concurrence of the mortgagee express or implied, execute a lease which could be binding on the mortgagee. In other cases (4) a distinction was drawn between English mortgages and other mortgages and it was considered that the mortgagor in India remained the owner and, when in possession, could prima facie exercise the rights of ownership inclusive of the power to grant leases of the mortgaged property. The question was decided with reference to S 66 and it was held that the mortgagor could grant leases which were not wasteful in their effect on the mortgagee's security. This line of reasoning was not adopted in other cases(5) which laid down a different rule, viz. that a mortgagor in possession might grant a lease conformable to usage in the ordinary course of management but was not competent to grant a lease in a manner or for a purpose different from the mode in which he himself had used it before he granted the mortgage.

This question is now set at rest by the decision of the Supreme Court in Kamakshya Narayan Singh Bahadur v. Chohan Ram (16). After considering the lines of reasoning of the conflicting views noted above, it approved the last view as the correct one, governing the question and disapproved of the other two views. The true position, therefore, according to the Supreme Court, under the law as it stood prior to the enactment of this section, was that the question had to be determined with reference to the authority of the mortgagor as the bailiff or agent for the mortgagee to deal with the property in the usual course of management. It had to be determined on general principles and not on the distinction between an English mortgage and a simple mortgage or on considerations germane to S 66. The view expressed in Kamakshya Narayan Singh Bahadur's case has been reaffirmed by the Supreme Court in Mangru v. Thakur Taraknathji(7)

In Kamakshya Narayan Singh Bahadur v. Chohan Ram,(8) the Supreme Court considered the old Calcutta case of Banee Persad v. Reet Bhunjan Singh.(9) The Calcutta case was considered by Jenkins, C.J. in Balmukund v. Motilal(10) as an authority for the proposition that as long as nothing took place which impaired the value or impeded the operation of the mortgage, the mortgagor in creating a temporary lease acted within his powers. This was the line of reasoning of the second view discussed above. The Supreme Court found that the question of sufficiency or insufficiency of the security was not really gone into but the Calcutta High Court considered that the lease was granted in good faith, was for a limited term and stipulated a fair and reasonable rent and it was, therefore, operative against the mortgagee. The case according to the Supreme Court, therefor was really no authority for the wide proposition for which it was claimed as an authority.

It was this conflict of decisions which was sought to be resolved by the enactment of this section, and the Legislature too has, in substance, in enacting this section, given effect to the third view,(11) now approved by the Supreme Court.

The provisions of sub-sec (2) lay down the conditions subject to which the mortgagor in possession can make leases which will be binding on the mortgagee.

As will be seen in Note 2, this section is not retrospective. Where, therefore, the mortgage is executed before the introduction of this section, the question whether the lease granted by the mortgagor in lawful possession is binding on the mortgagee would be governed by the law laid down by the Supreme Court in Kamakshya Narayan Singh Bahadur's case and Mangru Mahto's case. But where the mortgage is executed after the introduction of this section, the binding character of the lease must be decided having regard to the provisions of this section.

Section 66 is a statutory enactment of the powers of the mortgagor in possession in regard to waste of mortgaged property. This section, therefore, as seen already, has no application to the grant of a lease by the mortgagor in possession(12)

Where the lease granted by the mortgagor is not binding on the mortgagee, the right of the mortgagee is merely to cause the mortgaged property to be sold for the payment of his debt but he cannot eject the lessee (13). But if the property is sold or foreclosed by the mortgagee, the interest of the lessee which the mortgagor has created since the mortgage would be destroyed.(14) It does not, however, follow that a lessee from the mortgagor under a lease which is not binding on the mortgagee acquires no interest whatever in the property demised to him. A person taking a lease from a mortgagor after the mortgage acquires an interest in the equity of redemption and can claim to redeem on that footing.(15) (See S 91, Note 12) (See also Note 7)

15. AIR 1967 SC 1390 (1394) : (1967) 3 SCR 125. (If such a lease is created before the institution of a suit relating to the mortgage the lessee must be joined as a party to a suit under O. 34, R. 1, Civil P.C., otherwise he will not be bound by the decree passed in the suit and will continue to retain his right of redemption — But if the mortgagor grants such a lease during the pendency of a suit for sale by the mortgagee the lessee is bound by the result of the litigation. If the property is sold in execution of the decree passed in the suit,

Where a compromise decree was passed in suit by mortgagees to enforce their rights and the property was put to auction sale, the auction-purchaser would be entitled to only symbolic possession when the property was in possession of persons claiming to be tenants as inducted by mortgagees prior to the date of confirmation of sale or date on which sale certificate was issued. Neither auction-purchasers were parties to mortgage nor the tenants. They were not in occupation as judgment-debtors or on behalf of judgment-debtors(16)

2. Retrospective operation of the section.

The section was inserted in the Act by S. 30 of the T.P. (Amendment) Act, 1929 which came into force on 1-4-1930. By S. 63 of the Amending Act of 1929 this section has been declared not to be retrospective in its operation. It will not, therefore, apply to cases where the mortgage was executed before the date of the introduction of this section,(1) and this would be so even if the lease itself has been executed subsequent to that date(2).

3. "While lawfully in possession."

A lease by a mortgagor who is not in possession of the mortgaged property at the time he grants the lease, is not binding on the mortgagee under this section (1). Suppose now that the mortgage is a possessory one, but the mortgagee not having taken possession, the mortgagor remains in possession and during such time he executes a lease. Is such a lease binding on the mortgagee? The possession of the mortgagor under the above circumstances cannot be said to be ipso facto unlawful(2) but it is submitted that the lease would nevertheless not be binding on the mortgagee for the reason that it cannot be said to have been made "in the course of management of the property". In a possessory mortgage, the mortgagor has no right to manage the property at all, except as an agent of the mortgagee, and a lease made in the exercise of a non-existent right of management cannot be said to be "in the course of management of the property" within the meaning of this section. In the English case of Reynolds v Ashby & Son(3) (a case of an English mortgage), it was observed by Romer, L.J. :

"It would be very dangerous if anything like a general authority to the mortgagor to deal with or affect the mortgaged property could be implied from the fact that the mortgagee has not taken possession of it."

In a case arising before the introduction of this section(4) Mr. Justice Ghose of the Calcutta High Court observed :

"Whatever may be the rights of a mortgagor under a simple mortgage to grant leases in the usual course of management, there is considerable difficulty on the part of a mortgagor, who has created an English mortgage, to grant such a lease as this. Such a mortgagor can only act as agent on behalf of the mortgagee, and without the concurrence of the mortgagee such a lease cannot be binding on the mortgagee."

This section will not apply where the mortgagor is in possession as a lessee from the mortgagee and creates a sub-lease in that capacity (5) It is S 108, cl. (g) that will govern such a transaction.

Sub-section (1) read as a whole can lead to no other interpretation except that the mortgaged property should have been leased by the mortgagor as such and not by some person holding the property as a tenant(6).

4. Sub-section (2), clause (a) — "In the ordinary course of management."

As seen, prior to the enactment of this section, a mortgagor in possession could grant a lease conformable to usage in the ordinary course of management but was not competent to grant a lease on unusual terms or authorise the use of land in a manner or for a purpose different from the mode in which he himself had used it before he granted the mortgage. Consequently if the mortgagor, after he had granted the mortgage, dealt with the property in the usual course of management the interest created by him was deemed operative against the mortgagee. But a lease granted by the mortgagor out of the ordinary course of management was not binding on the mortgagee.(1) Clause (a) of sub-section (2) of this section gives effect to this view (2)

The test to determine whether a lease granted by a mortgagor is a transaction in the ordinary course of management is, whether he would have granted the lease if he had known that he would continue indefinitely as a full owner of the property.(3) Whether a particular lease has been made in the ordinary course of management would depend upon the circumstances of the particular case. A mortgagor in possession may create a tenancy from year to year in the case of agricultural lands or from month to month in the case of houses. Such a lease would be conformable to the ordinary course of management (4) But the duration of the lease is not always the determining factor in deciding the question. A temporary lease of land would ordinarily be in the course of management(5) but not necessarily so. In the undermentioned case(6) a lease for three years was held, on the facts of the case, not to be in the ordinary course of management and not binding on the mortgagee. But, in another case,(7) having regard to the large extent of the land and the undertaking given by the lessees to bring the land under cultivation, a lease of seven years was held to be given in the ordinary course of management. Normally, a permanent lease with rent fixed in perpetuity is not sanctioned by the ordinary course of management.(8)

It is for the lessee, if he wants to resist the claim of the mortgagee, to establish that the lease in his favour was granted on usual terms in the course of management. The burden of proof in this matter is upon him. If he fails to raise that plea and establish it, he would have no defence to an action at the instance of mortgagee.(10)

See also the undermentioned case.(11)

5. Sub-section (2), clause (b) — "Shall reserve the best rent."

The question whether the rent reserved by the lease was the best rent that could reasonably be obtained, must be considered with reference to the condition of the property at the date of the lease. X mortgaged certain property to Y and thereafter granted a lease thereof to Z. X thereafter voluntarily expended money in improving the property which, in consequence, became capable of fetching a higher rent than that fixed in the lease. The mortgagee brought a suit for a declaration that the lease was void on the ground that the mortgagor had not reserved the best rent. In deciding the case in favour of the mortgagor Justice Luxmoore observed

"As I have said, there was no obligation on the mortgagor to spend any money on the property, and I do not think that the mortgagee is entitled to say that the rent is not the best rent reasonably obtainable for a particular property by reference to its condition as a result of voluntary expenditure at a date subsequent to the date of the lease in question" (1)

Section 65-A(2)(b) deals with covenants and terms of a lease executed by a mortgagor. It does not deal with any subsequent arrangement entered into by the mortgagor with the tenant of the mortgaged property regarding repayment of any loan which is not charged upon the property or which has no connection with the leasehold interest in the property (2)

5A. Sub-section (2), clause (c).

Where the tenants induced by mortgagee executed subsequent lease deeds during continuance of earlier leases, same amounted to implied surrender of earlier leases under S. 111(f). Such leases would determine after expiry of three years under S. 65-A(e) even though the period of lease stipulated in subsequent lease was 5 years.(1)

7. Sub-section (3) — Provisions of sub-sections (1) and (2) apply where there is no intention to the contrary expressed.

In two cases before the Act, it was held by the High Court of Allahabad that where there was a condition against alienation in a mortgage, a lease by the mortgagor would not be binding on the auction-purchaser in execution of the mortgage decree.(1) On the other hand, it was held by the Calcutta High Court that a covenant against alienation in a mortgage bond was personal one and that a lease by the mortgagor was not void against the auction-purchaser(2), though it was not binding on the mortgagee himself.(3)

The power of the mortgagor under sub-s. (1) does not exist if there is an intention to the contrary expressed in the mortgage document and the provisions of sub-s (2) themselves may be varied and extended by the terms of the mortgage deed.

Where there is a contrary intention expressed in the mortgage deed, and the mortgagor nevertheless grants a lease of the mortgaged property, the lease is, under the section, not binding on the mortgagee. Thus, where, under the terms of the contract of mortgage, the mortgagee was entitled to take possession of the property on default of payment by the mortgagor, a lessee from the mortgagor cannot resist possession being taken by the mortgagee on default (4) The lease is not ipso facto void, but is good except in so far as it prejudices and is in defeasance of the mortgagee's rights (5) Though the lease may not be binding on the mortgagee, as between the lessor and the lessee, the lessee is not entitled to say that the lessor had no power to grant the lease on the ground that he had not obtained the consent of the mortgagee in granting the lease as provided in the mortgage (6) Where the mortgagee stipulated not to transfer the mortgaged property by mortgage, sale etc., it was held that the covenant did not prohibit a leasing of the property (7)

1. Scope of the section.

This section is a statutory enactment of the powers of the mortgagor in possession in regard to waste of mortgaged property (1). The mortgagor in possession is not liable for what in terms of the English Law of Real Property is known as permissive waste, i.e. for omission to repair or to prevent natural deterioration. He is, however, liable for destructive waste, i.e. acts which are destructive or permanently injurious to the mortgaged property if the security was insufficient or would be rendered insufficient by such acts (2). Subject to the duty not to do any act which renders the security insufficient, the mortgagor as owner of the property is entitled to use and enjoy the property in any way he likes (3).

Prior to the decision of the Supreme Court in Kamakshya Narayan Singh v Chohan Ram (4), as seen in S 65-A, Note 1, under the law as it stood prior to the enactment of S 65A, the question as to whether a mortgagor in possession had the power to grant a lease of the mortgaged property so as to bind the mortgagee was decided in some cases (5) with reference to this section and it was held that the mortgagor could grant leases which were not wasteful in their effect on the mortgagee's security. The Supreme Court in Kamakshya Narayan Singh's case (6) disapproved of this line of reasoning and has held that this section has nothing to do with the mortgagor's power to lease the mortgaged property. (See S 65A, Note 1.)

2. Applicability of the principle of the section to the Punjab.

The principle of this section has been applied to cases arising in the Punjab as being in consonance with justice, equity and good conscience.(1)

3. Act not prohibited unless is destructive or permanently injurious to the property.

The section deals only with acts of 'waste' by the mortgagor in possession. It does not apply to other acts, though by reason of such acts, the security is rendered insufficient. As seen in Note 1, the mortgagor in possession is not liable for what in terms of the English Law of Real Property is known as permissive waste that is, for omission to repair or to prevent natural deterioration. He is however, liable for destructive waste, that is, acts which are destructive or permanently injurious to the mortgaged property if the security was insufficient or would be rendered insufficient by such acts.(1) In a case arising before the Act, it was held that the act of annual cutting and felling of wood in the mortgaged property, a forest, not inconsistent with good management, was neither destructive nor injurious to the property nor rendered the property insufficient in value (2) Under the present act standing timber is not included in the definition of "immovable property" and a mortgage of land is not, therefore, a mortgage of the timber standing thereon.(3) Where the mortgaged property is land which is used for periodically growing and cutting timber, the act of cutting the timber standing on the land cannot be said to be destructive or injurious to the mortgaged property. A mortgagor does not, therefore, do any act prohibited by this section in cutting the timber. But if the value of the mortgaged land is reduced to below the statutory minimum, the mortgagee has his remedy under S 68, clause (b). It has, however, been held in the undermentioned case(4) that though the mortgagor is entitled to cut and utilise standing timber, he will be liable in tort to the mortgagee if the value of the land is thereby reduced to below the statutory minimum. It is somewhat difficult to follow how a rightful act will give rise to an action in tort.

A mortgagor is entitled to make a second mortgage or sell the equity of redemption and cannot be restrained from doing that but he cannot be allowed to remove a part of the mortgaged property and sell it in the shape of movable property so as to jeopardise the interest of the mortgagee in the property for payment of mortgage debt. If a mortgagor declares his intention to remove the machinery which is part of the security and sell it he should be restrained from doing so. But if they want to make a second mortgage or sell it, they cannot be restrained(5).

4. Mortgagor including items not belonging to him in mortgage.

It has been held that the section deals with waste by the mortgagor(1) and that it has nothing to do with regard to land which the mortgagee though he had got under the mortgage but which he is found to have really not got (2) Thus, where the mortgagor included in his mortgage certain items to which he had no title and the security was thus found to be insufficient, it was held that the case was not within the section.(3) The expression 'must not commit any act' has reference obviously to acts committed subsequent to the mortgage and will not apply to a case like the one referred to above.

5. Lease by mortgagor.

See Notes on Section 65A.

6. Grant of easement by mortgagor.

Section 10 of the Easements Act, 1882, provides that a mortgagor may impose on the mortgaged property any easement that does not render the security insufficient and the explanation to that section is identical with the explanation to this section as to when a security is insufficient. It is not necessary under that Act that the grant of the easement should be destructive or permanently injurious to the mortgaged property. It is doubtful if S. 66 of this Act which deals with acts of waste can be applied to grants of easement rights by the mortgagor. But if such a grant can be considered to be, in particular circumstances, destructive or injurious to the property, as had been held in the cases of leases before the introduction of S. 65A, then the grant of easement will not be binding on the mortgagee under this section if the security is rendered insufficient thereby.

X mortgaged to Y a house together with a well. X afterwards granted an easement right in the well to his neighbour Z. The mortgagee Y, having purchased the mortgaged property in execution of the mortgage decree, objected to the use of the well by Z. It was held that the validity of the easement as against the mortgagee depended upon the question whether the grant of the easement rendered the security insufficient within the meaning of this section(1)

7. Onus of proof.

The onus of proof that a particular act of the mortgagor in possession was destructive or permanently injurious to the property and that thereby the value of the security has gone down below the statutory minimum is on the mortgagee (1). The contrary view which has been taken in the undermentioned cases(2) does not appear to be correct.

8. Remedy of mortgagee if mortgagor commits waste.

Where a mortgagor 'threatens' to commit acts which are destructive or permanently injurious to the property and which are likely to render the security insufficient under this section, the mortgagee may sue for an injunction restraining the mortgagor from committing such acts (1). He may, if such acts have been committed, maintain an action in tort for damages against the mortgagor for the depreciation of the mortgage security, if it can be shown that by reason of such acts the value of the mortgage security has been lowered below the statutory minimum (2). He may also sue for the recovery of the mortgage-money under S. 68, clause (c)(3). The mortgagee can also apply for 9. Explanation.

The rule that a security is insufficient unless in the case of a mortgage of buildings, the value thereof exceeds by one-half and in other cases, by one-third, the amount due on the mortgage has been recognised by the Legislature not only in this section but also in S. 20, clause (e) of the Trusts Act, 1882, and in S. 10 of the Easements Act, 1882.

Rights and Liabilities of Mortgagee

67. RIGHT TO FORECLOSURE OR SALE.—In the absence of a contract to the contrary, the mortgagee has, at any time after the mortgage-money has become ^A[due] to him, and before a decree has been made for the redemption of the mortgaged property, or the mortgage-money has been paid or deposited as hereinafter provided, a right to obtain from the Court ^B[a decree] that the mortgagor shall be absolutely debarred of his right to redeem the property or ^B[a decree] that the property be sold.

A suit to obtain ^B[a decree] that a mortgagor shall be absolutely debarred of his right to redeem the mortgaged property is called a suit for foreclosure.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed—

- ^C[(a) to authorize any mortgagee other than a mortgagee by conditional sale or a mortgagee under an anomalous mortgage by the terms of which he is entitled to foreclosure, to institute a suit for foreclosure or an usufructuary mortgage as such or a mortgagee by conditional sale as such to institute a suit for sale; or]

1. Legislative changes.

The following changes have been introduced in this section by S. 31 of the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act of 1929 :

- (1) The word "due" was substituted for the word "payable" in the first paragraph of the section in view of a similar change in S. 60.
- (2) The words "a decree" were substituted for the words "an order" in the first and the second paragraphs of the section, in view of the use of the word "decree" instead of the word "order" in O. 34, Rr. 3 and 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure
- (3) The present clause (a) was substituted for the old clause. See Note 12

2. Scope of the section.

This section deals with the enforcement of a mortgage. It defines the rights of a mortgagee as against the mortgagor, so far as the right to maintain a suit for foreclosure or sale is concerned. (1) The section being only procedural is retrospective in its operation (2) and a mortgagee claiming under a mortgage executed before the Act can enforce his remedies according to the present section even though the procedure before the Act was different.(3) The rights of a mortgagee are, however, subject to the provisions of Ss. 20(2) and 28(3), Orissa Estates Abolition Act (1 of 1952) Those provisions prevail over any provisions of the Transfer of Property Act inconsistent with them, by virtue of Art. 254(2) of the Constitution.(4) Where the entire property under a mortgage or charge has, under the Land Reforms legislation vested in the State, not only the property under mortgage becomes non-available for sale but the very remedy by suit in a Court of law for the realization of money due under the hypothecation, either by the sale of property hypothecated or by enforcing the personal liability may be barred by the statute(5).

A decree for possession was passed in a suit for foreclosure without being subject to any condition which presupposes that the said decree, if executed, would amount to the last stage of a suit for foreclosure, namely possession. The decree had been passed without a preliminary decree, therefore it is not executable(6).

3. Section applies to a charge.

By virtue of S. 100, the provisions of the Act, which apply to a simple mortgage are also applicable to a charge. This section, being a provision applicable to all mortgages including a simple mortgage, applies also to a charge holder and he is entitled to obtain a decree for sale of the charged property.(1) As to whether this section applies to a charge created by operation of law, see S. 100, Note 17.

4. "In the absence of a contract to the contrary".

As seen in Note 5 on S. 60, the right to redeem and the right to foreclosure are co-extensive and arise simultaneously and, consequently, if the mortgagee has no right to sue for the mortgage-money, the mortgagor cannot sue to redeem. It is however to be noted that the right of the mortgagee to obtain a decree for foreclosure or sale given by the first paragraph of this section is available only "in the absence of a contract to the contrary" while the right of the mortgagor to redeem given by S. 60 is not made subject to any contract to the contrary. The reason is that a mortgagor who is a borrower, requires greater protection than a mortgagee who is always in a dominating position. The result will be that even when the mortgagor has an absolute right to redeem the mortgagee's right to foreclosure or to sue for sale may be subjected to restrictions and conditions. In the under-mentioned case(1) the mortgage deed contained a covenant that if the mortgagee wanted payment he must give notice to be paid on the day after the beginning of the cultivation in any year and not at other times. The first Court held that the mortgagor was not entitled to redeem until a demand for payment was made by the mortgagee. It was held by the High Court that the covenant in the mortgage deed affected only the mortgagee and not the mortgagor's right to redeem at any time.

In the case noted below,(2) a mortgagee was entitled under the terms of the mortgage to enter into possession of the mortgaged property immediately on the execution of the mortgage deed. It was further provided in the deed that the mortgagee would have the right to recall the mortgage-money and to sue for foreclosure only in the event of the mortgagor's default in redeeming the mortgage on the expiry of five years. The mortgagee was not allowed to enter into possession by the mortgagor. The question was when the mortgage-money became payable. It was argued that reading S. 68 with S. 67, the mortgage-money became payable on the happening of the contingency of not getting the possession by the mortgagee. But it was held that the right given by S. 67 was controlled by a contract to the contrary and that, according to the stipulation in the mortgage-deed the mortgagee could not recall the mortgage-money and sue for foreclosure before the expiry of five years.

Where a mortgage combined with an unusual incidental arrangement under which the mortgagor, in selling off any parcel of the mortgaged property was entitled to retain one-fourth of the purchase money for his own purposes, it was held that the condition did not destroy the mortgagee's lien on the mortgaged property and in case of sale he could follow the mortgaged property if he was not paid three-fourths of the purchase money(3).

See also the undermentioned cases(4).

4A. "Mortgagee."

Any person who is named as mortgagee in the mortgage deed can sue on the mortgage whether he has any real interest in the mortgage or not. Where a mortgage is executed in favour of A described as the son of B, it is not open to the mortgagor or persons claiming under him to question the validity of A's adoption(1).

5. "After the mortgage-money has become due."

The right to foreclosure or sale, under this section, arises after the mortgage-money has 'become due'. The right to redeem under S. 60, arises when the principal money has become due. Although the expression "mortgage-money" is wider than the expression 'principal money' (1) the right to foreclosure or sale under this section will arise simultaneously with the right to redeem under S. 60. The reason is that the mortgage-money cannot be said to have become due unless the principal money has become due (2). This is consistent with the general principle that the right to redeem and the right to foreclosure are co-extensive(3).

Where the mortgage-deed provides for a period for payment of the mortgage-money the mortgagee's right to foreclosure or sale arises after the expiry of the period and not before. Inasmuch as the right to redeem arises on the expiry of the period (4). Where no period is fixed for the payment of the mortgage-money it has been generally held that the mortgage-money becomes due on the date of the mortgage and the mortgagee is free to enforce his security at any time after the date of the mortgage.(5) In the undermentioned case(6) where no specific time was fixed for payment of the debt their Lordships of the Privy Council held that "on the facts of the case" the money did not become due until a demand was made by the mortgagee and refused by the mortgagor. Where no period for redemption was fixed but interest was to accrue only after expiry of the year, it was held that the mortgage-money became due not immediately on the date of the mortgage but after expiry of one year(7).

After the decision of the Privy Council in Lasa Din v Mt Gulab Kunwar(8) it is now settled law that where a mortgage fixing a term for payment contains also a default clause for payment before the due date, the mortgage-money does not become due as soon as the default occurs. In such cases, the mortgagee has an option either to enforce his security at once, or to stand by for the full term of the mortgage. The money, therefore, becomes due either when he exercises his option(9) or, where he does not exercise his option, on the expiry of the period (10) The cases which have held that it became due on first default or that the right would be waived and the mortgagee could sue on the basis of next default are no longer good law(11)

Where the mortgage-money is payable under the deed "on demand," the question in each case is whether the parties intended to make the demand a term of the contract. Where the demand is an integral part of the contract, the money will not become due until a demand is made (12) But the words "on demand" do not by themselves make a demand a term of the contract(13) The same principles will apply where the words used are "when you require(14)"

In England, it has been held that the mortgagor must have a reasonable notice for payment after a demand is made before the mortgagee can enforce his remedy(15)

A failure on the part of the mortgagor to perform what was incumbent upon him to do during the term of the mortgage, may give rise to a right of foreclosure or sale before the expiry of the term fixed in the mortgage-deed (16) This can be supported on the ground that by reason of the mortgagor's default the mortgagee is entitled to rescind, under Sections 39 and 54 of the Contract Act, the contract on his part to wait till the expiry of the period fixed In Seaton v Twyford (17) the above principle was applied even where the mortgagor merely failed to carry out the terms of the contract as regards the payment of interest In India, the view of Seaton v Twyford(18) namely that the failure on the part of the mortgagor to pay the stipulated interest, would release the mortgagee from the necessity of waiting for the expiry of the term, before exercising his right as a mortgagee has been approved in the undermentioned cases(19).

A, a trustee, executed a mortgage in favour of B the trust temple The mortgage-debt was not to be paid for 20 years. In a suit instituted under S 92, Civil Procedure Code the mortgage was declared to be a breach of trust and the money was ordered to be paid immediately to B, B brought a suit for foreclosure before the expiry of the period It was held that the mortgage-money became due within the meaning of S 67 and the suit was maintainable(20) the property to sale before the expiry of that period. There was this further peculiar condition that the mortgagee may recover at his wish either by mutual settlement or through suit in Court the entire principal and interest before the expiry of the period. It was held by a Full Bench of the Chief Court of Oudh that the mortgage-money became due only on the expiry of the period(24).

- (5) A mortgage-deed contained an agreement that the principal money should not be required by the mortgagee until the expiration of five years from the date of the deed "if the half yearly interest should be punctually paid." Interest was not paid on the day fixed. The mortgagee sued before the expiry of five years. It was held that "punctually" meant payment on the day fixed. Payment nine days after the due date, was not good payment. The mortgagee, therefore, was held entitled to sue before the expiry of the period(25).

The mortgagee can bring a suit after lapse of 30 years that mortgage having extinguished by lapse of time having not been redeemed, they had become full owners(26)

6. Failure to pay interest.

Under this section, the right to sue for foreclosure or sale arises, when the mortgage-money has become due. Under the second paragraph of S. 58, the principal and interest of which payment is secured is "mortgage-money." But the general principle is that interest is accessory to the principal and cannot be recovered apart from the principal to which it is accessory (1) Where, therefore, the principal money has not become due the mortgagee has under this section no right to demand a sale of the mortgaged lands for the payment of interest alone (2) The view expressed by Wallis, C.J. in Arunachellam Chettiar v. Raja of Kalahasti, (3) namely that the mortgagee is entitled under this section to realise the interest in arrear, by sale of a portion of the security, even where the principal money has not become due, as interest is included in the term mortgage-money, is, it is submitted, not correct. There may, however, be a special stipulation to that effect in the mortgage-deed, in which case the mortgagee's right will be governed by the express terms of the contract and the mortgagee will be entitled to sell the mortgaged security for the arrears of interest alone(4)

7. Failure to pay instalments.

Where the mortgage-money is agreed to be paid by instalments and the mortgagor commits default, it is doubtful if the mortgagee can sue for sale or for foreclosure under this section for part of the mortgage-money, though he can obtain a money-decree for the amount due. Where, however, the parties agree to allow a foreclosure or sale for part of the mortgage-money, the mortgagee is free to enforce a portion of mortgage security as each instalment falls due.(1) In Ramayya v. Venkatarama Gurraju, (2) the express covenant to pay as each instalment fell due was held to carry with it the right to sale and the mortgagee was held entitled to recover the same by sale of a portion of the mortgage security. It is also established that if under the deed the mortgagee is restrained from enforcing his security until all the instalments have become due, the mortgagee has no right to sue for sale or foreclosure on default of one instalment(3)

In a suit for foreclosure of mortgage where a preliminary decree is passed ex parte and at the time of final decree mortgagor appears and requests for instalments and the same is granted subject to condition that on failure to pay two instalments right of redemption would be lost, the foreclosure would become final on failure of the mortgagor to comply with the condition and he will have no right to claim redemption(4).

8. Right to sue under the section, if can arise apart from the terms of the contract.

The mortgage-money may also become due for the purpose of this section apart from the terms of the mortgage-deed. Clauses (b), (c) and (d) of S. 68 describe the circumstances under which the mortgagee can sue for the mortgage-money, although it has not become due under the terms of the mortgage contract. As to whether in such cases the mortgagee has a right to sue for sale of the mortgaged property, see Note 17 on S. 68.

9. "Before the mortgage-money has been paid or deposited as hereinafter provided."

A mortgagee has a right to obtain a decree for foreclosure or sale only before the mortgage-money has been paid or deposited. Where the mortgage-money is paid, the mortgage is extinguished and no question of foreclosure or sale will arise (1). As long as the mortgage-money is not paid or deposited, the mortgagee's suit for sale is not barred under S. 11 of the Civil PC by reason of a decree for sale passed on the same mortgage in a prior suit, provided of course the second suit is not barred by limitation(2).

As regards the deposit of mortgage-money by the mortgagor a provision has been made by S. 83 and the words "as hereinafter provided" refer to that provision. Where a deposit complies with the requirements of that section the mortgagee will not be entitled to a decree for foreclosure or sale whether he accepts or refuses the deposit. For example, where the mortgagee accepts the deposit, the mortgage is discharged and no question of foreclosure or sale will arise. Where the mortgagee refuses to accept the deposit which still lies in a Court, and sues on his mortgage and it is found on taking accounts that nothing is due on the mortgage, no decree for foreclosure or sale will be necessary. Where, however, the deposit is held invalid, it will amount to no deposit and there will be no bar to the passing of the decree for foreclosure or sale according to this section(3).

In the undermentioned case(4) the mortgagee after receiving a notice of deposit went to withdraw it but finding that it had been withdrawn by a pleader purporting to act under his authority filed a suit for foreclosure. It was held that the words "as hereinafter provided" make it perfectly clear that a deposit under S. 83, in so far as it is contemplated here, must be a deposit which has been accepted and acted on by the mortgagee in terms of that section. It was also held that where facts showed that the Court could not place the money in the hands of the mortgagee, the deposit for all practical purposes would be an illusory transaction and would not be legal deposit under S. 83 such as might be supposed to affect the rights of the parties one way or the other and consequently, the mortgagee would be entitled to obtain a decree for foreclosure.

This section debars the mortgagee from obtaining a decree for foreclosure or sale after a deposit by mortgagor. It does not preclude him from instituting a suit on his mortgage. In Sitaramayya v. Venkatramana(5) the mortgagee was held entitled to sue on his mortgage after a deposit was made by mortgagor but before the notice of it was served on him.

10. Effect of foreclosure.

A suit for foreclosure is a suit to obtain a decree that the mortgagor shall be absolutely debarred of his right to redeem the property.(1) Foreclosure is not a thing which can be effected by the act of parties. It can be effected only by the order of Court, in a suit properly constituted for that purpose (2) The effect of passing such a decree is that it extinguishes the mortgagor's right to redeem and makes the mortgagee an absolute owner of the property from the date of the decree.(3) It has virtually the effect of an out and out transfer in favour of the mortgagee(4).

In the undermentioned case(5) a Hindu widow entitled to a life estate purported to mortgage the whole of the proprietary interest in the property A decree for foreclosure was passed on the mortgage in respect of the whole interest A reversioner of the widow claimed to redeem the property It was held that the decree for foreclosure passed in the above circumstances could not bind the reversioner and that he could redeem the property in spite of the foreclosure decree

Where a suit at the instance of the two of the heirs of a deceased mortgagor was decreed without other heir being impleaded but the plaintiffs failed to deposit the amount under the decree within time and a final decree for foreclosure was passed it will not debar the other heirs from redeeming the property but in absence of any evidence showing that he has more than half share in the mortgage property he is entitled to redeem to the extent of his share(6).

11. Effect of sale under mortgage-decree.

The mere passing of a final decree for sale or the actual sale of the mortgaged property under it, does not put an end to the mortgage security. It is only on the confirmation of the sale that the mortgage security is extinguished(1) and the effect of it is to pass to the purchaser the interest both of the mortgagor and the mortgagee (2). Hence, if a lease by the mortgagor in possession does not bind the mortgagee, it does not equally bind the auction purchaser(3).

12. Clause (a).

Clause (a) of the section before amendment was as follows

"(a) to authorise a simple mortgagee as such to institute a suit for foreclosure or an usufructuary mortgagee as such to institute a suit for foreclosure or sale or a mortgagee by conditional sale as such to institute a suit for sale; or."

It will be noticed that only a simple mortgagee and an usufructuary mortgagee were expressly debarred from obtaining a decree for foreclosure. Other mortgagees such as a mortgagee by deposit of title deeds and an English mortgagee could get a decree for foreclosure. The object of the Legislature in introducing the amendment was to restrict the remedy of foreclosure only to certain classes of mortgages. In their Report the Special Committee observe as follows

"Under the present law (i.e., before amendment) the remedy by way of foreclosure is open to a mortgagee in the case of a mortgage by conditional sale and in an English mortgage, as also in anomalous mortgages, by the terms of which the mortgagee is entitled to foreclose. By Rule 4(2) of O. 34 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, the Courts in India have been empowered, when a suit is brought for foreclosure, to direct a sale in lieu of foreclosure. The discretion conferred by that rule on the Courts has been exercised in different ways, some Courts refusing foreclosure while others have granted it. We understand that in Allahabad foreclosure decrees are more frequent. As to equitable mortgages by deposit of title deeds also, a different practice prevails in different Courts. In Calcutta and Allahabad the Courts have invariably refused foreclosure in such cases, (24 Cal. 348, 14 All 238), while in Bombay foreclosure decrees are sometimes passed (14 Bom 264)."

The question is discussed by the late Sir Rash Behari Ghose in the 5th Edition of his "Law of Mortgage" at page 32 where he says :

"But although sales take place more frequently now, foreclosure is still a common method of working out the rights of mortgagees in England. I may, however, be permitted to observe that in complicated cases, the rights of the parties can be adequately protected only by a decree for sale, foreclosure being both cumbrous and dilatory method of procedure. When the Transfer of Property Act was under consideration, it was proposed in this country to do away with foreclosure altogether, and to give the mortgagee only the right to realise his security by a sale of the pledge. But it was thought by the then Law Member of the Governor-General's Council, that the amount of simplicity which would be thus gained would not justify the amount of disturbance which would be created by such a change in the law. I, however, venture to doubt whether the slight disturbance which would have been created by such a law would have been too dear a price to pay for the elegance and simplicity which such a measure would have given us. At any rate the gain to the community would have been sufficient compensation for any possible disturbance. The right of a mortgagee to foreclose, we should remember, naturally grew in England out of the form of an English mortgage, which consists of a transfer of ownership, accompanied by a condition for re-transfer upon due payment of the debt, probably the crudest method, as Professor Holland points out, in which security can be given for the fulfilment of an engagement. In many of the States of America, as well as in Ireland, sale is regarded as the most appropriate remedy on a mortgage. The same practice is followed in countries which have adopted the Roman law as the basis of their jurisprudence. In English law however, the more cumbrous mode of proceeding has stood its ground down to the present day, but it may be affirmed without much temerity that foreclosure with its successive periods of redemption, its liability to be re-opened, and the manifest inadequacy of the remedy in complicated cases is doomed even in England."

In Wiltzie on "Mortgage Foreclosure", Vol. 1, p. 5, 3rd Edn. (an American work), it is observed :

"Strict foreclosure or foreclosure without a sale was a procedure greatly used in England at one time and its purpose was to perfect in the mortgagee an absolute title, instead of to obtain a decree for sale, the Courts in most States recognise this method, but allow its use only in exceptional cases, owing to its severity upon the rights of the owner of the equity of redemption.

We, therefore, consider it desirable to confine the remedy of foreclosure to the case of a mortgage by conditional sale or an anomalous mortgage where, by the express terms of the deed, the parties have stipulated for foreclosure; and to disallow it in all other cases."

13. Remedy of a simple mortgagee.

Under this section a simple mortgagee has the right to obtain only a decree for sale (1) He cannot obtain a decree for foreclosure. (2) But where a simple mortgage-deed expressly stipulates that the mortgagee is entitled to foreclose the property on default in payment of the mortgage-money a suit for foreclosure is maintainable. (3) The provision in a deed of simple mortgage entitling the mortgagee to enter into possession in case of default of payment on the specified date does not take away the right of sale given to the mortgagee (4).

In the undermentioned case (5) a simple mortgagee sued to enforce his mortgage and the Court, instead of granting him a decree for sale ordered that in case of default in payment of the amount, the mortgagee should be put in possession of the property. In appeal the Judicial Committee held that this was wrong, and that the only decree that could be passed on a simple mortgage was a decree for sale.

Even before this Act a simple mortgagee had the right to enforce the mortgage by sale. (6) The usual practice was to sue for the mortgage-money, praying that the lien might be declared on the property. Then having obtained a decree the mortgagee asked for execution by sale of the mortgaged property. This prayer is not now necessary and the mortgagee can directly ask for sale of the property under this section (7).

In the Punjab the Transfer of Property Act does not apply but a simple mortgagee has a right of sale as the hypothecation itself implies such a right (8).

14. Remedy of a mortgagee by conditional sale.

A mortgagee by conditional sale enjoyed the right of foreclosure before the Transfer of Property Act. This section does not make any change in the rights and liabilities of the mortgagor and the mortgagee as they existed before. It only provides for a different procedure for the enforcement of those rights (1). By the former part of clause (a), a mortgagee by conditional sale is entitled to bring a suit for foreclosure, by the latter part he is forbidden from suing for a sale of the property. The result is that the only remedy of a mortgagee by conditional sale is to institute a suit for foreclosure(2).

As to the procedure adopted for foreclosure before the Act, see Notes on S. 58 and the undermentioned cases(3).

In the Punjab also mortgagee by conditional sale has a right of foreclosure. But this Act being inapplicable to that Province, the procedure to be followed for foreclosing is that which is laid down in the Bengal Regulation 17 of 1806 (4). See also Notes on S. 58.

A mortgagee by conditional sale of an intangible property also has got a right of foreclosure(5).

It has been held by the High Court of Nagpur that even a remedy by way of foreclosure may be available to a mortgagee of movable property if the mortgage-deed so provides(6).

A suit for foreclosure has been held to be a suit for recovery of money within the meaning of Section 4 of the Bihar Money Lenders Act, 3 of 1938(7).

15. Remedy of a usufructuary mortgagee.

Before the Act was passed it was held in some cases that a usufructuary mortgagee could not sue for foreclosure or for sale.(1) in the undermentioned case(2) a decree for sale was passed.

Under this section a usufructuary mortgagee as such, is not entitled to sue for a decree for foreclosure or for sale of the mortgaged property(3).

Right to foreclose or sell the property is not available to usufructuary mortgagee whose only right is to enjoy the security until the mortgage-money is paid off. But in the case of "Otti" which is a wellknown tenure in Travancore State there is an implied personal covenant to pay in addition to the usual incidents of a usufructuary mortgage. In such a case mortgagee can sue for the recovery of mortgage-money within a period of six years from the expiry of the term and if no term is fixed, from the date of the mortgage(4).

Having come into possession of the whole property as a mortgagee from the plaintiff/mortgagor treating the plaintiff as a full owner, it was not opened to the defendant/mortgagee to question the title of the plaintiff/mortgagor either wholly or partly. A usufructuary mortgagee cannot deny the title of his mortgagor. Nor can he set up adverse possession unless he actually leaves the holding and re-enters under a different status(5).

A mortgagee cannot question the title of the mortgagor. Once the valid execution and attestation of mortgage is established, the mortgagee is estopped from disputing the title of the mortgagors and it is not incumbent upon them to positively establish their title. They are entitled to redemption(6).

Before the year 1929, a mortgagee under a mortgage which was a combination of a simple and a usufructuary mortgage, could bring the property to sale by virtue of the covenant for sale (7). The same will even now be the case, though such mortgages are now classed as anomalous mortgages (8). Where there is no stipulation for sale but only a personal covenant to pay, there is a difference of opinion as to whether the mortgagee will be entitled to ask for sale of the property on the strength of the covenant to repay. property on the strength of the covenant (9) while according to the other view (10) the mortgagee cannot sell the property. See also S. 58, Note 35.

As to the question whether a usufructuary mortgagee who is not given possession by the mortgagor, can sue for sale of the mortgaged property, see Notes 5 and 17 on Section 68.

In the Presidency of Bombay, before the Act was made applicable there the rights of a mortgagee with possession were governed by the Bombay Regulation V of 1827 S. 15 clause (3). For the law under that Regulation, see the undermentioned cases (11).

In the Punjab though Act does not apply, a usufructuary mortgagee has got no right to ask for sale of the property (12).

16. Remedy of an English mortgagee.

The remedy of an English mortgagee was not restricted either to sale or foreclosure before the amendment in clause (a) in 1929. It was therefore, held before 1929 that both the remedies i.e. the remedy of sale and also of foreclosure, were open to him (1). In the case of an English mortgage executed prior to 1st April, 1930 this right to file a suit for foreclosure or sale is not affected by the Amending Act (20 of 1929) (2). Under the present clause (a) the remedy of foreclosure being available to a mortgagee by conditional sale only, the remedy open to an English mortgagee is only by way of sale (3).

3. AIR 1942 Cal 153 (158). ILR (1942) 1 Cal 326 (DB). (Suit for enforce such mortgage falls under Art. 132 and not under Art. 147, Limitation Act.)

If the mortgagor binds himself, whether expressly or impliedly, to pay the money personally, the mortgagee will be entitled to get a personal decree also against the mortgagor under O 34, R 6 of the Civil Procedure Code(4).

Where under the deed property was granted, transferred conveyed, assigned and assumed to the use of the purchaser absolutely and for ever and it was stated that purchaser thereafter peaceably and quietly enjoy and possess the property, it was a deed of English mortgage(5)

It may also be noted that if both or any of the parties to an English mortgage are neither Hindus, nor Muhammadans, nor Buddhists, nor member of any race, sect, tribe or class from time to time specified in this behalf by the State Government in the Official Gazette, the mortgagee will also have a right of sale of the mortgaged property 'without the intervention of Court' under S 69, clause (a) besides the right of sale under this section which can be exercised only through the intervention of a Court.

In the States to which this Act does not apply, an English mortgagee will be entitled to bring a suit for sale as well as for foreclosure as is the case under the English law.

17. Remedy of a mortgagee by deposit of title deeds.

Clause (a) of this section as it stood before the amendment in 1929 did not restrict the mortgagee by deposit of title deeds to any particular kind of suit. It was, therefore, held by the High Court of Bombay, following the English law, that he could bring a suit for sale of the property as well as for foreclosure.(1) The High Court of Rangoon was also of the same view though it usually granted a decree only for sale.(2) The practice of the High Court of Calcutta was to give a decree for sale.(3) Under the present amended clause, a decree for foreclosure is restricted to a case of a mortgage by conditional sale and under certain circumstances to the case of an anomalous mortgage. Consequently, the remedy open to a mortgagee by deposit of title deeds under the present law is only by way of sale (4) In a mortgage by deposit of title deeds, a decree as may be passed in a suit of a simple mortgage can only be passed. A decree for foreclosure cannot be passed in a suit of mortgage by deposit of title deeds (5) See also Notes on Section 96

18. Remedy of an anomalous mortgagee.

Under S 98, the rights and liabilities of the parties to an anomalous mortgage are to be determined according to the terms of the mortgage. Clause (a) of this section allows an anomalous mortgagee to institute a suit for foreclosure if the right of foreclosure is given to him by the contract and does not debar him from instituting a suit for sale. It, therefore, follows that an anomalous mortgagee can institute a suit for sale, (1) as well as for foreclosure (2) if the right of sale or foreclosure is given to him by the contract of mortgage. Even where such a right is not given by the contract, but the contract does not also contain a stipulation barring such a right, the mortgagee is entitled to exercise his right under this section. (3) There is no conflict between Section 67 and S. 98 (4).

Where in an anomalous mortgage such as a lahan gahan mortgage in Nagpur (5) the mortgagee is given a right of foreclosure and also of sale, and the mortgagee institutes a suit for foreclosure, the Court has a discretion under O. 34, R. 4, sub-r. (3), Civil Procedure Code, to pass a decree for sale instead of for foreclosure. Such a discretion can be used in the case of anomalous mortgages only (6). Although the anomalous mortgage gives the mortgagee right to ask for decree for foreclosure or sell it does not follow that he has a right to direct the Court which relief to grant him. The matter is covered by Order 34, Rule 4 (Case prior to the amendment in (1929)) (7).

Before 1929 the mortgagee under a simple mortgage usufructuary was allowed to institute a suit for sale there being a hypothecation of the property (8). Such mortgages will now be included in the category of an anomalous mortgage and rights of the parties will be determined according to the terms of the contract of mortgage.

The question whether a mortgagee under an anomalous mortgage has a right to sell or to foreclose, depends upon the intention of the parties as evidenced by the terms of the contract. Thus where, in an anomalous mortgage the mortgagee was put in possession, the mortgage was for a fixed term, and it was provided that if the mortgagor did not pay on the stipulated date, the mortgagee should continue to be in possession, it was held that there was no right to bring the property to sale (9). Where under the mortgage without possession a period was fixed for payment of the mortgage-debt, and in the event of default the mortgagee was entitled to enter into possession of the land, such a mortgage is an anomalous mortgage under S. 58, and under S. 67(a) a decree of foreclosure can be passed to enforce it.(10)

In a suit for foreclosure on anomalous mortgage the mortgagor cannot compel the mortgagee to accept a decree for sale unless it is proved that the remedy sought by the mortgagee is injurious to his interest and some advantage would accrue to him if the discretion is exercised in his favour.(11)

In the undermentioned case,(12) not governed by the Act, certain property was mortgaged with possession for a period of three years with the stipulation that it would be redeemed after the expiry of that period. The mortgagee sued for sale on his mortgage after the expiry of the period. It was held that the mortgage was an anomalous one and that a decree for sale should be granted on principles of justice, equity and good conscience. The reason was stated by their Lordships as under :

"The words with regard to redemption after the period of three years has elapsed clearly indicate that the redemption was considered to be de regueur at the end of the stipulated period and that it was not intended that the mortgagee should continue to occupy the land afterwards. In the circumstances it will be inequitable to refuse the relief asked for and to make the mortgagee wait till the mortgagor decides to redeem his property."

Anomalous mortgage combining usufructuary and simple mortgage allowing mortgagee to enjoy the property in lieu of interest for five years and mortgagor to repay the amount whenever he wanted in any year on close of the agriculture year it would be said that the money became due under the personal covenant only after the demand was made by the mortgagee. In such a case money became due both for redeeming and for suit for sale on the expiry of the five year period.(13)

Under an anomalous mortgage a decree for the sale of property can be passed.(14)

19. Remedies of prior and puisne mortgagees against each other.

This section is not limited to the first mortgagee. The word "mortgagee" used in it refers to all mortgagees, whether prior or subsequent. The section does not qualify the right of subsequent mortgagee so as to defer the enforcement of his rights under his mortgage until the prior mortgage is due or redeemed. (1) The prior mortgagee also is entitled to enforce his mortgage irrespective of whatever other claims there may be subsequent to his mortgage. (2) Where, however, the prior mortgagee sues to enforce his mortgage, the puisne mortgagee is a necessary party to the suit under O 34, R 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Where a puisne mortgagee is a party to such a suit and a decree for sale or foreclosure is passed in favour of the prior mortgagee, the effect is to extinguish the puisne mortgagee's security if the puisne mortgagee does not exercise his right of redemption or if his security is not expressly saved. (3) Where property is sold in execution of a decree obtained in such a suit, the subsequent mortgagee is entitled to claim the surplus sale proceeds. (4) But if the prior mortgage is satisfied before the sale in execution, the subsequent mortgagee cannot ask for the sale of the property in the same suit to satisfy his claim. For this he must file a separate suit under this section on his own mortgage. (5)

Puisne mortgagee in respect of whose mortgage decree has already been made in a prior mortgagee's suit to which he is made a party is entitled to institute a separate suit in respect of his mortgage and ask for a decree in the form 5 A of Appendix in the First Schedule of C. P. Code when the claim of the prior mortgagee made in the prior mortgagee's suit has been satisfied by the payments made by the mortgagor as a result of which no sale takes place in that suit. (6)

Where a puisne mortgagee is not made a party to the prior mortgagee's suit the rights of the puisne mortgagee remain unaffected by the decree passed in the suit. (7) Rights of Puisne mortgagee are unaffected if he is not impleaded in prior mortgagee's suit. Auction purchaser cannot in such a gee has foreclosed the mortgaged property under his mortgage and the subsequent mortgagee also is entitled to claim foreclosure only, under his mortgage, the latter cannot sue for foreclosure (11) as it is not possible to obtain foreclosure subject to the rights of the prior mortgagee. The proper remedy available to the puisne mortgagee, in such a case, is only to redeem the prior mortgage (12).

Where a prior mortgagee obtains a final decree for foreclosure on his mortgage without impleading the puisne mortgagee, all the rights of the mortgagor in the property, including his right of redeeming the puisne mortgagee are transferred to and become vested in the prior mortgagee. Where the puisne mortgagee redeems the prior mortgage afterwards, the mortgagor's right of redemption of either mortgage is not revived (13). The same principle will apply to cases where the prior mortgagee has brought the property to sale without impleading the puisne mortgagee and subsequently the puisne mortgagee redeems the property from the purchaser (14).

Where a puisne mortgagee sues on his mortgage and the prior mortgagee is not a necessary party to it, a sale or foreclosure under the decree obtained in the suit without impleading the prior mortgagee will always be subject to the rights of the prior mortgagee. Where a prior mortgagee is made a party to the suit, the subsequent mortgagee can ask for sale subject to the rights of the prior mortgagee (15). He can also ask, in the same suit, a prayer to redeem the prior mortgage and to foreclosure (where he has got such right) his own mortgage (16).

See also S 94 and Notes thereunder, and the Code of Civil Procedure, O 34, Rule 1. Note 9 in the Appendix.

20. Rights of persons deriving title from the mortgagee.

Section 59 A enacts that "unless otherwise expressly provided, reference in this chapter to mortgagors and mortgagees shall be deemed to include references to persons deriving title from them respectively." Therefore, persons deriving title from the mortgagee are also governed by this section. Section 101 enacts that there is no merger of interest when the mortgagee purchases mortgaged property, against subsequent mortgagees and this section defines the mortgagee's rights as against them.

A purchaser in a mortgagee's suit, when all the later mortgagees and the mortgagor are added as parties, gets all the interest in the property including the later mortgagees' interest in the mortgaged property. But cases arise where a prior mortgagee, for some reason or other, omits to enforce his rights against puisne mortgagees and sues only the mortgagor and the property is sold in execution of that decree. The auction-purchaser, no doubt, acquires the mortgagee's interest and also becomes the representative of the ultimate owner of the equity of redemption (1). A third party

In a competition to redeem between auction purchaser at a Court sale held for recovery of tax which are first charge on the mortgage property who had obtained possession and the auction purchaser in a suit on one of the mortgagees whose application for delivery of possession was resisted by the first auction purchaser held that the earlier auction purchaser had a superior right to redeem the mortgages as against the subsequent mortgagee purchaser as he failed to take any action to redeem the mortgages by suit.(15)

A purchaser does not lose his right to insist on his being redeemed by reason of the prior mortgage being barred by limitation.(16) provided the sale was in pursuance of a mortgage decree for sale.(17)

If some of the heirs of the mortgage are not joined in a suit for recovery on mortgage debt within limitation the defect is not curable.(18)

As to the effect of non-joinder of parties who are interested in the suit on mortgage, see the Code of Civil Procedure, O. 34, R. 1, Note 19 in the Appendix.

Where in a suit on a mortgage against the agriculturist mortgagor and non-agriculturist puisne mortgagee a decree for the scaled down amount is passed against the agriculturist mortgagor and a decree for the unscaled amount is passed against the non-agriculturist puisne mortgagee, the decree-holder is entitled to execute the decree for the unscaled amount against the non-agriculturist mortgagee, and even if the latter should become entitled to the entire property in his absolute right, he is still liable to pay the full unscaled decree amount before he can claim that the entire decree has been satisfied.(19)

In the instant case, in a Court auction, purchasers purchased the one third share of the mortgagor in the mortgaged items of properties, in spite of being made aware of the creation and subsistence of the mortgage. Later on, when a partition suit was instituted by some of purchasers, they as well as the other Court auction purchaser were put on notice of the subsistence of the mortgage and warned of the consequence of any collusive arrangement being entered into. In spite of the notices litigants purchasers had brought about a compromise between partition decree, and in the said decree, the mortgaged items of properties, which, according to the mortgagee are worthless, were allotted to the mortgagor.

Those materials clearly establish the practice of fraud by the mortgagors and repurchasers.

Held, in such circumstances the normal rights available to co-sharers for asking for a partition of the mortgaged items of properties free of the mortgage cannot be claimed by such purchasers.

The resultant position would be that the mortgagee will be entitled to ignore the partition decree and enforce the mortgage against the one-third share of the mortgagor (20)

the mortgagee rights of his mortgagor (1) Two alternative remedies are open to a sub-mortgagee. He may realise the amount due to him by enforcing his security by bringing to sell the mortgagee's rights which was sub-mortgaged to him or he may as an assignee of the mortgagee sue for the sale of the property and incidentally realise his dues (2) The original mortgagor need not be joined as a party to the suit (3) A subsequent mortgage between the original mortgagor and mortgagee which may operate as a merger of the earlier mortgage does not prejudice the sub-mortgagee's rights or affect his right to bring the mortgagee's rights under the original mortgage to sale (4)

A sub-mortgagee can also sue for a decree for sale of the original mortgagor's interest in cases, and under the circumstances, which would have entitled the original mortgagee, on the date of the sub-mortgage, to claim such relief on his own mortgage (5) So also it is open to a sub-mortgagee in an action to enforce his mortgage to obtain a decree foreclosing the right of not merely his mortgagor but also of the main mortgagor to redeem and a final decree passed in such an action would operate to extinguish the right of redemption (6) The mortgagor as well as the mortgagee must be impleaded in such a suit, so that the former may have the opportunity to redeem and the latter may be able to safeguard his interest as regards the claim put forward by the sub-mortgagee (7) Where, however, the original mortgagor sells away the property and has no interest at all on the date of sub mortgagee's suit for sale of property, he is not a necessary party to the suit (8) The fact that the original mortgagee has obtained a decree for sale against the mortgagor which is not however executed within limitation does not operate as a bar to the sub-mortgagee's right of suit

22-A. Mortgagee of limited interest in property.

Where the mortgagor has got only a limited interest in the property, the mortgagee cannot proceed against the property after the limited interest of the mortgagor has ceased to exist. Thus, where a mortgagor mortgaged his right to collect melvaram from certain land which was granted to him as a service inam and the mortgagee wanted to recover the mortgage-money by sale of the property after the death of the mortgagor, it was held "that the remedy against the property mortgaged ceased with the termination of the mortgagor's right to emoluments by his death and cannot be forced against the property in the hands of his successor, even though that successor is his son and inherits the office as such."(1)

23. Enforcement of a security bond.

See Notes on S. 145 of the AIR Commentaries on the Code of Civil Procedure 10th (1985) Edition.

24. Suit by Government to recover takkavi loan.

Where immovable property is mortgaged to the Government to secure the advance of takkavi the Government have two remedies to recover the same. The one is under the Public Demands Recovery Act (Bengal Act 7 of 1880)(1) and the other is by a suit under this section as there is nothing in the above-mentioned Act which debars the Government from instituting a suit upon the mortgage in their favour under this section.(2)

25. Clause (b).

The clause contemplates a case where the right of sale as well as of foreclosure is available to the mortgagee. Otherwise the question of sale instead of foreclosure cannot arise. The clause provides that if the mortgagor holds the interest of the mortgagee as a trustee or as a legal representative and the mortgagee has got both the rights, there can be a suit for sale only and not for foreclosure. The reason is that a trustee is in a position in which it is impossible for him, if foreclosure is granted, to make the performance of his duty coincide with his interest (1) The principle will apply even where the mortgagee holds the interest of the mortgagor in the capacity of a trustee and in such cases also the mortgagee will not be entitled to sue for foreclosure (2)

26. Clause (c).

This clause negatives the right of sale or foreclosure where the mortgaged property is a railway or canal or other work in the maintenance of which the public are interested. Under the English law also the right of sale or foreclosure does not extend to a property which has been acquired under statutory powers for public purposes, if those purposes will be defeated, or at all events seriously affected by a sale or foreclosure (1) The reason why the holder of a mortgage over a railway company is not entitled to have the railway sold for the payment of his debt has been stated by Lord Cairns in Gardner v. London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Co., (2) as follows .

"When Parliament, acting for the public interest, authorises the construction and maintenance of a railway both as a highway for the public, and as a road on which the company may themselves become carriers of passengers and goods, it confers powers and imposes duties and responsibilities of the largest and most important kind, and it confers and imposes them upon the company which Parliament has before it, and upon no other body of persons. These powers must be executed, and these duties discharged, by the company. They cannot be delegated or transferred."

The remedy in such cases is the appointment of a Receiver (3). The present section does not provide any remedy specifically. But it may be assumed that in India also the remedy will be the same as under the English law.

This clause does not lay down any new rule of law but merely gives statutory recognition to the law in force before the passing of this Act (1). It is an established principle that the whole of the mortgaged property is liable for any and every portion of the mortgage debt however small (2). The principle of this clause is the same as that of the last paragraph of S. 60, namely, the indivisibility of the mortgage (3). The last paragraph of S. 60, however, deals with the question of the indivisibility of the mortgage from the point of view of redemption, while this clause deals with the question from the point of the enforcement of the mortgage. The clause is intended to protect the mortgagor from harassment by multiplicity of suits in respect of the different interests which the mortgagees may, as between themselves, possess (4). Thus, under this clause, one of several mortgagees cannot institute a suit for foreclosure or sale of only a portion of the mortgaged property corresponding to his share in the mortgage-money (5) In the undermentioned cases, (6) governed by the law in force before the passing of the Act, it was held that the rule that one of the mortgagees cannot institute a suit for foreclosure or sale of a portion of the mortgaged property corresponding to his share in the mortgagee money, would not apply to a case where the rights of all the parties under the mortgage might be fully and finally dealt with in the suit brought by one of the mortgagees in respect of a portion of the property and the mortgagor cannot be further vexed in respect of the mortgage. The reason of the rule, i.e., avoidance of multiplicity of suits, having ceased to exist, the rule itself had no application. It is, however, doubtful whether this would be correct in cases governed by the clause in view of the express language of the clause.

The clause prohibits separate suits by different mortgagees in respect of the same mortgage. The law does not require that the one suit to be brought on the mortgage must be by all the mortgagees as plaintiffs. What is required is that all of them must be parties to the suit. Thus, if some of them cannot be joined as plaintiffs they may be joined as defendants (7) If this were not so, it would have been the easiest thing for a mortgagor to arrange matters with one of the mortgagees whose share may be very small and induce him not to join other mortgagees as plaintiffs in the suit and thereby defeat the interests of the remaining mortgagees (8) If the defendants mortgagees want to protect their interests they may do so by joining as plaintiffs. In the undermentioned case(9) one of the mortgagees sued for his share of the mortgage-money alleging that the other mortgagees who were defendants in the suit, had received from the mortgagor their shares of the mortgage-money. He further stated in the plaint, that if any sum was due to the defendants-mortgagees he was prepared to increase the amount of the claim. It was held that the suit as framed could not be defeated when all the mortgagees were parties to it, and that if anything was due to the defendants-mortgagees it was open to them to have themselves transferred from the category of defendants to that of plaintiffs. In another case(10) A mortgaged his property to B and C jointly. B wanted to get the mortgage-money, but C was not willing to join as plaintiff. B, therefore, brought a suit for the recovery of his share of the mortgage-money by sale of the entire property, making C a defendant in the suit, obtained a decree, and in execution got the entire property sold. C then brought a suit for the recovery of his share of the mortgage-money by sale of the whole property again. It was held that the suit was not maintainable. The same mortgage could not be enforced by sale of the property twice, C was a party to B's suit and could have protected his interest by joining as a plaintiff, this he did not do and it was due to his own fault that he could not recover his share.

In the undermentioned case,(11) however, it held that where in a suit for sale by two out of three mortgagees impleading the third as defendant the Court passed a preliminary decree for sale for two-thirds of the mortgage amount which was deposited in Court and subsequently the defendant co-mortgagee brought a suit for recovery of his share by sale of the hypotheca, the suit was not barred by virtue of the decree in the previous suit as the Court did not deal with the right of the defendant co-mortgagee to recover his one-third share.

(A) Suit by one co-mortgagee, if should be for whole amount.

The question, however, arises whether, when one of the mortgagees sues as plaintiff, making others parties as defendants, he should sue for the recovery of the entire mortgage-money by foreclosure or sale of the entire mortgaged property, or whether he should limit his claim to his share of the mortgage money by praying for foreclosure or sale of the entire property. It has been held that a suit by one of the mortgagees for the recovery of the whole of the mortgage-money is always maintainable when the other mortgagees consent to the institution of such a suit but do not join as plaintiffs for certain reasons.(12) When, however, the consent of the other co-mortgagees could not be obtained, there was before the year 1919, a conflict of opinion as to how the suit should be framed, one set of cases(13) holding that the suit must be for the whole amount of the mortgage and another set of cases(14) holding that it may be for his share of the money. In the year 1919 the matter came up before the Privy Council in Sunitabala Debi v. Dhara Sundar (15). In that case a mortgage was executed in favour of A and B for the consideration of Rs. 1,60,000 (Rs. 80,000 by each). A brought a suit for the recovery of his Rs. 80,000 by sale of half of the mortgaged property

15. AIR 1919 PC 24 (26) : 47 Cal 175 : 46 Ind App 272. (Facts taken from 24 Cal WN 297 at p. 299)

It was contended that the proceedings were wrong in form since by S. 67 the plaintiff could not seek for sale of part only of mortgaged property. The first Court disallowing the contention, granted the relief as claimed by the plaintiff. On appeal the High Court reversed the decree on the ground that the suit should have been brought to recover the entire mortgage-money. However, it made an order directing the plaintiff to amend the plaint as follows

"If in the opinion of the Court the plaintiff is held to be not entitled to a decree on the footing of a mortgage for the principal sum of Rs. 80,000 then a usual mortgage-decree may be passed in favour of the plaintiff and the defendant No. 3 (the other co-mortgagee B) for the amount found due up to the period of grace to be fixed by the Court upon the basis of the entire mortgage-money, that is Rs. 1,60,000."

On appeal to the Privy Council their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that the High Court was right in its conclusion and observed as follows

"This mortgage clearly effects the conveyance of the real estate to the mortgagees as tenants in common, and no redemption could be effected of part of the property by paying to one of the mortgagees her separate debt. It is not a mortgage to each of a divided hall, but a conveyance to them of the whole property. Where a mortgage is made by one mortgagor to two tenants in common, the right of either mortgagee who desires to realise the mortgaged property and obtain payment of the debt, if the consent of the co-mortgagee cannot be obtained, is to add the co-mortgagee as a defendant to the suit and to ask for the proper mortgage-decree, which would provide for all the necessary accounts and payments, excepting that there could be no judgment for a sum of money entered as between the mortgagee defendant and the mortgagor."

Even after the decision in Sunitabala Devi's case (16) there has been a conflict of opinion on the point, both the conflicting views being rested on the said decision of the Privy Council. According to one class of cases, (17) when the consent of the other co-mortgagees cannot be obtained one of the mortgagees need not institute a suit for the recovery of the whole of the mortgage-money but may sue only for the recovery of his share by proceeding against the whole property and making other co-mortgagees as defendants. It has also been held that such a suit does not contravene the provisions of clause (d) as it is a suit by a person interested in part only of the mortgage-money relating to the whole of the mortgaged property and not to a corresponding part of it. (18) According to the contrary view (19) one of several mortgagees cannot sue for his share of the mortgage money but must sue for the whole amount. In both the classes of cases, however, the amount which the plaintiff will get out of the sale proceeds of the entire property will be not the whole amount realised, but only the amount proportionate to his share in the mortgage-money.(20)

The interests of the mortgagees under the mortgage can, however, be severed with the consent of the mortgagor(21) and in such a case one of the mortgagees can institute a suit relating to a portion of the mortgaged property corresponding to his interest in the mortgage-money(22) and further, can institute a suit for the recovery of his share in the mortgage-money, not by foreclosure or sale of the entire property, but only by foreclosure or sale of the portion corresponding to his interest in the mortgage-money (23) The rule in the clause, having been enacted for the benefit of the mortgage has no application when the mortgagor himself consents to the severance of interests of the different mortgagees under the mortgage and thus allows the integrity of the mortgage to be broken.(24) But where the severance of interest between the mortgagees has been effected without the consent, express or implied, of the mortgagor and the severance is not binding on the mortgagor, it has been held that the remedy of one of the mortgagees is to sue for the whole of the mortgage amount with the consent of the co-mortgagee, and if such consent cannot be obtained, his remedy is to add in that suit the co-mortgagee as a defendant and to seek for the proper mortgage decree which would provide for all the accounts and payments (25) It should, however, be noted that one of the mortgagees cannot sever his interest under the mortgage behind the back of the other co-mortgagees, by obtaining the consent of the mortgagor. The other mortgagees must also be parties to such an arrangement (26) Where they are not parties to such an arrangement the integrity of the mortgage is not broken and they can proceed against the whole property in enforcing their claim.(27) This is similar to the last paragraph of S. 60 under which if there are more mortgagees than one, all of them must acquire the share of a mortgagor in the mortgaged property in order to break the integrity of the mortgage, and acquisition by one or some of them is not sufficient (28) In the undermentioned case(29) A mortgaged his property jointly to B and C. Subsequently, A mortgaged the same property to C alone and the consideration for this subsequent mortgage was the amount of the prior mortgage in favour of B and C. It was held that a discharge by C of the whole of the prior mortgage operated in respect only of his half share in the mortgage and in law the act of A and C amounted to severance of the interest of the mortgagees with the consent of the mortgagor within the meaning of this clause. It is submitted that the decision does not seem to be correct. B was not a party to the arrangement between A and C and there could be no valid severance of interests of the mortgagees, within the meaning of the clause. So also in the undermentioned case.(30) Where one of the co-mortgagees purchases the equity of redemption without the consent of his other mortgagee such mortgagee can bring the whole of the mortgaged property to sale to recover his share of the mortgage debt and the mortgage in favour of the co-mortgagee is not discharged or extinguished by merger.(31)

A mortgaged his property to B and C who had each a half share in the mortgage-money B purchased the equity of redemption in execution of a simple money decree C then sued to recover his share in the mortgage-money by sale of the entire mortgaged property. It was held that C could not do so, he, in suing only for his share in the mortgage-money, had practically admitted that something had happened which had the effect of satisfying half the mortgage amount and he could not, therefore, throw the burden of his share on the whole of the mortgaged property. It is submitted that the decision is not correct inasmuch as it allows one of the mortgagees to break the integrity of the mortgage by acquiring the mortgaged property from the mortgagor without the consent of the other. It was not followed in the undermentioned case (32)

The language of the clause cannot, however, be taken to mean that severance of interests of the mortgagees can be effected only with the consent of the mortgagor and not in any other way. The Legislature could not possibly have intended to enact that if severance of the interests of the mortgagees took place in any other lawful mode legally binding on the mortgagor, the mortgagor could resist a suit for sale for recovery of a portion of the mortgage-money on the basis of such severance.(33) Thus, where in a suit brought by one of the mortgagees against the mortgagor there is a decree declaring that there has been a severance of the mortgage, the decree though obtained without the consent of the mortgagor and the other mortgagee is effective legally to create the severance of interests of the mortgagees and a suit by the other mortgagee for the recovery of his share of the mortgage-money on the basis of such severance cannot be resisted by the mortgagor.(34)

28. Partial foreclosure or sale by a sole mortgagee.

As seen in Note 27, one of several mortgagees cannot institute a suit for foreclosure or sale of a part of the mortgaged property for a proportionate part of the mortgage money which he claims to be his share. This, however, does not affect the right of a sole mortgagee to sue on the mortgage as a whole by proceeding against the whole(1) or any part only of the mortgaged property abandoning the rest of the security. This is on the principle that as between the mortgagor and the mortgagee every part of the mortgaged property is liable for the whole debt and the mortgagee has the right to recover the debt from any part of the property, there being no obligation on his to proceed against the whole of it.(2)

The last paragraph of S. 60 lays down that a person entitled to a share only of the mortgaged property may redeem his share only in a case where the mortgagee acquires in whole or in part the share of a mortgagor. The paragraph deals only with the mortgagor's right to redeem, but the same principle will apply to the mortgagee's right to foreclose or sell the property and hence a sole mortgagee who has acquired either in whole or in part a share of the mortgaged property can sue for proceed against the mortgaged property which has gone to the share of the other coparcener (1) But if the latter coparcener, at the time of partition, and as a part of the partition, undertakes to pay off the mortgage-debt, what he really takes on partition is only an equity of redemption in the property and the mortgagee can proceed against the property in his hands (2)

It will also be seen from the Notes on S 73 that where a forfeiture is incurred fraudulently by the mortgagor by making a default in payment of Government revenue and the property again comes to the hands of the mortgagor, the mortgagee can proceed against such property. But if the forfeiture is incurred in spite of the mortgagor's attempt to avoid it and the property again comes to his hands the mortgagee has got no legal right to proceed against the property in the hands of the mortgagor : he has got only equitable right against it and if he wants to enforce his lien against the property he is bound to establish that the destruction of the original security took place under such circumstances as to raise an equity in his favour so as to fasten his mortgage on the property. Thus, where a village was forfeited by Government for non-payment of revenue and then certain fields were settled upon the mortgagor and the mortgagee wanted to proceed against those fields, it was held that forfeiture was not incurred fraudulently and that the mortgagee by not attempting to avoid the forfeiture, had lost his equity of proceeding against the property (3)

A mortgagee is entitled to foreclosure the cultivating rights in plots which were sir at the time the mortgage was executed but which ceased to be sir by reason of the mortgagor losing the right to occupy these plots as a proprietor.(4)

Property held by junior member of a Marumakkathayam family is not alienable though he enjoys certain rights. If he mortgages the property the other members can invalidate the same but until so avoided, the mortgage remains valid and binding. But the avoidance of the mortgage will not deprive the mortgagee of his equity. If upon subsequent partition in the family the mortgage property is allotted to the mortgagor as his share the mortgagee will be free to enforce his right against the property notwithstanding invalidation of the mortgage by other members. This is because such a mortgage is not void but voidable.(5)

30. Mortgagee, whether can enforce his mortgage against a trespasser in possession of the mortgaged property.

A mortgagee who not entitled to possession under the terms of his mortgage is not affected by the adverse possession against his mortgagor which commences after the creation of his mortgage (1) A mortgagee can, therefore, enforce his mortgage against such a trespasser even if he has perfected his title by prescription as against the mortgagor (2)

The position is, however, different when the mortgage is created after the trespasser's entry upon the property. The extinguishment of the mortgagor's title by adverse possession will in such a

31. Mortgagee obtaining a money-decree — Whether can sell the mortgaged property.

A question may arise as to whether a mortgagee obtaining a simple money-decree on the mortgage can proceed against the mortgaged property. Rule 14 of Order 34, Civil Procedure Code, disallows a sale of the mortgaged property in execution of a money-decree obtained by a mortgagee on a claim arising out of the mortgage, otherwise than by instituting a suit for sale in enforcement of the mortgage. A mortgagee, therefore, cannot sell the mortgaged property in execution of his money-decree except by the institution of a suit for sale under this section (1)

The decisions(2) under section 99 of this Act (now repealed and re-enacted as O. 34, R. 14 of the Civil Procedure Code), which disallowed the sale of the mortgaged property in execution of a money-decree even in respect of a claim not connected with the mortgage, are no longer good law. no such restriction exists under the present Rule. Where, therefore, a decree-holder holds a money-decree as well as a decree absolute for sale of the mortgaged properties against the same judgment-debtor, there is nothing irregular in selling the properties for the amounts of both the decrees.(3)

See also Notes on R. 14 of O. 34 of the Code of Civil Procedure in the Appendix.

32. Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act.

Though under this section a mortgagee has got a right to obtain a decree for sale or for foreclosure as the case may be, where the mortgagor is a member of an agricultural tribe and the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act, II of 1903, applies, the Civil Court cannot pass a decree either for sale or for foreclosure. It has to refer the matter to the Collector who can take action under S. 9 of that Act.(1)

1. Scope of the section.

Section 61 of the Act, as it stood before the amending Act of 1929, provided that a mortgagor who has executed several mortgages on different properties was entitled to redeem each of the mortgages separately. And the old S. 85 of the Act (now repealed and re-enacted as O. 34, R. 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908), provided that "all persons having an interest in the property comprised in the mortgage must be joined as parties to any suit — relating to such mortgage — provided that the plaintiff has notice of such interest."

Before the enactment of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, the question whether a mortgagee having several mortgages over the same property was bound to sue on all the mortgages at the same time and what would be the effect of suing on only one of them, had to be decided by reference to the principles underlying sections 61 and 85 referred to above, and there was a conflict of opinions.

According to one view a suit was not maintainable on one mortgage only — subject to another mortgage. (1) The reason for this view was, firstly that S. 85 of the Act which required all persons interested in the mortgaged property to be made parties to the mortgaged suit, necessitated, where the same mortgagee had two or more mortgages over the same property, the inclusion of all the mortgages in the same suit; secondly, that S. 61 abolished consolidation for purposes of redemption, where the several mortgages were of different properties, that where the properties were the same, the mortgagor was not at liberty to redeem only one of them, and that on the same principle, though conversely, a mortgagee having several mortgages on the same property was bound to sue on all of them. As a consequence of this view it was held in some cases (2) that if the mortgagee sued only on one of such mortgages, he was barred from later on suing on the other mortgages by reason of the doctrine of res judicata enacted in S. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882. Explanation IV (now S. 11 of the Code of 1908). It was also held in the undermentioned cases (3) that the second suit would be barred under S. 43 of the said Code (now O. 2, R. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908).

According to another view, Ss. 61 and 85 did not compel the inclusion of all the mortgages in one suit, that neither the principle of S. 13, Explanation IV nor of S. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, applied to such cases and that the mortgagee was at liberty to sue on each of the mortgages separately and obtain decree, but that he could not sell the same property in execution more than once.(4)

Order 34, Rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, introduced an explanation which was not found in the repealed section (S 85 of this Act), namely, that a puisne mortgagee may sue for sale or foreclosure without making the prior mortgage a party to the suit. In view of this provision, it was decided in some cases(5) that a suit on the earlier of two mortgages would bar a subsequent suit on the later mortgage by virtue of the provisions of O 34, R 1 and S 31. Explanation IV of the Code, but that a suit on the later mortgage would not bar a subsequent suit on the earlier one. In another class of cases(6) it was held that suits could be filed on the mortgages separately but the property could not be sold twice. A third view was that notwithstanding the explanation to O 34, R 1, even a suit on the later mortgage would bar a subsequent suit on the earlier one.(7) A fourth view was that where the several mortgages arise out of the same transaction, a suit on the earlier mortgage would bar a subsequent suit on the later mortgage, by the provisions of O. 2, R 2.(8) In the undermentioned cases(9) it was held that a suit could be maintained on a subsequent mortgage for sale subject to a prior mortgage.

This section has been enacted with a view to set the conflict at rest. The Legislature, in S. 61 abolished the rule of consolidation so far as redemption was concerned, on the ground that it was inequitable to enforce such rule to the prejudice of the mortgagor. But where a mortgagor has executed several mortgages over the same property to the same mortgagee it will be advantageous to the mortgagor to compel the mortgagee to consolidate his mortgages and sue on all of them at the same time. The Legislature has, therefore, in this section given effect to the rule of consolidation by compelling the mortgagee to sue, at the same time on all his mortgages (10). Its policy is that the question between the mortgagor and the mortgagee about all the mortgages held by the latter be tried once for all in one and the same suit (11). In their Report the Special Committee observe with reference to this section, as follows :

"While dealing with S. 61, we pointed out that it is inequitable to enforce the principle of the consolidation of securities to the prejudice of a mortgagor. When, however, a mortgagee holds several mortgages in respect of the same or different properties it will be prejudicial to the mortgagor if the mortgagee is allowed to enforce one mortgage and keep the other mortgages alive. In the case of a number of mortgages in which the only remedy open is foreclosure, the disadvantage of the mortgagor will be very marked as he may lose the whole property in satisfaction of one debt, which may be less than the real value of the property and will be liable to have a personal decree passed against him in satisfaction of the debts under the mortgages. In the case of mortgages too where the only remedy is sale, the property will never realise its fair and proper value if it be sold subject to another mortgage."

In order that the section may apply, however, the following conditions must be satisfied—

- (i) the mortgages must have been executed by the same mortgagor; (12)
- (ii) in respect of each of such mortgages the mortgagee must have the right to obtain the same kind of decree;
- (iii) the mortgage money must have become due at the time of the suit on all the mortgages and
- (iv) there must have been 'no contract' between the parties against consolidation.

Cases outside the section would still have to be decided with reference to the law as laid down in decisions prior to the enactment of this section (13)

It is now settled law in Travancore Cochin that a mortgagee is entitled to consolidate and claim-repayment of the amounts due under all the mortgages executed by the mortgagor in respect of the mortgaged properties before he can be compelled to surrender possession. This would be before the application of the T. P. Act in the State.(14)

The section is restrictive of the rights of the mortgagee and must therefore be strictly construed.(15)

Two firms have taken two separate loans from a Bank under two different transactions. A person stood as a guarantor for both loans taken by two firms and executed equitable mortgages in favour of Bank by depositing title deeds. Though mortgages were created of different times through different mortgage deeds, the property mortgaged was common. The Bank filed one suit for realisation of the loans. Held that although the mortgages were executed by way of security for the loans taken, that would not alter the legal position and S. 67-A r/w O. 1, R. 3, O. 2, R. 3, CPC that the suit did not suffer from vice of misjoinder. It was not necessary for the Bank to file two separate suits.(16)

The language employed in the section prima facie indicates that the direction as to consolidation of suits is mandatory and not directory (17). The benefit of the provision, however, can be waived by the mortgagor (18). The object of the section being to benefit the mortgagor he has a right to object to the maintainability of the suit instituted by the mortgagee on one of the mortgages alone. But if he fails to raise such objection, it would not be just and equitable to deny the mortgagee the right to sue on the other mortgage on a different property subsequently (19). This section does not incorporate a prohibition against institution of suit of one of the mortgages in case where no objection to form of suit is taken on earlier occasion.(20) The mortgagee is not obliged to file a consolidated suit in one Court on different mortgages when the Court has no territorial jurisdiction over any of the properties hypothecated under one of the mortgages (21). The section further leaves it open to the parties to contract to the contrary. Thus the mortgagor can ask for time to extend the period of the due date, in which case the mortgagee can file a suit on the mortgage which has become due and postpone the suit with respect to the mortgage regarding which he has postponed payment.(22)

It has been held that the defect in the constitution of the suit contrary to the provisions of this section is a defect of form and does not touch the merits of the case and if objection is raised the mortgagee should be allowed to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit in compliance with the provisions of this section (23). It has also been held that where, on objection being raised to the maintainability of the suit the plaintiff prays for amendment of the plaints the amendment should be allowed, the policy of the legislature being to avoid multiplicity of suits.(24)

2. Retrospective operation of the section.

This section is not retrospective in its operation. Section 63 of the amending Act of 1929 which came into force on the 1st of April 1930 expressly provides that nothing in S. 32 of that Act which introduced this section, shall be deemed to affect, in any way the terms or incidents of any transfer of property effected before the abovementioned date, or any right title obligation or liability already acquired, secured or incurred before the date. This section, therefore, can have no application to mortgages executed before the 1st of April 1930 (1)

3. Section if applicable to charges created by operation of law.

Section 100 provides that all the provisions contained in the previous sections which apply to a simple mortgage shall, so far as may be, apply to a charge. It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta, that the requirement in this section that the mortgages should be by the same mortgagor and the words "in the absence of a contract to the contrary" are inappropriate to charges by operation of law, and that, consequently, S. 100 will not enable this section to be applied to statutory charges. (1)

4. Mortgages must have been executed by the same mortgagor.

This section has no application unless all the mortgages have been executed by the same mortgagor.

(1) A, claiming to be the adopted son of X, deceased, executed a mortgage in favour of P. X's widows B and C also executed a mortgage in respect of the same property to P. P filed a suit on both the mortgages impleading A, B and C as parties. It was held that as the mortgagors were different S. 67A did not enable the filing of a single suit on both the mortgages (1)

(2). A, B and C executed a mortgage to D, E and F. Subsequently, B and C only executed a mortgage of the same properties in favour of F, G and H. It was held that S. 67A did not apply so as to compel a suit to be filed on both the mortgages. (2)

(3) A made a mortgage in favour of X of his share in certain joint property. Subsequently, A, B and C who were all the sharers in the property, mortgaged all their shares to X. It was held that a suit on the first mortgage did not prevent a subsequent suit on the later mortgage. (3)

There is no statutory provision or rule or principle by which the wife and the husband could be treated as one entity for the purpose of mortgages. Where the husband and the wife own separate and distinct property and each mortgages his property and also jointly, the suit to enforce the joint mortgage does not bar a suit to enforce the mortgage by one spouse. Section 67-A is not attracted as the mortgagor is not the same in these cases.(4)

Where 'A' executed a mortgage and B and C stood sureties but B and C independently executed on the same day two independent mortgages in favour of the plaintiff with regard to the same property and the amount on these mortgages having become due claim respecting these mortgages had also to be made in the same suit i.e. plaintiff had to sue on all the three mortgages.(5)

A mortgage by A and, after his death, a mortgage by B, his legal representative, cannot, for the purpose of this section, be taken as having been executed by different mortgagors.(6) So also where a father executed a mortgage as karta of joint Hindu family consisting of the father and his son, and subsequently the father and the son together executed another mortgage, it was held that the "mortgagor" in both the mortgages was the same, the joint family (7) See also section 59A

5. "Same kind of decree".

The second essential for the applicability of the section is that two or more mortgages must be such that the mortgagee should have a right to obtain the same kind of decree in respect of each of them. A decree for sale can, for instance, be obtained on a simple mortgage, but not on a usufructuary mortgage. Consequently, a person having a simple as well as a usufructuary mortgage is not bound under this section to sue on both of them in the same suit.

The question, however, arises whether apart from this section, the mortgagee can under any circumstances, be compelled to sue on both the mortgages. It has been held in the undermentioned cases(1) that there is nothing in O 34, R. 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure to prevent the mortgagee from suing on his later simple mortgage subject to his prior the usufructuary mortgage. As to whether he can sell the properties free of the usufructuary mortgage, see the A. I. R. Commentaries on the Code of Civil Procedure 10th (1985) Edition O 34, R. 12. Note 4

On the other hand, the question as to whether a mortgagee can sue on his earlier simple mortgage without also claiming relief on his subsequent mortgage is more difficult to answer, by reason of the fact that the explanation to O 34, R. 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908, provides only that a prior mortgagee need not be made a party to a suit on the subsequent mortgage. According to the undermentioned cases(2) the mortgagee cannot sue on his earlier simple mortgage alone without mentioning his second usufructuary mortgage, and if he does so a second suit on the later mortgage would be barred. The first of those cases has been dissented from in a later case (3) of the same Court, in which, however, both the mortgages were simple. The second of the cases was one arising under the old S. 85 of the Act which did not contain any explanation corresponding to that contained in O 34, R 1 of the Code. The wording of the section seems to support the view that in all cases not covered by the section, a mortgagee can sue and obtain decrees of each of his mortgages separately.

6. Property mortgaged, if need be the same.

The wording of the section is wide enough to include mortgages over different properties. A person having several mortgages executed by the same mortgagor must, therefore, combine all the mortgages in one suit if the other conditions of the section are satisfied (1). The High Court of Madras has, however, observed that the principle of consolidation of mortgages becomes necessary where the mortgages relate to the same property and therefore this section requires to be suitably amended by compelling only a mortgagee who holds two or more mortgages over the same property executed by the same mortgagor to sue on all mortgages and not a mortgagee who holds two or more mortgages over different properties from the same mortgagor (2). There is further one limitation to the above proposition. All the mortgages on different properties may be consolidated in one suit but the Court before whom the suit is instituted must have jurisdiction to enforce all the mortgages. In case the property subject to one of the mortgages is outside the territorial jurisdiction of the Court, there can be no consolidation of claims and therefore this section cannot apply (3). Thus where two mortgages executed in favour of the same mortgagee by the same mortgagor related to different properties each in a different district and hence within the jurisdiction of different Courts, it was held that this section did not apply and that it was not obligatory upon the mortgagee to bring a consolidated suit on both the mortgages as neither this section nor section 17 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, could give either Court jurisdiction as regards the mortgage of the property situated beyond its jurisdiction (4). In a suit for land with leave under Cl 12 of the Letters Patent (Cal) the plaintiff has to show that whole or part of the land is within the jurisdiction of the High Court. If there are two separate mortgages the High Court will have no jurisdiction to try the suit unless each mortgage contains the whole or part of the land within the jurisdiction of the High Court (5).

7. "In the absence of a contract to the contrary."

As has been seen in Note 1, the object of the section is to benefit the mortgagor.(1) Liberty has, therefore, been given to him, if he chooses to waive himself out of the benefit.(2) Where previously there were two mortgages but one of the mortgage deed stipulated that mortgagee shall be entitled to sue on the mortgage only, stipulation, provided for "a contract to contrary" and as such S. 67A would be inapplicable.(3) Contract need not be in writing.(4)

8. Money must have been due on all the mortgages.

A mortgagee having several mortgages is bound to sue on all of them at the same time only if the mortgage-money has become due on all of them.(1)

The question whether and when the mortgage-money in respect of a particular mortgage has become due has necessarily to be decided with reference to the terms of the particular document or transaction in question. For illustrative cases, see the A I R Commentaries on the Limitation Act, 1963, 7th (1997) Edn., Article 62, Note 22.

A mortgage deed provided for the payment of the mortgage amount in instalments with a default clause that if two consecutive instalments were in arrears, the mortgagee could claim the whole. The mortgagee elected to sue on only two of the instalments that were in arrears. It was contended that on the principle of this section the suit must be for the whole amount. It was held by the Madras High Court that assuming that this section can be applied to the case, it could not be said that the portion of the mortgage not sued on became payable by reason merely of the default of the two instalments. The mortgage had an option to treat the whole amount as payable and if he waives it, the portion other than that sued for cannot be said to have become payable (2)

1. Scope of the section.

This section deals with the personal liability of the mortgagor for the mortgage-money. The mortgagor may, in the mortgage contract itself, bind himself to pay the amount, in which case, the personal liability will arise under cl (a) by the terms of the contract of mortgage itself, independently of such contractual obligation, it may arise under clause (b), (c) or (d) (1) As was pointed out by the High Court of Calcutta in Sukhadakanta v. Jogineekanta, (2) clause (a) of this section gives the mortgagee a right ex contractu; clause (b), a right on equitable grounds and clauses (c) and (d), a right ex delicto.

1. AIR 1916 PC 119 (120) : 44 Cal 388 : 44 Ind App 87.

The rules laid down in the section were well recognised even before 1882, and the Act has only formulated those rules in this section in precise and convenient language.(3)

The section precludes the mortgagee from suing the mortgagor for the mortgage-money except in the cases provided for, that is, it precludes the mortgagee from maintaining a suit in which his primary relief claimed is a relief against the mortgagor personally, unless the case comes within any of the clauses (a), (b), (c) or (d) (4) A suit under cls (b) and (c) is not a suit to recover the mortgage-debt on the basis that the debt is due but it is a suit for compensation where the mortgagee is deprived of his security.(5)

But the section presupposes the existence of a valid mortgage. But independently of this section the mortgagee under an invalid mortgage may be entitled to a decree for the money advanced. (See Note 13).

The section gives a right to sue for the mortgage-money, i.e. to bring a suit for the mortgage-money.(6)

A mortgagee's right to recover the mortgage-money by sale of the hypothecated property cannot in any way be affected by a mere decree obtained by a stranger against the hypothecator declaring that he is not the owner of the property. The stranger does not, by such a decree, acquire the rights of the hypothecator.(7)

But the question of giving relief under Section 68 arises only when there is a mortgage apart from the fact that it is not a valid mortgage. Where the document is not of mortgage relief cannot be granted.(8)

Section 68 is independent of S. 65 and it does not in terms provide a remedy for any breach of the covenants prescribed in S. 65 of the Act.(9)

Like S. 60, S. 68 is unqualified in its terms and contains no saving provisions in favour of contracts to the contrary. It is, therefore, independent of provisions of S. 98 and does not conflict with it.(10)

Section 68 is an independent provision vis-a-vis Section 98 of the T P Act as the mortgagee is not bound to sue for realisation of security such a suit is not barred under Order 2, Rule 2, Civil P. C (11)

A mortgagee can realise the whole amount of the mortgage-debt from any one of his debtors and so it cannot be said that the mere fact that it is found that four out of the seven mortgagors are not bound by the mortgage would exonerate the others from repaying the money which they had borrowed.(12)

Where, a property is mortgaged to one person and that person subsequently dies leaving two or more heirs jointly entitled to his estate, payment of the mortgage amount to one of those heirs without the concurrence of the rest cannot amount to a valid discharge of the debt. One of the heirs cannot enforce the mortgage without the concurrence of the rest of the heirs (13)

If one of the mortgagees brings a suit for part of share in the mortgaged property and the other mortgagees are not impleaded within limitation the suit is not maintainable (14)

The section does not deal with the period of limitation for filing a suit or extension of the period prescribed by the Limitation Act for filing a suit (15) The right conferred by the section is again not a right to enforce the mortgage but a right to sue for the mortgage-money on the personal covenant or to claim compensation when the mortgagee is deprived of his security (16)

There was a usufructuary mortgage with a lease back. The transaction was hit by the provisions of Debt Relief Act whereunder the mortgage stood converted into simple mortgage by statutory fiction, enabling mortgagee to realise only mortgage amount with 6% interest. Preliminary decree was accordingly passed. It could not be said that the suit for mortgage amount with interest was not maintainable in view of S. 68.(17)

Where the overdraft facility granted by a bank to its constituent, the principal debtor was secured by promissory note executed by him and by guarantee agreements by guarantors and equitable mortgage was also created, the suit for realisation of money due by the bank is not by the mortgagee for mortgage money. Accordingly S. 68 cannot have any application (18)

1A. Mortgage money.

The term "mortgage money" in S. 58 is not exhaustive. It includes all sums payable by the mortgagor to the mortgagee at the time of redemption. The cost of reconstruction and repairs agreed to be paid by the mortgagor is includible.(1)

2. Clause (a) — Where the mortgagor binds himself to repay the mortgage-money.

Where the mortgagor binds himself to repay the mortgage-money the mortgagee is obviously entitled to sue on the covenant for recovery of the money personally from the mortgagor (1) The covenant may be express or implied. As has been seen in Note 29 on S. 58, a personal covenant to pay the mortgage-money (i.e., a covenant to pay apart from the mortgaged property) must be presumed to exist in all mortgages unless there is something in the nature or terms of the mortgage to mortgaged property, there is no personal liability even if the mortgagor has stated in the mortgage document that he will pay the money, for some such sentence is found almost in all mortgages (4) Thus, where in a mortgage bond the mortgagor covenanted to pay the amount in three years in default of which the mortgagee was entitled to sue for foreclosure, it was held that there was no personal covenant to pay the mortgage-debt within the meaning of this section. (5) So also, where in a possessory mortgage, the covenant to repay the mortgage-money within a certain time, is coupled with a stipulation that if the money be not paid within the time fixed, the mortgagee would continue to be in possession and the mortgage bond would remain in force, it was held that there was no covenant to repay on the part of the mortgagor (6) See also the undermentioned cases (7) to a similar effect. It has been held in the undermentioned cases(8) that clause (a) refers to an express covenant and not to an implied covenant to pay. This view is against the general trend of opinion. Where there is a clear covenant to pay but there is a clause added which not merely limits but destroys the liability itself, as where a person covenants to pay, but says that this shall not import a personal liability, such a clause will be regarded as repugnant to the covenant and void.(9)

'Otti' mortgage in Travancore is an anomalous mortgage in which by customary law a personal covenant to repay is implied, therefore, a suit for mortgage money on loss of possession is maintainable.(10)

Subject to the principles stated above, the question whether there is a personal covenant to pay in any particular case will depend upon the particular language of the document and the other facts of the case.(11) Where the mortgagor covenanted to pay the mortgage amount in the event of the mortgagee being dispossessed but no possession was delivered to him 'initially', it was held that the covenant did not come into operation at all and that the mortgagee could not get any relief on the basis of the covenant.(12)

It has been held by the Calcutta High Court that the rights of a creditor who takes a security in the shape of a mortgage are not exactly as wide as the rights of a creditor under the general law. His rights are to some extent curtailed by the provisions of this Act, he has no right to relief independently of the mortgage, and apart from his rights as mortgagee he cannot enforce the personal liability against the other members of the family of which the mortgagor is the manager (13)

It has been held in England that a mortgagee will not be allowed to sue on the covenant to pay if he has so dealt with the property as to render it impossible for him to restore it to the mortgagor on full payment.(14) But the principle does not apply where he cannot restore the estate by reason of his being evicted by a title paramount (15) Nor does the principle apply where the mortgagee, under the power of sale which he has, sells the property and after adjusting the amount realised towards the mortgage finds that there is still a balance. He can sue the mortgagor for the balance even though he cannot restore the property to the mortgagor on payment (16) It has been held that even after foreclosure, the mortgagee is entitled to sue for the money on the covenant, but in such a case the mortgagor will get a new right to redeem the property (17)

See also cases cited in Note 3 on S. 91.

The mere fact that the mortgagee acquires the mortgaged property, for instance, by succession to auction-purchaser who has purchased the property in execution of a maintenance decree against the mortgagor, would not debar the mortgagee from recovering his debt, unless the acquisition has the effect of extinguishing his debt.(18)

The fact that a second mortgagee submits to a decree for foreclosure on the first mortgage does not prevent him from suing on the personal covenant to pay against the mortgagor.(19)

Though a mortgage, like that by conditional sale, may not import a personal covenant to pay, it necessarily implies a 'debt' within the meaning of the debt relief legislation.(20) (See also S 58 Note 29.)

3. Clause (b) — Security destroyed or rendered insufficient.

This clause merely enacted the rule well recognised in England and in India, that where the mortgaged property is lost to the mortgagee owing to no fault of the mortgagor or mortgagee, the latter would be entitled to sue for the mortgage-money. Thus where the property is lost to the mortgagee by its being destroyed by fire or flood, the mortgagee would be entitled to sue for the mortgage-money.(1) It is, however, necessary that the mortgagor should be given a reasonable opportunity to provide further security enough to render the whole security including what may remain of the original security, sufficient (2) It is only after such opportunity is given, and the mortgagor fails to furnish the additional security that the mortgagee is entitled to sue.(3)

What is reasonable opportunity will depend upon the facts of the particular case.(4) The clause does not apply where the destruction of the property is caused by the 'wrongful act' of the mortgagee(5) or where he has acquiesced in the diminution of the security.(6)

A 'destruction' of the mortgaged property may be said to take place in the following cases :

- (1) Diluvion of the property.(7)
- (2) Land washed away by flood.
- (3) Property being burnt down.(8)
- (4) House falling down.(9)

As illustrations of security becoming 'sufficient' may be mentioned the following

- (1) Where the mortgagor being in possession as lessee of the mortgagee applies to the revenue Court and gets the rent reduced.(10)
- (2) Where the mortgagor obtains a decree for pre-emption of certain properties and mortgages them but subsequently the claim for pre-emption is disallowed (11)
- (3) Where A mortgages certain property to B, who sub-mortgages his right to C and A thereafter redeems B, and C is not paid his amount, C's security as against B is rendered insufficient and he can proceed against B under this clause (12)
- (4) Where the mortgaged property is sold away in execution of a decree on a prior mortgage to which the mortgagee is a party.(13)
- (5) Where one co-sharer mortgages the entire property and the other co-sharers obtain a decree declaring that the mortgage is not binding on their shares (14)
- (6) Where there is a perpetual lease of mortgaged property by mortgagor (15)

There is a difference of opinion as to whether the mortgaged property can be said to be "destroyed" when it is acquired under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act. The general view is that there is no "destruction" of the property in such a case.(16) though where the mortgage is one with possession the mortgagee may be entitled to relief under cl. (d) (17) A contrary view namely that such acquisition constitutes a "destruction" of the property has been held in the under-mentioned cases (18) It is submitted that this view is not correct. security, the property is merely transmuted into money on which the mortgagee has his charge for the mortgage amount. The mortgagee's security cannot be said either to have been destroyed or to have been rendered insufficient within the meaning of this clause.

Where 'A' had usufructually mortgaged some land with 'B' and there was compulsory acquisition of the said land by the Government, the compensation amount paid by the Govt. for the said land was utilised by mortgagee 'B' in part satisfaction of mortgage amount and a suit was brought for balance of the mortgage amount, it was held that the usufructuary mortgage did not create a debt, and held that there was no personal covenant by the mortgagor for the repayment of mortgage money and the compulsory acquisition of mortgaged property did not amount to any destruction or deprivation. The collateral security for the mortgage amount was substituted by the compensation amount paid for the property by the Govt. and as the entire compensation amount had been taken in satisfaction of the mortgage amount, the security had been exhausted, the suit of the mortgagee 'B' for recovery of balance mortgage amount was, therefore, liable to be dismissed. (19)

It has been held that the partition of India did not legally have the effect of destroying the rights of Hindu owners of property in Pakistan or of Muslim owners in India. (20) A mortgagee claiming property not mortgaged to him in substitution of the destroyed mortgaged property must establish circumstances so as to raise an enquiry in his favour (21)

The "insufficiency" in this clause must be such as is contemplated by S. 66. A 'misdescription' of the property in the mortgage-deed does not render the security "insufficient" within the meaning of S. 66 (22). Nor does the mere discovery of some defect in the mortgagor's title "render the security insufficient" as defined in section 66 (23).

In the undermentioned case it was held that in taking proceedings for commutation of bhaoli rent to money rent under S. 40 of the Bihar Tenancy Act, the mortgagees who were tenants were exercising only the right which law conferred upon them and if under the law of the bhaoli rent was excessive and liable to be commuted to money rent, the mortgagees cannot be held responsible for reduction of the jama as a consequence of the commutation which was effected under the law. (24)

If a mortgagee in possession of Milkiat interest and Zerat land is divested of Milkiat interest by the State under Bihar Land Reforms Act unless mortgagor is given an opportunity to give further security suit for mortgage money is not tenable (25)

It has been held that it is not essential under this clause that the destruction of the mortgaged property should be in consequence of the acts of the mortgagor himself. (26)

'other than the mortgagor's or mortgagee's wrongful act or default.' This clause deals with the 'deprivation' of security owing to the 'mortgagor's wrongful act or default.' On such a deprivation the mortgagee would be entitled to sue for the mortgage-money (1). It is not necessary that the deprivation of the security in part should have rendered the security insufficient within the meaning of S. 66. A deprivation to 'any' extent will entitle the mortgagee to sue under this clause even though the portion of the mortgaged property of which the mortgagee is not deprived cannot be said to be not sufficient within the meaning of S. 66 (2). Under this clause a suit against persons who have not mortgaged their property but are party to the mortgage bond, is maintainable (3). The fact that the mortgagee allowed his remedy under Cl. (a) of this section to get barred by time cannot in any way affect his right to apply for a personal decree on the basis of this clause (4).

(A) Wrongful act.

A 'waste' committed by the mortgagor is a 'wrongful act' of the mortgagor which will entitle the mortgagee to sue for the mortgage-money (5). The words "wrongful act" in S. 68(1)(c) would include trespass or forcible possession of the mortgaged property by the mortgagor (6). Where property, the subject of an unregistered mortgage-deed for less than Rs. 100 (7) was subsequently sold by the mortgagor by a registered sale deed to a third person without notice of the mortgage, it was held that the mortgagee was thereby deprived of the security by the wrongful act of the mortgagor (8). Where, however, the mortgagee with possession leases back the property to the mortgagor and the latter either fails to pay the rent (9) or gets the rent reduced under the tenancy Act. (10) his act cannot be considered a wrongful act of the 'mortgagor' within the meaning of this clause.

In Hira Lal v. Ghasitu (11) where a mortgagee in possession leased back the property to the mortgagor, but on the expiry of the lease the mortgagor refused to delivery possession back to the mortgagee, it was held by two Judges of the Full Bench that there was a deprivation of the security by the wrongful act of the mortgagor within the meaning of this clause, while the other three judges held that the clause applicable was clause (d) and not this clause.

Where the mortgagee is deprived of whole or part of his security by wrongful act of the mortgagor, suit for mortgage money will be in the nature of a suit for wrong done to the mortgaged property.(12)

Where a possessory mortgagee leased back the property to the mortgagor on the same date and under the mortgage the mortgagee was entitled to recover mortgage dues only in the case of dispossession on failure of the mortgagor to pay rent the remedy of the mortgagee was to sue for mortgage dues and not sue for possession.(13)

A transfer of the 'equity of redemption' by the mortgagor cannot be said to be a wrongful act of the mortgagor by which the mortgagee can be said to be deprived of his security.(14) Nor is the mortgagor guilty of any wrongful act by allowing a sale in rights in any way (15) It would of course be otherwise, where the sale would be binding on the mortgagee.(16) It has been held by the Nagpur High Court that the co-sharers of a village cannot be made responsible under this clause for the diminution in the mortgage security caused by the wrongful act of the lambardar it is not proved that he did it with their consent.(17)

The cause of action for enforcing the personal remedy under this clause arises, only on the date on which the mortgagee loses the benefit of the security by reason of the wrongful act of the mortgagor.(18)

In the case of a usufructuary mortgagee losing security as a result of the wrongful act of the mortgagor his remedy is either to sue for money or for possession and in such case the period of limitation is six years under Art. 120, Limitation Act, 1908.(19)

(B) Wrongful default.

A failure by the mortgagor to disclose,(20) or to pay up a prior incumbrance(21) or to disclose a defect in his title(22) would be a 'wrongful default' within the meaning of this section.

Thus, where joint family property is mortgaged by a member of the family for purposes not binding on the family and the mortgagee is deprived of the property in a suit by the other members of the family, the mortgagee would be entitled to relief under this clause.(23) The case would, however, be different where the mortgagee is 'aware' of the defect in the title of the mortgagor to mortgage the property.(24)

A failure to pay the Government revenue due on the mortgaged property, resulting in the sale of the property is a wrongful default of the mortgagor entitling the mortgagee to sue for his money under this clause.(25)

It was held in a case before the Act that where the mortgagee was deprived of 'part' of the security he could sue only for a 'proportionate' part of the mortgage-money (26) Under this section it is clear that he can sue for the whole of the mortgage money even if he is deprived only of a part of the security. There is, however, nothing in this section to take away the right of the mortgagee to claim a portion of the mortgage-money, when deprived of a part of the security, as damages for breach of implied contract under S. 65 of the Act.(27)

The word "mortgagor" would include persons deriving title from him (see S. 59A) and the latter would be liable under this section not only in respect of 'their own' wrongful act or default.(28) but also in respect of the default of the mortgagor himself, though in this case, they would be liable only to the extent of the property got by them from the mortgagor (29) The wrongful act or default must be 'anterior' to the deprivation of the security in whole or in part. Where the mortgagee is for instance deprived of the property by the owner of a paramount title the mortgagor's failure to defend his title against the holder of such title is not a wrongful act or default within the meaning of this clause.(30)

5. Clause (d).

Clause (d) is an enabling provision (1) In order that this clause might apply the mortgagee must, under the terms of the mortgage, be 'entitled to possession' (2) and the mortgagor must have failed either to deliver possession of the mortgaged property or if he has delivered possession, to secure such possession without disturbance by the mortgagor or by any other person claiming under a title superior to that of the mortgagor. Where, therefore, the mortgagee has been given possession and there has been no disturbance thereof by anybody, this clause will not apply even though it is discovered that the mortgagor has no title to a portion of the property. (3) In the under-mentioned case (4) the mortgagor sold the equity of redemption to X and the mortgagee pre-empted X. It was held that the change in the nature of the possession, from that of a mortgagee to that of a purchaser, did not bring the case within this section so as to entitle the mortgagee to sue for his money. It is necessary under this clause that the mortgagee must not only be entitled to possession but must be entitled to possession according to law. Thus, a mortgagee of an undivided share of coparcenary property not being entitled under the Hindu Law to joint possession cannot recover mortgage-money under this clause (5). This clause will not apply where a usufructuary mortgage provides that if the mortgagee is dispossessed, he should be entitled to recover the amount advanced by him. In such a case where the mortgagee does not obtain possession of the property, he would be entitled to recover the mortgage-money with interest as stipulated in the bond not as a claim with respect to a personal covenant in the bond or under S. 68 (d) of the Act but as one to enforce a charge upon the immovable property under the covenants in the bond itself (6).

The failure to deliver or to secure possession need not for the purposes of this clause, be in respect of the whole of the mortgaged property. A failure to deliver or to secure possession of even a 'portion' of the property will entitle the mortgagee to sue for the mortgage-money (7).

It is not necessary that the failure to deliver or to secure possession should be 'intentional' on the part of the mortgagor (8). Nor is it necessary under this clause that the mortgagee should, in the first instance, call upon the mortgagor to furnish fresh security equivalent to the one of which he was dispossessed, as is required by clause (b). The contrary view expressed in the undermentioned case (9) cannot be regarded as correct.

If the mortgagee is not put into possession under the usufructuary mortgage on the date of the mortgage and the mortgagor neglects to deliver possession, the mortgagee is entitled to sue for mortgaged money. (10)

(A) Failure to deliver possession.

Where the mortgagee is entitled, under the terms of the mortgage, to possession, and the mortgagor fails to deliver the same to him, the mortgagee will be entitled to sue under this clause for the mortgage-money (11) to be due and the mortgagor will have to wait for the expiration of the stipulated period before he can redeem the property (15) Where the mortgage provides the period of redemption and the mortgagor fails to deliver possession of mortgaged property agreed upon, and the option under S. 68(1)(d) is not exercised by the mortgagee, the amount of mortgage cannot be said to be due till the expiry of the period of redemption Therefore the failure of mortgagee to sue immediately on the default either for recovery of money or for possession under S. 68(1)(d) is not fatal for recovery of mortgage debt after the period of redemption (16) Where, being entitled to several reliefs on the same cause of action, he sues for one of them only, he will be barred under the provisions of O 2, R. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure from subsequently suing for the other reliefs (17) It has, however, been held in the case noted below (18) that the right conferred under this clause is nothing but compensation to the mortgagee for the default of the mortgagor to surrender possession of the mortgaged property and not an alternative remedy for recovery of the mortgage-money based on the right founded upon the personal covenant contained in the mortgage deed to repay the mortgage-amount and that there could be no election, in the legal sense, in the case of a mortgagee entitled to sue for the mortgage-money both by reason of the covenant in the contract and the provisions of this clause, but who chooses to enforce the covenant and not the statutory right, for getting any payment. (19)

The failure to deliver possession is not restricted to a failure 'initially' to deliver possession at the time of the mortgage Where the mortgagee, not entitled to possession at the time of the mortgage, becomes subsequently entitled to possession. (20) e.g., where the mortgagor covenants to deliver possession on default of payment of interest and such default occurs. (21) a failure to deliver possession on such date will entitle the mortgagee to claim relief under this clause.

In the undermentioned case (22) the mortgagee was entitled on failure of the mortgagor to pay the mortgage-money in five years, to 'take possession' of the mortgaged property But he never demanded possession from the mortgagor. It was held that there was no failure to deliver possession within the meaning of this clause.

(B) Failure to secure possession.

The mortgagor is bound to secure possession to the mortgagee without disturbance —

(1) by himself, or

(2) by any person claiming under a title superior to that of the mortgagor

A dispossession of the mortgagee by the mortgagor will be a disturbance by the mortgagor and will entitle the mortgagee to sue for the mortgage-money (23) Where the mortgagee in possession leased the mortgaged property to the mortgagor, but on the expiry of the lease the latter refused to deliver possession, it was held by three Judges of the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court that there was a failure by the mortgagor to secure possession to the mortgagee within the meaning of this clause (24) Where A, B and C executed a Zarpeshgi mortgage in favour of D and later on D granted a lease in favour of A and B only and A and B remained in possession after the expiry of the lease, it was held that this section did not apply as there was no dispossession by C even though possession of A and B would amount to dispossession of D (25)

Clause (e) of the section, as it stood before the amendment of 1929 and which corresponded with clause (d) of the present section, used the words "or any other person" These words were however, generally interpreted to mean persons with a paramount title and not others (26) though in the undermentioned case, (27) those words were interpreted to mean any person claiming through the mortgagor and not a person claiming under a superior title The amendment now makes the position quite clear.

27. AIR 1931 Lah 694 (695).

The following are illustrations of persons with a superior title to that of the mortgagor :

(1) A co-sharer of the mortgagor.(28)

(2) A prior encumbrancer.(29)

(3) A landlord of the mortgagor who gets the mortgage set aside (30)

A 'trespasser' with no title is not a person claiming under title superior to that of the mortgagor and a disturbance by him is not within this clause (31) Certain property belonged to two persons A and B A bequeathed by his will, his share to C who subsequently transferred the same to B, so that B became full owner B then mortgaged the property with possession to X, and delivered possession Thereafter a creditor of A obtained a decree against the 'assets' of A in the hands of his widow and C and attached the mortgaged property in execution of his decree X preferred a claim which was dismissed but did not file a suit to challenge this order The creditor brought the property to sale, purchased it and then dispossessed X. X thereupon sued for relief under this clause It was held that the creditor was not a person with any title inasmuch as the mortgaged property did not constitute the 'assets' of A and could not be attached as such, that the disturbance of possession could not therefore be said to be by a person with a title superior to that of the mortgagor, and that therefore this clause did not apply.(32)

In the undermentioned case,(33) A mortgaged property to X. B, claiming title to the property in himself, mortgaged the same property to Y who dispossessed X. It was held that this clause applied.

As to the failure to deliver possession or disturbance of possession by persons claiming under the mortgagor, see Notes 6 and 7.

The mortgagee has also other remedies open to him. He may sue for possession of the property (34) Where it may be a usufructuary or anomalous mortgage, it would be open in either case to will result in the mortgagee losing his right to sue for the money only in respect of the 'particular disturbance' acquiesced in.(4)

The question whether there has been acquiescence such as would deprive the mortgagee of his rights is a question of fact depending upon the facts and circumstances of each case.(5)

7. Dispossession owing to default of mortgagee himself.

The mortgagee cannot take advantage of his own default. If he is dispossessed owing to his own default, he cannot sue for the mortgage-money.

Illustrations

(1) A mortgagee bound to pay assessment on the mortgaged property fails to pay it with the result that the mortgaged property is sold for the recovery of such amount. He cannot sue for the mortgage-money under this section.(1)

(2) A mortgagee entitled to make a valid defence to a suit by a subsequent mortgagee failed to make it with the result that his security was diminished. It was held that he could not sue for the mortgage-money.(2)

(3) A simple money creditor of the mortgagor attached the mortgaged property in execution of his decree. The mortgagee objected under O 21, R 62, Civil Procedure Code but the objection was dismissed. He failed to file a suit under O 21, R 63 within one year of the dismissal of the objection, but filed a suit for the mortgage-money, on his being dispossessed by the auction-purchaser in execution of the money decree. It was held that he was not entitled to do so.(3)

8. Transferee from mortgagor.

Under the old section which did not contain any proviso such as that found now in the section, it was held that the words "binds himself" in clause (a) of the section were an express provision showing that the word "mortgagor" in that clause did not include a person deriving title from him and that therefore the personal liability under that clause was not enforceable against the transferee from him.(1) though a contrary opinion was also expressed in the case noted below.(2) The proviso now makes the position clear, and is in accordance with general principles of law. Where, therefore, a mortgage contains a personal covenant and cl (a) is applicable, the personal liability can be enforced only against the mortgagor or his legal representative but not against the transferee from the mortgagor or from his legal representative (3)

Section 59-A which provides that the word "mortgagor" shall be deemed to include persons deriving title from him, cannot apply to cases coming under cl (a) inasmuch as the proviso is an express provision to the contrary. A personal covenant to pay does not run with the land(4) and therefore cannot be enforced against the assignee of the property (5). In Nanku Prasad v Kampta Prasad(6) their Lordships of the Privy Council held, on the facts, that the purchaser of the equity of redemption did not become personally liable to the mortgagee to discharge the mortgage debt (7). The proviso to section is however, limited to cl (a) of the section. So far as the other clauses of the section are concerned, the word "mortgagor" would in view of S 59-A include a transferee from him.(8)

Where a mortgage suit is filed against the mortgagor and subsequent purchaser of mortgaged security and the mortgagor died during pendency of the suit, the suit can continue against the purchaser.(9) The undermentioned case(10) holding that right of mortgagee to sue for mortgage money is only against mortgagor and not third person even in cases covered by other clause of sub-sec. The mere agreement by the purchaser with the vendor to pay the mortgaged-debt does not, without any communication with the 'mortgagee', make it the personal debt of the purchaser (11) Such a covenant or agreement is merely considered one for indemnity against the mortgage, on which the transferee may be personally liable to the mortgagor. (12) But if the transferee enters into a new contract with the mortgagee, as for different times and modes of payment, he would be personally liable. (13) In Woods v. Huntingford, (14) the Master of the Rolls, Sir William Arden, said :

"Where a man buys subject to a mortgage, and has no connexion or contract or communication with the mortgagee, and does no other act to shew an intention to transfer that debt from the estate to himself as between his heir and executor, but merely that, which he must do, if he pays a less price in consequence of that mortgage, that is, indemnifies the vendor against it, he does not by that act take the debt upon himself personally."

The fact that the transferee pays interest on the mortgage does not render him personally liable for the debt. (15)

9. Legal representative of mortgagor.

The word "mortgagor" would include his legal representative ordinarily, but such legal representative will, so far as the act or default of the mortgagor himself is concerned, be liable only in respect of the estate which he has inherited, and so far only as such assets extend. (1) He may, however, make himself personally liable by himself entering into a contract with the mortgagee to pay the amount.(2)

10. Minor not personally liable.

Where a mortgage of the joint family property is executed by a Hindu father, in which he has bound himself to pay the amount, the son who is a minor on the date of the mortgage is not personally liable to pay the mortgage-money.(1)

11. Guardian not personally liable.

Where a guardian executed a hypothecation bond 'as a guardian' containing a stipulation 'I have agreed to pay', it was held that there was no covenant to pay by the executant, except as guardian and that he was not personally liable for the mortgage amount (1)

12. Anomalous mortgages.

There is a conflict of decisions as to the applicability of this section to anomalous mortgages. The High Courts of Allahabad and Lahore and the Chief Court of Sind have held that this section applies to such mortgages.(1) The contrary view has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta and Madras and the Chief Court of Oudh (2) The former view is it is submitted correct. (See S 98 Note 1) A later decision(3) of the Madras High Court has also taken this view and has held that the section applies to anomalous mortgages. A simple mortgage usufructuary was under the Act before the amendment of 1929, not an anomalous mortgage, and it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that where in such a case the mortgagor failed to deliver possession, the mortgagee could sue under clause (c) of the old section corresponding to the present clause (d) (4) Under the present amendment, such a mortgage will be an anomalous mortgage governed by S 98.

13. Void mortgages.

The section presupposes the existence of a 'valid' mortgage. If there is no valid mortgage no relief can be claimed under any of the clauses of this section (1) undermentioned cases(7) where the mortgage was bad in law and there was no personal covenant to pay, it was held that no relief of any kind could be granted to the plaintiff. Section 65 of the Contract Act was, however not adverted to.

Section 65 of the Contract Act will not apply where the mortgage is by a person 'incompetent to contract'. Thus, where a 'minor' makes a mortgage, no relief can be granted to the mortgagee under S. 65 of the Contract Act.(8)

14. Interest — Personal liability for.

Interest of which payment is secured by the mortgage contract forms part of the mortgage-money (See S 58). Consequently, the right to sue for the mortgage-money under this section will include the right to sue for the interest, the payment of which is secured by the mortgage contract (1). Thus, where a usufructuary mortgage contains a covenant to pay interest in the event of loss of possession, and the mortgagee loses possession, the mortgagee can claim the mortgage-money which will include not only the principal amount but the interest payable under the contract during the period he has been out of possession.(2) Where no interest is secured by the mortgage contract, as where a usufructuary mortgagee is merely to retain possession in lieu of interest, and the mortgagee is dispossessed, the right to sue for the mortgage-money will not include any right to interest as such, but the Court will award interest as 'damages' in such cases,(3) unless, as has been seen in Note 6, the mortgagee has acquiesced in such dispossession or has failed by his own negligence to take possession (4) The rate of interest in such cases is at the discretion of the Court. Again where the mortgage provides that the mortgagor should pay principal and interest within a particular date and that on default on that date the mortgagee is entitled to take possession of the property, but it is found that the mortgagor could not mortgage the property, it has been held that though the mortgage-deed is not enforceable, the mortgagor would be liable as on a personal covenant for the money borrowed but the creditor would be entitled to interest only by way of damages, the rate of which would be within the discretion of the Court (5) A provision in a mortgage deed for payment of interest on arrears of interest at a rate higher than that payable on the principal sum is not penal. Such a stipulation is an independent and secondary contract though connected with the primary one and can be enforced.(6)

The liability to pay interest cannot be avoided by the mortgagor on the ground that he fore-stalled the mortgagee by the institution of a suit for redemption when if mortgagee institutes a suit for the recovery of the mortgage amount he would undoubtedly be entitled to recover from the mortgagor the interest which he claims.(7)

As a general rule interest is only an 'accessory' to the principal and cannot be recovered apart from the principal,(8) so that if the right to recover the principal money personally from the mortgagor is barred by limitation, the right to recover interest will also fall with it (9) If principal can be claimed in a suit for interest, a further suit for principal is barred under O. 2, R. 2 Civil PC (10)

There is, however, an exception to the general rule, namely, that where there is an 'independent contract' to pay interest it may be recovered by suit even though the personal remedy for the principal amount may have become barred (11) See also Note 5.

A mortgagee is not under a duty to recover his mortgage money as soon as possible and he does not lose his right to get interest if he does not do so. (12)

In the undermentioned case (13) where the understanding between the parties was that the mortgagee was to liquidate his interest in a particular way namely, by recovery of the rent under a lease which was executed by the mortgagor in favour of the husband of the mortgagee, it was held that there was no personal liability to pay interest.

Where a prior mortgage which did not contain a personal covenant was transferred to the usufructuary mortgagee he was not entitled to interest on the amount of the prior mortgage from the date of the transfer. (14)

15. Claim under section is an actionable claim.

The claim of a mortgagee against the mortgagor under this section for failure of the mortgagor to give possession is an actionable claim and can be transferred as such. (1)

16. This section and O. 34, R. 6 of the Civil Procedure Code.

A mortgagee files a suit on the mortgage and obtains a decree. It is thereafter found that owing to no wrongful act or default on his part, he is deprived of his security within the meaning of this section and the mortgaged property ceases to be available for the satisfaction of his decree. What is the remedy of the mortgagee? It has been held by the Chief Court of Oudh that the remedy of the mortgagee is to 'apply' for a personal decree under O. 34, R. 6 of the Code of Civil Procedure and not to file a 'fresh suit' for the purpose. (1) The High Court of Mysore has also expressed a similar view. (2)

A Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court has held that where under the mortgage the mortgagor has taken a personal responsibility to repay the loan only if the mortgaged property was found insufficient for the purpose and this provision has been interpreted by the decree in the mortgage suit to indicate that the property should be found on a sale taking place to be insufficient, the mortgagee is not entitled to a personal decree where no sale has taken place at all. (3) According to the Nagpur High Court, although it is open to mortgagee to enforce his right under this section by a separate suit the more desirable course would be to apply for a personal decree on general principles of justice but not under O. 34, R. 6 of the Code of Civil Procedure (4). These decisions however, seem to require consideration in view of the decision of the Judicial Committee in Kesar Chand v. Uttam Chand. (5)

17. Mortgagee claiming under this section, it can sue for sale.

Where a right to sue for the mortgage money arises under this section it must be taken that the mortgage-money "has become due" for the purposes of S. 67 (1). It would, therefore, seem to follow that whenever a case arises under this section for recovery of the mortgage-money, a suit for sale or for foreclosure as the case may be will lie under S. 67. Under the latter section, however, a 'usufructuary' mortgagee cannot sue for sale of the mortgaged property.

The question therefore, arises whether a 'usufructuary mortgagee' who gets a right to sue for the mortgage-money under S. 68 can sue for sale of the mortgaged property. There has been a conflict of opinion on the point among the High Courts. Before the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Lal Nursingh Partab Bahadur Singh v. Md. Yakub Khan (2) in the year 1929 the following views were expressed :

- (1) Section 68 follows S. 67 the latter provides for a decree for 'sale' the former for a decree for 'money'. Therefore a decree under S. 68 can only be one for money and not for sale. (3)
- (2) Where a usufructuary mortgage contains a 'covenant to pay' and there is a 'hypothecation' of the property, then the mortgagee can sue for sale (4). But if the personal covenant does not import any hypothecation of the property, the mortgagee cannot sue for sale (5).

4. AIR 1949 Nag 319 (327) ILR (1949) Nag 122 (DB). (The judgment in this case (delivered by Sen J) contains a very learned discussion of the meaning of the word 'sue'. But there is no reference to AIR 1945 PC 91 (94) which seems to militate against the view taken and which seems to be against attributing such a wide meaning to the word 'sue' as the Nagpur High Court in this case favoured. The PC seems to take the word 'sue' in this section in the narrow sense in which the word is used in the Civil PC as a proceeding instituted by the presentation of a plaint (vide Civil PC S. 26). (This narrow meaning of the word "suit" has also been taken with reference to the Limitation Act in another decision of the Privy Council (Hansraj v. Dehradun-Mussoorie Electric Tramway Co. Ltd. AIR 1953 PC 63-60 Ind App 13 (PC), cited and discussed in AIR Commentaries on the Civil PC (the 1977 Edn.) S. 2(2) Note 5. This decision has also not been referred to in this Nagpur case.)

- (3) a usufructuary mortgage with a personal covenant to pay is not a 'pure usufructuary mortgage' such as is contemplated by S. 67 and the mortgagee is entitled to sue for sale. (6)
- (4) A usufructuary mortgage with a covenant to pay is an 'anomalous' mortgage, the rights of the 'parties' being governed by the 'intention of the parties' as disclosed by the contract. If the intention is to give a right of sale, then a decree for sale can be passed (7)
- (5) A usufructuary mortgagee who gets a right to sue under S. 68, otherwise than under clause (a) thereof, can sue for sale (8)
- (6) A usufructuary mortgagee who gets a right to sue in cases referred to in (5) above, can merely sue for possession or obtain a 'money decree' but cannot sue for sale (9)

In Lal Narsing Partab's case, (10) referred to above, the mortgagee under a mortgage which was combination of a simple and a usufructuary mortgage was not given possession of the mortgaged property by the mortgagors. It was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the mortgage was not an 'anomalous' mortgage so that the rights of the parties were governed only by the terms of the contract of mortgage, that the failure by the mortgagors to deliver possession to the mortgagee rendered the mortgagee money payable under S. 68 and 'that if the money became payable under S. 68' a decree for sale could be made under S. 67. "It would be a startling result of the legislation," said their Lordships, "if in such a case as this where a default has been made by the mortgagors of a kind which materially affects the mortgagee's security, there existed no remedy for the immediate enforcement of the mortgage."

Even after the decision of the Privy Council referred to above, the conflict of opinions has continued, and the following views have been expressed :

- (1) A usufructuary mortgagee to whom possession is not delivered or who is deprived of his possession is entitled to sue for sale. (11)

- (2) He is also entitled to sue for sale where the mortgage contains a personal covenant to pay.(12)
- (3) A usufructuary mortgagee cannot sue for sale on the basis of a personal covenant to pay, 'unless' such covenant imports also a 'hypothecation' of the property.(13)

The first view is fully supported by the Privy Council decision in Lal Narsing Partab's case (17) As regards the second view it is submitted that a usufructuary mortgage in which there is also covenant to pay, will be an anomalous mortgage as defined in S. 58, clause (g), and governed by S. 98 and that, consequently, unless such personal covenant imports a 'right of sale' (in other words imports a 'hypothecation' of the property) there can be no right of sale. In this view the third and fourth views are correct. The fifth view is clearly opposed to the Privy Council decision and is not correct. It may be noted that at the date of the Privy Council decision in Lal Narsing Partab's case,⁽¹⁸⁾ a simple mortgage usufructuary was not an anomalous mortgage and their Lordships decided the case with reference to Ss 67 and 68. Such a mortgage would, however, under the present Act, be an anomalous mortgage and the rights of the parties would be governed by section 98.

Where a usufructuary mortgagee who is given possession of only a portion of the mortgaged property sues for mortgage money under Clause (d) and obtains a final decree for sale, the mere fact that execution of that decree is barred by limitation does not extinguish the mortgagee's right to possession of the property. The mortgagee has a right to continue in possession and the mortgagor does not, in these circumstances, acquire any title to the property to support a suit for possession against the mortgagee (19). (See also S 60 Note 26.)

18. Sub-section (2).

The 'personal' remedy given by this section is 'additional' to the remedy given by S. 67 against the 'mortgaged' property. And although the remedies are concurrent, the policy of the law is that the mortgagee should not enforce the personal liability before exhausting his remedy against the property (1). This principle is, to a certain extent, found enacted in O 34, R 14 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Under that rule where a mortgagee 'has obtained a decree' for the payment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage, he shall not be entitled to bring the mortgaged property 'to sale' otherwise than by instituting a suit for sale in enforcement of the mortgage. The rule does not prohibit the execution of such decree against the person by arrest, or by attachment of his other properties.

The aim of sub-s (2) of this section is to enable the Court to prevent 'even a decree for money being obtained' until the mortgagee has exhausted all the available remedies against the mortgaged property or what remains of it, unless he abandons his security and, if necessary, re-transfers the mortgaged property. The sub-section, however, enables the Court only to 'stay' the suit, and does not prevent a suit being 'instituted at all'.

The sub-section enables the Court to stay a suit for the mortgage-money in cases falling under clauses (a) and (b). A mortgagee will if his case falls under clauses (c) and (d), have an unconditional right to sue for the mortgage-money. Even in a case falling under cl. (a) or cl. (b), if the mortgagee 'gives up his security,' the Court has no power to stay the suit for the mortgage-money (2). If the mortgagor chooses to create a personal liability by independent transaction like a promissory note, cheque or other independent engagement completely dissociated from the mortgage, he does not come within the scope of clause (a) nor within the principle that security should be called up first before personal liability is enforced. In such a case the suit to enforce that personal liability is not one by the mortgagee for mortgage-money and such a suit cannot be stayed under this sub-section (3).

The power to stay a suit given by this sub-section is entirely discretionary with the Court and the discretion has to be exercised on cogent grounds and not arbitrarily. Further, this power to stay is 'notwithstanding any contract to the contrary.' Any contract, therefore, between the mortgagor and the mortgagee excluding the relief conferred on the mortgagor under this sub-section cannot override or fetter the discretion of the Court if the Court is of opinion that in spite of such contract the suit should be stayed.(4)

If the trial Court in proper exercise of its jurisdiction refused to stay the suit the Court of appeal will not interfere.(5)

In the undermentioned case,(6) A mortgaged certain property to B and then transferred the property to C. B sued A and C for sale of the mortgaged property and for a personal decree against A for the balance that may remain due after the sale of the property. During the progress of the suit B compromised with C, received a certain amount from him, gave up his security and claimed to proceed against A personally for the balance. It was held that S. 68 had no application to the case and that no personal decree could be granted in a suit for sale under S. 67 until the mortgaged property had been put to sale and had failed to realise the entire amount due.

The benefit of the sub-section can be claimed only by the mortgagor or his representatives-in-interest and not by others. A executed a pro-note in favour of X, and K executed security bond in respect thereof. X filed a suit against A and K. He claimed against A a money decree on the promissory note and against K, for sale of the secured property. A contended on the principle of this sub-section that X should exhaust his remedy against the secured property. It was held that A was not a mortgagor and that his contention was unsustainable.(7)

A mortgagor who wishes to avail of this sub-section can only do so on the tacit assumption that there is a valid mortgage. He cannot deny the mortgage and at the same time invoke to apply the discretionary relief under this sub-section.(8)

The prohibition contained in sub-section (2) will apply only if the remedy against the mortgaged property can be available to the mortgagee in the State in which the personal remedy is sought. It will not apply where admittedly such a suit to enforce the mortgaged security cannot be filed.(9)

19. Applicability of the section to the Punjab and North-West Frontier Province.

The principle of this section has been applied to cases arising in the Punjab and the North West Frontier Province to which the Act and, therefore, this section does not in terms apply (1) 20. Applicability of section to charges.

Section 100 makes it clear that all the provisions of the Act applicable to simple mortgages apply, so far as may be, to charges also. Consequently, this section also will apply to charges (1). The privilege conferred by this section on a mortgagee to sue for mortgage-money cannot be availed of by a charge-holder in proceedings in execution of a decree, without resorting to a 'suit', even if the security has been impaired by the conduct of the person creating the charge (2).

21. Limitation for suits to enforce personal liability.

See the A.I.R. Commentaries on the Limitation Act, 7th (1997) Edition, Article 55, Note 14-C and Article 113, Note 52.

A document styled as a conditional sale was executed coupled with a condition that if payment was made within 3 years, the property would be reconveyed. The mortgagee filed a suit to recover mortgage debt. Held that even if the suit were to be construed as a suit to enforce mortgage amount on the basis of the personal covenant, the personal covenant gave a right and also allowed the mortgagor to pay the amount within 3 years of execution of mortgage. It is 12 years thereafter and therefrom that the mortgagee was entitled under S. 68 to sue for mortgage money.(1)

See also the undermentioned cases.(2)

22. Succession certificate.

Where a usufructuary mortgagee dies and his heirs in possession are deprived of the property under circumstances which enable a mortgagee to sue for the mortgage-money under this section, and they thereupon sue for the mortgage-money, S. 4 of the Succession Certificate Act, 1889 (now see S. 214, Succession Act XXXIX of 1925), does not apply, inasmuch as the right to demand the money accrues to them for the first time after the death of the mortgagee.(1)

A decree under Order 34, Rule 4 or 5, C.P.C. in a mortgage suit is not a decree against a debtor for payment of his debt within the meaning of Section 214 of the Indian Succession Act, which is limited to suits where a personal decree against a debtor is required to be passed. Therefore, non-production of probate by legal representatives of the mortgagee does not bar their suit for sale.(2)

1. Analogous law.

The provisions of this section correspond to Ss 19 to 21 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 and 35 Vict., Ch. 41), now repealed and reproduced in the Law of Property Act, 1925 (15 Geo. v. Ch. 20) Sub-sections (1), (2), (3) and (4) of the present section therefore now respectively correspond to Ss 101(1)(i), 103(i), 104(2) and 105 of the Law of Property Act 1925 which run as follows :

"Section 101(1) - A mortgagee, where the mortgage is made by deed shall by virtue of this Act have the following powers, to the like extent as if they had been in terms conferred by the mortgage deed but not further (namely) :

(1) A power, when the mortgage-money has become due, to sell or to concur with any other person in selling, the mortgaged property, or any part thereof either subject to prior charges or not and either together or in lots, by public auction or by private contract subject to such conditions respecting title, or evidence of title or other matter, as the mortgagee thinks fit with power to vary any contract for sale, and to buy in at an auction, or to rescind any contract for sale and to re-sell without being answerable for any loss occasioned thereby."

"Section 103 - A mortgagee shall not exercise the power of sale conferred by this Act unless and until—

(i) Notice requiring payment of the mortgage-money has been served on the mortgagor or one of two or more mortgagors and default has been made in payment of the mortgage-money or of part thereof for three months after such service; or

(ii) Some interest under the mortgage is in arrear and unpaid for two months after becoming due."

"Section 104(2)—Where a conveyance is made in exercise of the power of sale conferred by this Act or any enactment replaced by this Act, the title of the purchaser shall not be impeachable on the ground—

(a) that no case had arisen to authorise the sale; or

(b) that due notice was not given; or

2. Legislative changes.

See the changes noted just after the text of this section above.

3. Scope.

A power of sale inherent in a 'simple mortgage' can be exercised only 'through the intervention of the Court' This section deals with the power of a mortgagee to sell the mortgaged property, without the intervention of the Court (1) The section does not offend Art. 14(2) or Art. 19(1)(f)(3) of the Constitution of India.

The section as it stood before the amendment of 1929 did not itself confer upon the mortgagee any power of sale out of Court. The section only recognised in the case specified therein, the validity of such a power if conferred by the mortgage-deed.(4) But under the amendments of 1929, in cases coming under clause (a) of sub-section (1), an express provision in the mortgage-deed conferring a power of sale is not necessary in order to entitle the mortgagee to sell the property without the intervention of the Court. Such express power is only necessary in cases coming under clauses (b) and (c) of sub-section (1) (5) See also Note 10.

Where the mills belonging to a company were mortgaged to the debenture trustees, and the mortgage was an English mortgage, it has been held that clause (a) of sub-section (1) applies as neither the company nor the debenture trustees could be said to belong to any particular religion (6)

A mortgagee having a power of sale without the intervention of the Court cannot file a suit for that purpose in a Court of law.(7) It has, however, been held that although under this section the mortgagee need not seek the intervention of Court that did not mean that it may not be done.(8)

Section 69, T.P. Act, does not take within its embrace a statutory sale of the type contemplated under the Land Revenue Act. Section 69 contemplates control over the sale proceeds of the mortgage for the mortgagee as after receiving the money on sale, to deal with it in the manner set out in sub-section (4) of Section 69. While under the Land Revenue Act such a situation is not possible.(9)

The provisions of Section 69 of the Transfer of Property Act cannot be availed of for concurring in a sale by the Collector in recovery proceedings under the Land Revenue Act. The Collector has no power to liquidate or wipe out the English mortgages and consequently he has no power to sell the property in execution of certificates in respect of Government dues, free from these mortgages.(10)

In the instant case the mortgagor has executed both simple mortgage and equitable mortgage by deposit of title deeds. As per agreement between the parties all amounts paid by debtor were to be adjusted first against equitable mortgage and then simple mortgage. On debt remaining outstanding, creditor was entitled to recover the amount by auction sale.

Section 69 would apply to auction sale in respect of equitable mortgage also (11)

Sub-section (5) excludes, from the operation of this section, cases where the power has been conferred before the first day of July, 1882. As to the law applicable to such cases, see Notes 4 and 5.

The Act does not apply to the Punjab. Where the parties were businessmen, and the mortgage was in the English form the stipulation giving the mortgagee a power of sale without the intervention of the Court was held valid in that Province, in the absence of any positive enactment prohibiting such a stipulation.(12)

Even when the Act did not apply to Upper Burma this section was applied on grounds of justice, equity and good conscience.(13)

The power of sale may be conferred on a second mortgagee even where no such power has been conferred on the first mortgagee (14)

In exercising the power of sale under this section, the mortgagee does not act as the 'agent' of the mortgagor. The mortgagee exercises his right under a totally superior claim which is not 'under' the mortgagor but 'against' him.(15)

The power of private sale conferred by this section and the power for the appointment of a receiver under S. 69-A are concurrent powers. Hence the existence of a receiver appointed under S. 69-A is no impediment to the exercise of the power of sale under this section (16)

Subsequent suit by mortgagor on ground that auction sale was void after suit in which mortgagee's right to auction mortgaged property was challenged, is not barred (17)

See also the undermentioned case.(18)

4. Law before the Act.

The mortgagee's power of sale without the intervention of the Court was long recognised in the English law of mortgages (1) In this country where the parties were Englishmen, the English law was applied and the stipulation for a power of sale was held valid.(2) When either or both the parties were Indians, and the mortgage was executed in large towns, where business was carried on on European lines, it was held that the mortgagor who have a definite power of sale probably understood perfectly well what he was doing, and that more inconvenience would be caused by obstructing the enforcement of such power than by giving relief under it.(3) Thus, in the island of Bombay(4) and in the town of Karachi in Sind(5) where it was apparent from the mortgage-deed that the parties intended to be governed by the English law, the stipulation giving the mortgagee the power of sale was held valid. There is no express decision on this point of the Calcutta High Court

The law relating to mortgages in the 'mofussil' between parties who were not Europeans in the Bombay and Bengal Presidencies was governed by local Regulations.(6) None of these Regulations recognised the validity of a power of sale without the intervention of the Court.(7) But in the Bombay Presidency, the High Court was in favour of holding the power of sale valid even in the 'mofussil,' if it was apparent from the transaction that the parties intended to be governed by the English law(8) In other cases the power was held invalid (9) In the Bengal Presidency such a power was held repugnant to the spirit of Regulation and hence was not recognised(10) even where the mortgage was in the English form.(11) given under the Trustees' and Mortgagees' Powers Act, 1866,(1) to the holders of mortgages to which the English law was applicable. Under the Act it was not necessary for the parties to confer this power in express terms. This section as originally enacted contained two provisions, one in clause (a) and the other in the last paragraph which related to English mortgages. The scope of the section, however, was restricted in two ways. Firstly, by the opening clause it was restricted to those mortgages only where the power was expressly conferred and, secondly, by the penultimate clause, all mortgages where the power was conferred before the commencement of the Transfer of Property Act were left unaffected by the provisions of the section excepting the last paragraph. The result was that all cases, where power was conferred, whether expressly or not, but before the commencement of the Transfer of Property Act, and all cases where the power was conferred after the commencement of the Transfer of Property Act, but not in express terms, were excluded from the scope of the section. To the former class of cases the Trustees' and Mortgagees' Powers Act, 1866, clearly applied. The latter class of cases also would have been undoubtedly governed by that Act but for some reason or other there was also an express provision to that effect in the last paragraph of the old section. Thus the result was that the section as it stood in 1882 contained two provisions, one in clause (a) and the other in the last paragraph, both of which related to English mortgages which might be executed after the commencement of the Transfer of Property Act. Clause (a) applied to those English mortgages where the power of sale was expressly conferred while the last paragraph related to those English mortgages where it was not so conferred. Again in cases of English mortgages to which clause (a) applied the power of sale was to be exercised according to the provisions of the section, while in case of English mortgages to which the last paragraph applied the power was to be exercised according to the provisions contained in the Trustees' and Mortgagees' Powers Act.

There was difference between the provisions regarding the exercise of the power contained in the section and those contained in the Trustees' and Mortgagees' Powers Act. The provisions in that Act were very defective. Moreover, the English law on which they were based had also undergone considerable changes while the provisions of the sections were borrowed from the new English law as it was contained in the Conveyancing and the Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 and 45 Vict., C 41). The Legislature, therefore, at the time of passing the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act of 1929(2) desired that the exercise of the power should in all cases be regulated by the provisions of this section. To accomplish this, the last paragraph was omitted in that year. But this alone was not sufficient. The Trustees' and Mortgagees' Powers Act was not repealed and it would still have controlled the exercise of power in those cases of English mortgages to which the last paragraph of the old section formerly applied, i.e., cases where the power was not expressly conferred. The repeal of that Act was not possible as it dealt with other matters also such as trusts and leases besides mortgages. Hence, to find a way out of this difficulty and to accomplish the desired result, the Legislature introduced the words "Notwithstanding anything contained in the Trustees' and Mortgagees' Powers Act, 1866" thereby indirectly excluding mortgages from the scope of that Act and bringing all mortgages within the scope of this section (3). As noted already, those words have now been omitted by the Repealing and Amendment Act, 48 of 1952.

6. "Any part thereof."

Under this section a mortgagee is entitled to sell a 'part' of the mortgaged property. A 'legal incident' of the mortgaged property cannot be considered to come within the words "any part thereof" and be sold apart from the property to which it is a legal incident. In In re Yates Batchelder

v Yates(1) where there was a mortgage of land with things attached to it and the mortgagee claimed to sell only the things attached apart from the property itself, Bowen, L. J., observed as follows

"But then we have to consider the power of sale which is given by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act of 1881, and no doubt, a serious question arises as to whether or no that power of sale, having regard to its special terms which enable mortgagees to break up into lots and to sell in lots the mortgaged property or any part thereof enables a person who takes a mortgage in the ordinary form of a freehold estate on which there are trade machinery or fixtures, to sever the fixtures and sell them as if they were a part of the mortgaged property. I cannot think that this was the intention of the section. I think the framers intended that 'what was sold should be a separable part of the mortgaged property in the State in which it was subjected to the mortgage. I cannot believe for a moment that the mortgagee of a house could sell the chimneys of the house without selling the rest of the house or could sell the fixtures or mantelpieces in the house and say they were part of the house. They are part of the house in the sense that they follow the land as a necessary concomitant of it in a conveyance of the house but they are not separable parts of the house for the purposes of this section. The subject-matter of the particular conveyance or mortgage has of course to be considered in applying the Act of 1881. You must seek having regard to the subject-matter which is mortgaged what power the term 'power to sell any part' gives you and when a mortgagee gets a workshop with machinery in it, I do not believe that the power enables him to sell the machinery apart from the shop any more than it enables him to sell the chimneys apart from the house."

7. Default in payment where no time is fixed.

A mortgagee does not become entitled to exercise the power of sale under this section unless there has been a default in payment of the mortgage-money. There cannot be a default in payment of the mortgage-money unless it has become due (1). But the fact that the mortgage-money remains unpaid after becoming due is not necessarily a "default in payment of the mortgage-money" within the meaning of this section. Where no time is fixed for the payment, there must be a 'demand' for payment before there can be said to be a 'default' within the meaning of this section, though for purposes of limitation the money might become 'due' on the date of the document itself. Where a clause in the mortgage-deed provided that 'if the 'Nidhi' being in need of the principal and interest gives intimation by means of notice to pay off the same and I or my heirs fail to pay the principal and interest, the 'Nidhi' itself shall sell the aforesaid houses and grounds by public auction or private sale under S. 69 of the Transfer of Property Act" and the 'Nidhi' sold the property without giving a notice demanding the principal and interest, it was held that the 'Nidhi' was not in a position to exercise the power of sale because of the initial difficulty of making out that there was a default in payment of the mortgage-money. In delivering the judgment Kumaraswami Sastri, J., observed :

"The amount due for principal is not repayable at any particular date. Nor is anything stated as to when it is to be repaid. Under these circumstances it seems to me to be clear that until there is a demand made for the money, there can be no default in payment of the principal sum due. No doubt the fund 'Nidhi' could have sued the next day for the money or the mortgagor might have offered to redeem the next day, but that would not make non-payment a default within S. 69 of the Transfer of Property Act" (2).

The same principle will apply where, though a time is fixed for payment, the mortgage money may become due earlier at the option of the mortgagee under specified circumstances. In such cases the mere fact that the money has become due earlier is not a default in payment. The mortgagee must make a demand for the amount so as to enable the mortgagor to realise his position and save his equity of redemption if possible (3). In such cases, it is conceived, therefore, that if a mortgagee wants to sell the property for the recovery of the principal money two notices will be necessary, one demanding the payment of mortgage money and the other under clause (a) of sub-section (2).

8. Mortgage-money.

Where a mortgage-debt is reduced according to the provisions of any law for the time being in force, it is the reduced amount that represents the mortgage-money (1) and if the mortgagee tries to sell the property for the recovery of more than the reduced amount, he can be restrained by an injunction obtained in a suit for that purpose. (2)

9. Default in payment of interest only.

There is a difference of opinion as to whether the fact that interest amounting to Rs. 500 falls into arrears 'before' the principal money becomes due will entitle the mortgagee to exercise his power of sale. According to the Court of Lower Burma, (1) a default in payment of interest is a default in payment of the "mortgage-money" within the meaning of sub-section (1) and consequently the mortgagee can exercise the power of sale even though the principal money has not fallen due. According to High Court of Madras (2) if interest of at least Rs. 500 is in arrears and remains unpaid for three months the mortgagee can bring mortgaged property to sale even without giving notice. According to the High Court of Bombay, (3) on the other hand, he cannot exercise such a power before 'both' the principal and interest have fallen due.

9A. "Without the intervention of the Court."

See Note 3.

10. Power must be expressly conferred.

A mortgagee cannot have a power of sale under clauses (b) and (c) unless it is expressly conferred upon him by the mortgage deed. The words "the mortgagee, his heirs, representatives and assigns shall have all the rights, powers, remedies and privileges conferred upon the mortgagee by Act 4 of 1882" (i.e., Transfer of Property Act) do not confer the power of sale upon the mortgagee. The reason is that in such cases, S. 69 does not, by itself, purport to confer any power upon the mortgagee, it only prescribes the procedure for the exercise of the power when it is conferred by the mortgage deed.(1)

No particular form is necessary for the conferment of the express power of sale.(2)

The power so conferred may be a power to sell by 'private contract' or a power to sell by 'auction'. A sale by private treaty, when the power to sell is by auction, would be invalid (3). But a sale by a private contract where a power to sell either by private contract or by auction is given is not bad merely because an attempt is not made first to sell by auction.(4)

10A. Where the mortgagee is the Government — Sub-section (1), Cl. (b).

Sub-section (1), Cl. (b), as it originally stood, conferred a power of sale only in cases where the mortgagee was the 'Secretary of State for India in Council.' Every contract made with the local Government or Government of India could not be deemed to be such a contract. Therefore, Cl. (b) was held not to apply to an agreement under which a survey number was offered as collateral security for the loan advanced by the local Government under the Agriculturists Loans Act (1884) (1).

Where Govt. had auctioned the land mortgaged to it, as a result of failure to comply with the terms agreed upon mutually, by fulfilling necessary requirements of sale, it was held that the purchaser could not be deprived of the land in possession as the sale was not impeachable (2).

Where the power to sell mortgaged property either by public auction or by private contract without the intervention of the Court was conferred on the Govt. mortgagee, in the mortgage deed itself, provision in S. 69(1)(b) gets attracted and the objection to power of Govt. to sell mortgaged property must fail.(3)

11. "Within the town of Bombay."

Property situated at Mahim within the Island of Bombay and within the local limits of the original civil jurisdiction of the High Court of Bombay is property situated within the town of Bombay within the meaning of this section.(1) The town of Bombay now includes Greater Bombay. See the Notes given immediately after the text of the section.

12. Notice requiring payment — Sub-section (2), Clause (a).

mortgagee to sell the property or his right to exercise the power after he has become entitled to do so under the opening part of sub-section (1). The provision is only a direction with regard to the exercise of the power and if a sale is held without a notice under this clause it will only afford a ground for damages, if any, to the mortgagor damaged by the sale (2). If there has been no fraud or collusion in the matter, he has no cause for complaint (3).

When exercising power of sale under this section, it is not necessary for the first mortgagee to serve a notice on the second mortgagee. (4)

13. Whether notice can be waived.

The statutory requirement of notice in sub-section (2), Cl. (a) is imperative. (1), not subject to a contract to the contrary and cannot be waived by the parties. But if a mortgagor after the sale without a notice under Cl. (a), acquiesces in the sale, his right to claim damages on the ground of the sale being irregular for want of notice will be deemed to have been waived by him (2).

14. "Served on the mortgagor, or on one of several mortgagors."

It is the 'mortgagor' on whom the notice issued under sub-section (2), Cl. (a) has got to be served. Clause (a) of sub-section (2) lays down in no uncertain terms that the requisite notice may be given to the mortgagor or one of several mortgagors. Where there are several mortgagors the mortgagor who is given the notice is constituted the agent of the other mortgagors entitled to receive the same (1). Under S. 59-A a 'mortgagor' includes a person who derives title through him. Where, therefore, the mortgagor has sold the equity of redemption, the notice has got to be served on the purchaser of the equity of redemption (2). But, where the purchaser was aware that the property was liable to be sold in default of payment of principal debt, notice to such purchaser is necessary, and unless fraud or collusion is proved or alleged he cannot have any cause for complaint. (3)

Where the mortgagor is dead, notice should be served upon his heirs (4).

As to the procedure for the service of notices, see S. 102.

pay the principal money, there has been a default in payment of it or any part thereof for a period of three months (1) This period of three months, as is clear from the words of the clause itself, is to commence from the date of the service of the notice and not from any other date which may have been mentioned in the notice and by which the payment was required to be made.(2)

Even though the mortgagee cannot sell the property before the expiry of three months from the service of notice, there is nothing to prohibit him from entering into a contract for the sale of the mortgaged property before the expiry of the period.(3)

Though the minimum period of three months is fixed by the section, no maximum period has been laid down within which the sale ought to be held. In the undermentioned case.(4) however, where a sale was held 15 months after the service of the notice, it was held that a fresh notice ought to have been given before the actual sale.

16. Sale for arrears of interest — Notice not necessary.

Where interest amounting to Rs. 500 is in arrears and remains unpaid for three months after becoming due, no notice to the mortgagor is necessary before the mortgagee exercises his power of sale.(1)

17. Whether a mortgagee giving notice under Cl. (a) of sub-section (2), can, before the expiry of three months after the service of notice, sell the property for arrears of interest under Cl. (b).

When the principal has become due and interest amounting to Rs. 500 has fallen into arrears and has remained unpaid for three months, the mortgagee has a choice of acting either under Cl. (a) or Cl. (b). But if he chooses to exercise Cl. (a) and gives a notice as required by that clause, he cannot afterwards change his intention, 'before the expiry of three months from the service of notice,' and try to sell the property for arrears of interest as provided under Cl. (b).(1)

18. Sub-section (3).

This clause is intended to protect the purchaser from any attack on the ground of any impropriety or irregularity in the exercise of the power of sale. It does not say anything as to whether the protection will be extended to him even if he had a notice of such impropriety or irregularity at the time of the sale. In Chhabildas Laloobhai v Dayal Mowaji, (1) it has been observed by Jenkins, C. J., that the section permits a distinction between a purchaser with notice and a purchaser without notice of an irregularity and though a sale may not be impeachable on the mere ground that the power was improperly exercised, this protection does not extend to a case when there is the additional ground that the purchaser had notice of the improper exercise of the power. In the undermentioned case,(2) it has been held by the Madras High Court that when there is 'fraud' there may be a cause of action against the purchaser to have the sale declared void or to have it set aside on the ground of fraud.

Though the English law also does not contain any statutory provision in this respect, the English decisions are to the same effect.(3)

A sale by a mortgagee or receiver for debenture-holders effected in pursuance of the power vested in him in that behalf by the mortgage deed or the debenture trust deed, as the case may be, without the sanction of the Court cannot be avoided as falling under either S 171 or S 232 of the Companies Act. A secured creditor realising his security without seeking the assistance of the Court is, thus outside the winding up and no leave of Court is needed when a receiver appointed by a mortgagee exercises his power of sale under S 69(3), T P Act. If there is no allegation of want of bona fides or recklessness or fraud against the receiver in exercising such a power, the sale held by the receiver is valid and effectual to convey title to the purchaser and such a sale cannot be avoided on the ground either of want of due notice given by the receiver before effecting the sale or on the ground of undervalue.(4)

See also Note 21A.

19. "In professed exercise of such a power."

In order that purchaser should get an unimpeachable title, the sale must have been in professed exercise of the power. When there is no valid mortgage(1) or the power is not validly conferred,(2) the sale cannot be said to be in the professed exercise of the power and cannot give the purchaser an unimpeachable title.

The words "such a power" do not refer to a power exercised three months after the notice; they refer simply to the power of sale mentioned in the opening part of sub-section (1) (3)

3. (1888) 11 Mad 201 (203) (DB).

20. Who can exercise the power.

It is clear from S. 59-A that anybody who derives title through the mortgagee will be entitled to exercise the power of sale conferred on the mortgagee. It has been held that the sub-mortgagee as well as second mortgagee were entitled to exercise the power of sale.(1)

Before the insertion of that section in 1929 the question as to who, besides the mortgagee, were entitled to exercise the power was determined by reference to the deed under which the right was claimed.(2)

In England, S. 106 of the Law of the Property Act, 1925, expressly provides that the power can be exercised by any person for the time being entitled to receive and give a discharge for the mortgage-money (3) Where an agent is appointed by a mortgagee, his authority is determined by the express terms of the deed of his appointment. Thus, where an agent was appointed 'also to sell any real or personal estate' etc., of the principal it was held that the agent had no authority to exercise the power of sale under a mortgage.(4)

Under this section too, the power can be exercised through an agent (5)

Where a mortgage is in favour of a firm, one partner alone cannot exercise the power (6)

Where a mortgage is made in favour of two persons jointly to secure a loan advanced from a fund to which both of them are jointly entitled, the power can, on the death of one of them, be exercised by the survivor (7) See also the case noted below (8)

Where the property of Company is mortgaged under mortgage-deed to which Directors joined as sureties it was held that the Directors who merely joined as sureties were not mortgagors and, therefore, the right of sale could be exercised against the mortgagor-company (9)

21. Conduct of sale must be bona fide.

The power of sale given to the mortgagee is for his benefit and not for the benefit of the mortgagor (1) He has, therefore, a perfect right to hold the sale of the property in such manner as he thinks most conducive to his benefit. He can for this purpose even impose conditions upon the conduct of the sale (2) The conditions, however, must be such as an owner will use in the sale of his own property(3) and should not be depreciatory.(4) It is also necessary that the mortgagee must act 'bona fide' in the conduct of the sale (5) Where these elements are present the sale is not vitiated even though the highest price has not been obtained.(6) In Warner v. Jacob,(7) Kay, J., observed

"A mortgagee is, strictly speaking, not a trustee of the power of sale. It is a power given to him for his own benefit, to enable him the better to realise his mortgage-debt. If he exercises it 'bona fide' for that purpose without corruption or collusion with the purchaser, the Court will not interfere even though the sale be very disadvantageous unless indeed, the price is so low as in itself to be evidence of fraud."

Though the mortgagee is not a trustee for the mortgagor, he is something more than a perfunctory agent and must at least see that, in observing his own interest, he does not sacrifice the interest of those equally interested in the property. He must not do anything which would scare away the bidders.(8)

Courts would not ordinarily interfere with the right of mortgagee on an auction sale under S 69 even though there is some negligence or mistake committed by the mortgagee in conducting the sale but then the purchaser or a transferee is none else than the mortgagee. Courts can interfere (9)

21-A. Publicity of sale.

1. AIR 1955 Mad 135 (143).

Want of publicity may entitle mortgagor for damages, but it cannot vitiate the sale.(2)

22. Effect of sale.

In England the effect of a sale under the provision corresponding to this section is to destroy the equity of redemption and convey the property to the purchaser free from all subsequent encumbrances.(1) In this country the same principle was held applicable in cases before the Act. In Kishendatt Ram v. Mumtaz Ali Khan(2) their Lordships of the Privy Council observed as follows:

"The effect of a sale under a power of a sale is to destroy the equity of redemption in the land, and to constitute the mortgagee exercising the power of a trustee of the surplus proceeds, after satisfying his own charge, first for the subsequent incumbrancers, and ultimately for the mortgagor. The estate if purchased by a stranger, passes into his hands free from all incumbrances."

Even under the present section the effect of a sale would be the same (3) The subsequent mortgagee would be entitled to the surplus, if any, remaining out of the proceeds of the sale after payment to the vendor-mortgagee the amount due to him.(4)

(See also Note 30.)

A sale held in exercise of power under S. 69 to the mortgagee does not become void simply by reason that, at the time of sale a suit had been filed by a third party claiming title to the property, or that a Receiver had been appointed in the suit for the property and no leave of the Court had been obtained for sale.(5)

A mere 'contract for sale' by the mortgagee which has not yet fructified into a completed sale does not extinguish the mortgagor's right of redemption. In this respect, the position differs from the English law under which an equitable 'interest' in favour of the would be purchaser is created under such a contract.(6) A contrary view has, however, been taken in the undermentioned case (7)

In a sale under Section 69 what is sold is the whole property and not merely the interest of the mortgagors. In a mortgage of property executed by two joint brothers notice of sale was given to one of them and the property was sold under the power of private sale. Sons of the brother to whom the notice was not given born subsequent to the mortgage are bound by the sale (8)

Where in exercise of the power conferred on the mortgagee to sell without intervention of the Court the sale is not complete by registration, mortgagor has a right to redeem (9)

23. " Improper or irregular exercise of the power."

It was held in some cases(1) in England that the Court will consider the exercise of a power of sale improper, if it is exercised not for the purpose of getting the money which is due on the mortgage but for some indirect 'purpose'. But in cases decided later, it has been held that the duty of the mortgagee is to 'conduct' the sale properly and sell at a fair value and if he observes this, the sale cannot be attacked by looking to the 'motive' of the mortgagee in selling the property (2)

The power of sale given to the mortgagee is for his own benefit. The Court will not interfere merely to prevent its exercise contrary to the wishes or interests of the mortgagee or even if the mortgagee is seeking some collateral object and not merely the payment of his debt. The mortgagee is not a trustee for the mortgagor of his power of sale and the Court will not inquire into the motives for exercise of the power so long as he acts bona fide (3)

A sale under a depreciatory condition(4) or before the mortgagee became entitled to exercise the power(5) or without serving a notice on the mortgagor under sub-s (2) Cl (a) when the property is to be sold for recovery of the principal(6) is an improper or an irregular exercise of the power.

A solicitor took a mortgage from his client. There was a power of sale but it was given in an unusual form and in a general manner. The mortgagee-solicitor sold the property under the power without a notice to the mortgagor (as it was not necessary under the mortgage-deed). It was held that the mortgagor had a right to be informed what the terms were upon which the estate could be sold and that the absence of such information made the sale improper (7)

After the property was duly advertised for sale, the mortgagee verbally agreed with the mortgagor to postpone the sale for four days; but in contravention of this agreement sold the property on the originally advertised day. It was held that the verbal agreement was not for an extension of the time for the performance of the mortgagor's promise to pay the mortgage-debt as fixed in the deed, but an agreement to refrain from exercising, for a stated period, the right of sale arising from non-performance. It was merely the expression of an intention, a "mere naked promise" not enforceable in law. And further, as the mortgagor was found not prevented by any act of the mortgagee from paying within time (i.e., on the advertised day of sale) the power of sale could not be said to have been exercised in an improper or irregular manner (8).

It has been held in the undermentioned case,(9) that even where there is no 'valid power' of sale at all, a sale in the professed exercise of the power would not be void, but only an irregular one governed by sub-s. (3) of the section. It is submitted that this view is not correct. The words in the professed exercise of 'such' a power," mean a power validly 'given' under clauses (a), (b) and (c) of sub-s (1). Where a power of sale cannot be validly conferred at all, the professed exercise of such a power cannot bring the case under sub-section (3).

24. Mortgagor's right to claim damages.

In order to be entitled to damages under sub-s (3) the mortgagor must have been damnified by an unauthorised or improper or an irregular exercise of the power of sale.(1) In Ramkrishan Mudali v. Official Assignee(2) the mortgagee had two separate mortgages over the same property. The power of sale was conferred in the first mortgage only. The mortgagee exercised the power of sale for the debt covered by both the mortgages. It was contended that, as the power was exercised in respect of a debt not covered by the power, the whole sale must be set aside. The Court, however, declined to do so and held that the mortgagor can have his remedy in damages if he can show that he has been in any way damnified by the exercise of the power.

If the mortgagor is damnified by an action of the auctioneer appointed by the mortgagee, the mortgagor can claim damages from the mortgagee.(3)

25. Lis pendens.

A sale held in exercise of the power is not affected by the doctrine of 'lis pendens' even though it is held after the mortgagor has instituted a suit for redemption. The reason is that a mortgagor who has given under that mortgage an express power of sale cannot by starting a suit for redemption derogate from that which he has in express terms conferred upon the mortgagee (1). It has, however, been held in the undermentioned case(2) that, once a suit is filed by a mortgagor who is an agriculturist under S. 15D of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, the mortgagee cannot exercise his power of sale given under the mortgage-deed so long as the suit remains pending. But once the decree is passed declaring an amount and the mortgagor has not exercised his option of redemption and the mortgagee has not exercised his option to ask for decree for sale then the mortgagee cannot be prevented from exercising his right of sale under the mortgage-deed.

If a preliminary decree for redemption has been obtained, then the power cannot be exercised without the leave of the Court, as it prejudices the rights given to the mortgagor by the Court (3). The power, however, is not extinguished, but only suspended, and if exercised without the leave of the Court, the question whether the purchaser will get a good title or not will depend on the question whether the purchaser has taken it with notice of the want of leave (4).

The validity of a sale is not affected by an attachment of the property by a third party, whether such attachment is effected either before or after the mortgagee became entitled to the exercise of the power.(5)

26. Stopping of sale.

The mortgagor has got a right, which can be exercised up to the moment of sale to pay up the mortgage amount and stop the sale (1). The mortgagee cannot refuse the payment and proceed to exercise the power.(2) A sale held notwithstanding a valid tender of the mortgage money will be set aside (3).

The mortgagor may also obtain an injunction from the Court restraining the mortgagee from holding the sale (4) provided, in cases where the mortgage amount has fallen due, he pays into Court the amount due to the mortgagee.(5)

Where a mortgagee is exercising his power under Cl (b) of sub-s (2) the mortgagor must pay all the interest that is due up to the date of sale. If he pays less the mortgagee is justified in refusing to accept it.(6)

In all cases the mortgagor must pay the costs of the sale also except where they cannot be ascertained(7).

26-A. Postponement of sale.

A power to sell necessarily includes the power to postpone the sale. Where the sale is by auction and it is found that the highest bid is very inadequate, the mortgagee may postpone the sale.(1)

Where the auction-purchaser makes a default in payment of the purchase money within the stipulated time, and time was of the essence of the contract according to the terms of the auction the mortgagee has a right to re-sell the property.(2)

27. Who can purchase.

A mortgagee exercising his power of sale cannot purchase the property in his own name or in the name of anybody else.(1) even though there is a provision in the mortgage-deed authorising him to purchase the property (2) Nor can he sell it to any one employed by him to conduct the sale.(3) The reason why the mortgagee cannot purchase it himself is that

"A sale by a person to himself is not really a sale at all, and a power of sale does not authorise the donee of the power to take the property subject to it at a price fixed by himself even though such price be the full value of the property. Such a transaction is not an exercise of the power, and interposition of a trustee, although it gets over the difficulty, does not affect the substance of the transaction".(4)

In spite of a clause to 'buy-in' it cannot authorise the mortgagee Bank to buy mortgage property for themselves in exercise of the power to sell.(5)

A sale by a person to a corporation of which he is a member is not, either in form or in substance, a sale by a person to himself. Hence a sale by a member of corporation to the corporation itself is in every sense a valid sale (6) Similarly, where property is sold at a fair and good price and the mortgagee himself advances to the purchaser the purchase-money on taking from him the same property as a security for such amount, it is not a sale by the mortgagee to himself and is therefore valid.(7)

A subsequent mortgagee can purchase the property when sold by the prior mortgagee.(8)

A mortgagee can sell the property to one of the co-mortgagors (9)

A receiver cannot purchase the property without getting a discharge from his position, as Receiver, or without obtaining the leave of the Court (10)

A mortgagor himself can purchase the property but in such a case the property in his hands will continue to be subject to subsequent encumbrances (11)

28. Effect of purchase by mortgagee himself.

A purchase by the mortgagee himself in the exercise of his power of sale is invalid (1) The mortgagee retains, notwithstanding the purchase, the character of a mortgagee, his power of sale is not extinguished and if he again sells the property in the exercise of his power, the purchaser gets a good title (2) In Henderson v Astwood(3), the mortgagee sold the property by auction in 1887 and purchased it himself through E In 1890, when he wanted to sell the property as an owner he found that the sale of 1887 was inoperative and he still retained the character of a mortgagee He, therefore, sold the property again in 1890 in the capacity of a mortgagee purporting to exercise the power of sale. When in appeal, it was contended that the power of sale was destroyed or exhausted by the ineffectual attempt to exercise it in 1887, it was held that the proposition on which the above contention was based was not founded on any principle and "after the case of Topham v Duke of Portland.(4) it was impossible to maintain that a power was extinguished by act done, apparently in execution of the power, but in reality in fraud of it."

29. Position of the purchaser.

mortgagee only. He acquires such title as the mortgagor possessed at the date of mortgage.(1) His rights to the property come into existence for the first time on his purchase and his cannot be said to derive his title through the mortgagee.(2)

In an auction sale by the mortgagee the purchaser gets absolute title free from all encumbrances even though there was a prior attachment against a judgment debtor, without notice to mortgagee. Section 69 is one of those rare instances where a person who is not the owner of the property could convey the right title and interest of a third party mortgagor.(3)

30. Sub-section (4).

This sub-section provides that the sale proceeds shall, after the discharge of the prior encumbrances, if any, be held by the mortgagee "in trust to be applied by him," 'firstly,' to the payment of costs, etc., incident to the sale,(1) and 'secondly', to the satisfaction of mortgage-money, and costs, and other money due to the mortgagee, and that the residue shall be paid to the person entitled to the mortgaged property, etc (2) It has been held that the words "in trust to be applied by him" are not restricted to the cases referred to as firstly and secondly but also to the residue, and that such residue, therefore, bears the character of trust money in the hands of the mortgagee.(3)

In England, if such money remained in the hands of the mortgagee he is liable to pay interest on it.(4) If a mortgagee is in doubt or does not find a person who is entitled to it, it is his duty to deposit the money into Court.(5)

If the sale proceeds are found insufficient to satisfy the mortgage-debt the mortgagee can bring a suit against the mortgagor for recovery of the remaining amount.(6) But if the power has been improperly exercised, it has been held, following the rule of English law that it is not open to the mortgagee, who has put it out of his power to allow the mortgagor to redeem, to sue the mortgagor for recovering the balance of the mortgage-money.(7)

69A. APPOINTMENT OF RECEIVER.— [^][(1) A mortgagee having the right to exercise a power of sale under Section 69 shall, subject to the provisions of sub-section (2), be entitled to appoint, by writing signed by him or on his behalf, a receiver of the income of the mortgaged property or any part thereof.

(2) Any person who has been named in the mortgage-deed and is willing and able to act as receiver may be appointed by the mortgagee.

If no person has been so named, or if all persons named are unable or unwilling to act, or are dead, the mortgagee may appoint any person to whose appointment the mortgagor agrees; failing such agreement the mortgagee shall be entitled to apply to the Court for the appointment of a receiver, and any person appointed by the Court shall be deemed to have been duly appointed by the mortgagee.

A receiver may at any time be removed by writing signed by or on behalf of the mortgagee and the mortgagor, or by the Court on application made by either party and on due cause shown.

A vacancy in the office of receiver may be filled in accordance with the provisions of this sub-section.

(3) A receiver appointed under the powers conferred by this section shall be deemed to be the agent of the mortgagor, and the mortgagor shall be solely responsible for the receiver's acts or defaults, unless the mortgage-deed otherwise provides or unless such acts or defaults are due to the improper intervention of the mortgagee.

(4) The receiver shall have power to demand and recover all the income of which he is appointed receiver, by suit, execution or otherwise, in the name either of the mortgagor or of the mortgagee to the full extent of the interest which the mortgagor could dispose of, and to give valid receipts accordingly for the same, and to exercise any powers which may have been delegated to him by the mortgagee in accordance with the provisions of this section.

(5) A person paying money to the receiver shall not be concerned to inquire if the appointment of the receiver was valid or not

(6) The receiver shall be entitled to retain out of any money received by him, for his remuneration, and in satisfaction of all costs, charges and expenses incurred by him as receiver, a commission at such rate not exceeding five per cent on the gross amount of all money received as is specified in his appointment, and, if no rate is so specified, then at the rate of five per cent on that gross amount, or at such other rate as the Court thinks fit to allow, on application made by him for that purpose.

(7) The receiver shall, if so directed in writing by the mortgagee, insure to the extent, if any, to which the mortgagee might have insured, and keep insured against loss or damage by fire, out of the money received by him, the mortgaged property or any part thereof being of an insurable nature

(8) Subject to the provisions of this Act as to the application of insurance money, the receiver shall apply all money received by him as follows namely —

- (i) in discharge of all rents, taxes, land revenue, rates and outgoings whatever affecting the mortgaged property;
- (ii) in keeping down all annual sums or other payments, and the interest on all principal sums, having priority to the mortgage in right whereof he is receiver;
- (iii) in payment of his commission, and of the premiums on fire, life or other insurances, if any, properly payable under the mortgage deed or under this Act, and the cost of executing necessary or proper repairs directed in writing by the mortgagee;
- (iv) in payment of the interest falling due under the mortgage;
- (v) in or towards discharge of the principal money, if so directed in writing by the mortgagee;

and shall pay the residue, if any, of the money received by him to the person who, but for the possession of the receiver, would have been entitled to receive the income of which he is appointed receiver, or who is otherwise entitled to the mortgaged property.

(9) The provisions of sub-section (1) apply only if and as far as a contrary intention is not expressed in the mortgage-deed; and the provisions of sub-sections (3) to (8) inclusive may be varied or extended by the mortgage-deed, and as so varied or extended, shall, as far as may be, operate in like manner and with all the like incidents, effects and consequences, as if such variations or extensions were contained in the said sub-sections.

(10) Application may be made, without the institution of a suit, to the Court for its opinion, advice or direction on any present question respecting the management or administration of the mortgaged property, other than questions of difficulty or importance not proper in the opinion of the Court for summary disposal. A copy of such application shall be served upon, and the hearing thereof may be attended by, such of the persons interested in the application as the Court may think fit.

The costs of every application under this sub-section shall be in the discretion of the Court.

(11) In this section, "the Court" means the Court which would have jurisdiction in a suit to enforce the mortgage.]

STATE AMENDMENT

Uttar Pradesh :—

In its application to the State of Uttar Pradesh, after S 69-A insert the following section 69-B

"69-B. Delivery of possession.— (1) Where in exercise of a power of a sale under Section 69 the mortgaged property or any part thereof has been sold, the Collector shall on an application being made to him in that behalf put the purchaser into possession of the property, and may for the purpose of removing any person who refuses to vacate the same, use or caused to be used such force as he may deem necessary

(2) The provisions of rules 95 to 103 of Order XXI contained in the First Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 as amended from time to time in its application to Uttar Pradesh, shall mutatis mutandis

apply to proceedings under this section with the substitution of references respectively to the Collector and the defaulting mortgagor

(3) In this section, 'Collector' means the Collector of the district in which the property is situate and includes any Assistant Collector empowered in that behalf by any general or special order by the Collector.

1. Analogous law.

The provisions of sub-ss (1) and (3) to (8) correspond to Ss 101(1)(iii) and 109 of the English Law of Property Act, 1925 (15 Geo V Ch 20) which run as follows

"101 (1) A mortgagee, where the mortgage is made by deed, shall by virtue of this Act have the following powers, to the like extent as if they had been in terms conferred by the mortgage deed, but not further (namely):

(iii) A power, when the mortgage money has become due, to appoint a receiver of the income of the mortgaged property, or any part thereof, or, if the mortgaged property consists of an interest income, or of a rent-charge or an annual or other periodical sum, a receiver of that property or any part thereof."

"109 (1) A mortgagee entitled to appoint a receiver under the power in that behalf conferred by this Act 'shall not appoint a receiver until' he has become entitled to exercise the power of sale conferred by this Act, but may then, by writing under his hand, appoint such person as he thinks fit to be receiver

(2) A receiver appointed under the powers conferred by this Act or any enactment replaced by this Act, shall be deemed to be the agent of the mortgagor and the mortgagor shall be solely responsible for the receiver's acts or defaults unless the mortgage deed otherwise provides

(3) The receiver shall have power to demand and recover all the income of which he is appointed receiver, by auction, distress, or otherwise, in the name either of the mortgagor or of the mortgagee to the full extent of the estate or interest which the mortgagor could dispose of, and to give effectual receipts accordingly for the same, and to exercise any powers which may have been delegated to him by the mortgagee pursuant to this Act.

(4) A person paying money to the receiver shall not be concerned to inquire whether any case has happened to authorise the receiver to act.

(5) The receiver may be removed, and a new receiver may be appointed, from time to time by the mortgagee by writing under his hand.

(6) The receiver shall be entitled to retain out of any money received by him for his remuneration, and in satisfaction of all costs, charges, and expenses incurred by him as receiver a commission at such rate not exceeding five per centum on the gross amount of all money received, as is specified in his appointment and if no rate is so specified, then at the rate of five per centum on that gross amount, or at such other rate as the Court thinks fit to allow, on application made by him for that purpose.

(7) The receiver shall, if so directed in writing by the mortgagee, insure to the extent, if any, to which the mortgagee might have insured and keep insured against loss or damage by fire, out of the money received by him, any building, effects, or property comprised in the mortgage, whether affixed to the freehold or not being of an insurable nature.

(8) Subject to the provisions of this Act as to the application of insurance money, the receiver shall apply all money received by him as follows, namely:

- (i) in discharge of all rents, taxes, rates, and outgoings whatever affecting the mortgaged property, and
- (ii) in keeping down all annual sums or other payments, and the interest on all principal sums, having priority to the mortgage in right whereof he is receiver, and
- (iii) in payment of his commission, and of the premiums on fire, life, or other insurances, if any properly payable under the mortgage deed or under this Act, and the cost of executing necessary or proper repairs directed in writing by the mortgagee; and
- (iv) in payment of the interest accruing due in regard of any principal money due under the mortgage, and
- (v) in or towards discharge of the principal money if so directed in writing by the mortgagee.

and shall pay the residue, if any, of the money received by him to the person who, but for the possession of the receiver, would have been entitled to receive the income of which he is appointed receiver, or who is otherwise entitled to the mortgaged property."

Sub-sections (2) with some variations corresponds to Ss 12 and 15 of the 'Trustees' and Mortgagees' Powers Act (XXVIII of 1866) which run as follows:

"12 Any person entitled to appoint or obtain the appointment of a receiver as aforesaid may, from time to time if any person or persons has or have been named in the deed of charge for that purpose, appoint such person or any one of such persons to be receiver or if no person be so named then may, by writing delivered to the person by any one of the persons entitled to the property subject to the charge, or affixed on some conspicuous part of the property, require such last-mentioned person or persons to appoint fit and proper person as receiver, and if no such appointment be made within ten days after such requisition then may in writing appoint any person he may think fit.

No person shall be ineligible for the office of receiver merely because he is an officer of the High Court."

"15 Every receiver appointed as aforesaid may be removed by the like authority, or on the like requisition as before provided with respect to the original appointment of a receiver and new receivers may be appointed from time to time."

Sub-section (9) closely follows sub-ss (3) and (4) of S 101 of the English Law of Property Act, 1925 (15, Geo. V. Ch. 20), which are as follows:

"(3) The provisions of this Act relating to the foregoing powers, comprised either in this section, or in any other section regulating the exercise of those powers, may be varied or extended by the mortgage deed, and, as so varied or extended, shall, as far as may be, operate in the like manner and with all the like incidents, effects and consequences, as if such variations or extensions were contained in this Act.

(4) This section applies only if and as far as a contrary intention is not expressed in the mortgage deed, and has effect subject to the terms of the mortgage deed and to the provisions therein contained."

Sub-section (10) is analogous to S. 34 of the Indian Trust Act, II of 1882, which runs as follows:

"34 A trustee may without instituting a suit, apply by petition to a principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction for its opinion, advice or direction on any present questions respecting the management or administration of the trust property other than questions of detail, difficulty or importance, not proper in the opinion of the Court for summary disposal.

A copy of such petition shall be served upon and the hearing thereof may be attended by such of the persons interested in the application as the Court thinks fit.

The trustee stating in good faith the facts in such petition and acting upon the opinion, advice or direction given by the Court shall be deemed so far as regards his own responsibility, to have discharged his duty as such trustee in the subject-matter of the application.

The costs of every application under this section shall be in the discretion of the Court to which it is made."

2. History and scope of the section.

The notion that the mortgagee can appoint a private receiver of the mortgaged property who is to act as the agent of the mortgagor is not familiar in this country, but has been borrowed from the English law.(1) where a mortgagee is the legal owner of the mortgaged property and is entitled to be in possession. The history of the rule in England was stated by Rigby L J, in Gaskell v Gosling(2) as follows :

"He (i.e. the mortgagee in possession) did not come under any obligation to account to the mortgagor except in a suit for redemption. He was accordingly treated with exceptional severity in a suit for redemption and made to account not only for what he actually received but for what he might without wilful default have received. This was bad enough when there was only one mortgage but the position became much worse when the mortgage was a second mortgage since the second mortgagee could at any moment be turned out by the first. Still greater were the risks and less desirable the possession when the mortgaged property consisted of or included as it might do property embarked in trade and subject to the vicissitudes of commercial business."

The Courts also favoured any means which would enable the mortgagee to obtain the advantage of possession without its drawbacks. Mortgagees began to insist upon the appointment by the mortgagor of a receiver to receive the income, keep down the interest on incumbrances and hold the surplus, if any, for the mortgagor and to stipulate often that the receiver should have extensive powers of management. Presently mortgagees stipulated that they themselves should in place of the mortgagor appoint the receiver to act as the mortgagor's agent. So common did this practice of appointing receivers by agreement between the parties become that first by Lord Cranworth's Act (23 & 24 Vict., c. 145) to a limited extent and afterwards by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 in a more general manner, a power to the mortgagee to appoint a receiver who was to be agent of the mortgagor, was made a usual incident of mortgages when not excluded by agreement between the parties."

In this country the Trustees' and Mortgagees' Powers Act (28 of 1866) first introduced provisions corresponding to the English rule with certain restrictions. But the scope of that Act was confined to those cases only to which the 'English law' was applicable (3) In cases to which the English law was not applicable, the mortgagee had no power to appoint a private receiver of the mortgaged property but it was recognised that a 'mortgagor could by agreement of parties appoint a receiver, nominated by the mortgagee and that such receiver would be the agent of the mortgagor.(4)

The section closely follows S. 109 of the English Law of Property Act, 1925. Its provisions are more extensive than those of the Trustees' and Mortgagees' Powers Act, 1866, in that firstly a receiver may now be appointed in respect of 'all' mortgages where there is an express power of sale under S. 69 and not merely in the case of English mortgages.

The provisions of the Trustees' and Mortgagees' Powers Act, 1866, are now virtually repealed by this provision to the extent to which the provisions of this Act are applicable. But the former Act would still apply to cases arising in States to which this Act does not apply and to English mortgages executed before this section was introduced (5)

The power of private sale conferred by S. 69 and the power for appointment of a receiver under this section are concurrent powers. Hence the existence of a receiver under this section is no impediment to the exercise of the power of sale under S. 69 (6)

As to the power of the Court to appoint a receiver in mortgage suits, See A. J. R. Commentary

3. Section not retrospective.

This section is one of those sections referred to in S. 63 of the amending Act of 1929, as not having a retrospective operation. Consequently, a mortgagee under a mortgage executed before 1929 cannot, even if he has a right of private sale, get the benefit of this section. He will, however, have a right to appoint a receiver under the provisions of the Trustees' and Mortgagees' Powers Act, 1866.(1)

4. Mortgage by company.

Appointment of receiver by mortgagee after winding up of company — Effect — See the undermentioned cases.(1)

5. Procedure of appointment (sub-section (2)).

The mortgagee can appoint as receiver only —

- (a) a person named in the mortgage-deed and who is able and willing to act as such, or
- (b) if no person is so named or if all the persons named are unable or unwilling to act or are dead, then 'any person to whose appointment the mortgagor agrees.'

Failing such agreement the mortgagee 'can only apply to the Court' for the appointment of a receiver. In this respect, this section differs from the Trustees' and Mortgagees' Powers Act, 1866, and from the English Law of Property Act, 1925. Under the Act of 1866, if no person is named in the deed, the mortgagee has to ask the mortgagor in writing to appoint a fit and proper person as a receiver and if the mortgagor does not comply with this request within the time prescribed in the Act, the mortgagee can appoint any person whom he thinks fit. Under the English Act the mortgagee has got the sole power of appointment and need not even ascertain the wishes of the mortgagor.(1)

Section 69-A — Note 5

1. See Section 109 sub-s. (1) of the Law of Property Act, 1925 (15 Geo. V Ch 20) in Note 1

In a mortgage suit where the requirement of law as to appointment of receiver is satisfied, same being just and convenient having regards to the facts of the case. Court can appoint receiver in such a case. That plaintiff (even in case of equitable mortgage) is not in possession of the suit property is immaterial.(2)

The receiver can be removed at any time if both the mortgagor and the mortgagee join together for that purpose. The removal must be by writing signed by or on behalf of them both. If they do not so join, either of them can apply to the Court for the removal of the receiver.

The provisions of sub-section (2) would cover a case in which it is alleged by the mortgagor that there is no debt outstanding and therefore there should be no receiver. A mortgagor can make an application for the discharge of receiver on the ground that the debt due under the mortgage had been wiped out on an application of the provisions of S 13-A of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act.(3)

For the filling up of a vacancy in the receivership the procedure would be the same as that for the appointment of a receiver.

6. Receiver to be an agent of mortgagor (sub-section (3)).

Though the appointment of the receiver under this section is made by the mortgagee, he is deemed to be an agent of the mortgagor(1) and it is the mortgagor who is responsible for the acts and defaults of the receiver unless the mortgage deed provides otherwise or unless the acts or defaults of the receiver are due to the improper intervention of the mortgagee. The words "shall be deemed to be the agent" make it clear that the receiver is only an agent by fiction. The fiction is created for the specific purpose of holding the mortgagor liable for the acts and defaults of the receiver(2). As will be seen in Note 7 the power of sale has to be exercised by the mortgagee himself. He cannot apply to the Court for sale by the receiver. To enable him to do so would mean that the receiver is acting as the agent of the mortgagee(3).

In the undermentioned English cases(4) a receiver appointed after the death of the mortgagor was held to be an agent of the executor of the mortgagor.

A receiver appointed under S 69-A has no power to give out mortgage property on leave and licence basis though a Receiver is deemed to be the agent of the mortgagor. He has not been given all the powers of the mortgagor except those in recovering and receiving the income of the mortgaged property. The receiver may exercise powers which may be delegated to him by the mortgagee in accordance with the provision of Section 69-A. But the only powers which may be so delegated can be the powers in relation to the income of the mortgaged property and any variation or extension of power that may be so conferred can only be in relation to the income of the mortgaged property and no more. The Receiver is not given the power to manage or administer the mortgaged property.(5)

7. Power to take legal proceedings (sub-section (4)).

This sub-section gives the receiver authority to demand and recover the income of the mortgaged property by all legal means. He can take legal proceedings either in the name of the mortgagor or the mortgagee. When the mortgagor is dead, the receiver can file a suit in the name of the heir-at-law of the mortgagor.(1)

Where he sues to recover a sum of money on the basis of a new contract entered into by him, the defendant cannot seek to set off against the claim a debt incurred by the mortgagor prior to the date of the appointment of the plaintiff as receiver.(2)

The extent of the mortgagor's right in the property is the only measure of the receiver's power to gather the income. A receiver appointed under this section is not bound by an agreement entered into by the mortgagor-landlord with the tenant in possession of the creation of the tenancy, regarding the repayment of a loan taken by the landlord from the tenant, by adjustment against the rent payable. The agreement does not diminish the extent of the interest which the mortgagor could dispose of in the property; and the receiver is entitled under this sub-section to sue for and recover all the income which the mortgagor was entitled to from the property (3)

The receiver appointed under S. 69A has not got the status or the powers of a receiver appointed under O. 40, R. 1, Civil P. C., pending a regular suit and cannot sell the mortgaged property. The power of sale has to be exercised by the mortgagee himself (4)

8. Payer need not inquire (sub-section (5)).

Sub-section (5) absolves a person paying money to the receiver from any duty to enquire about the validity or otherwise of the appointment of the receiver. There is no provision in the Trustees' and Mortgagees' Powers Act, 1866 corresponding to this, but under Section 14 of that Act the receiver is entitled to give 'effectual receipts' for all rents, issues and profits of the property of which he was a receiver.

9. Receiver's commission (sub-section (6)).

In the absence of an application made by the receiver for the purpose, the order appointing him cannot fix any commission exceeding five per cent., on the gross receipts. But the Court is not prevented from fixing a higher rate of commission 'on an application' made by the receiver therefor. In the absence of any specification of the rate of commission in the order of appointment and in the absence of any application by the receiver, he is entitled to five per cent., on the gross amount.

The commission allowed by this section to the receiver is intended to be in lieu of, not only his remuneration, but all costs, charges and expenses, incurred by him as receiver.

The commission allowable under this section can be taken by the receiver after the payments, if any, referred to in sub-s. (8), Cls. (i) and (ii), have been made.

10. Right of insurance (sub-section (7)).

The receiver can insure the mortgaged property against loss or damage by fire, under this sub-section, if he is so authorised in writing by the mortgagee. This power is allowed only to that extent to which it could have been exercised by the mortgagee himself. The premium on such insurance is to be paid from out of the moneys received by the receiver.

11. Mode of application of money (sub-section (8)).

The income of the property must be applied by the receiver in the order mentioned in this sub-section. The cost of necessary and proper repairs directed by the mortgagee must be paid in priority to the payment of interest on the mortgage-money.

No money is to be applied towards the satisfaction of the principal money due on the mortgage unless so directed by the mortgagee in writing. The surplus money, if any, is to be paid to a person who would have been entitled to it if no receiver had been appointed.

There is no such provision in the Trustees' and Mortgagees' Powers Act, 1866, but in the undermentioned case⁽¹⁾ governed by that Act, an expenditure by the receiver for necessary repairs, directed by the mortgagee, and before applying the money towards the payment of interest on the mortgage amount, was held legal and valid following the rule of English law in that respect.

12. Advice of Court (sub-section (10)).

It is conceived that the application referred to in this sub-section may be made by the mortgagor, or the mortgagee or the receiver. Sub-section (10) enables the Court only to give direction regarding the management or administration of the property mortgaged and not to sell the same ⁽¹⁾. The sub-section does not confer any jurisdiction on the Court to adjudicate upon question of title. The machinery provided under the section is purely of a summary nature and does not contemplate any decision or adjudication so as to attract the principles of S. 11, Civil PC ⁽²⁾.

13. "The Court" (sub-section (11)).

The applications referred to in sub-sections (2) and (10) should, by virtue of this sub-section be made to that Court, which would have jurisdiction to entertain a suit to enforce the mortgage.

70. ACCESSION TO MORTGAGED PROPERTY.— If, after the date of a mortgage, any accession is made to the mortgaged property, the mortgagee, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, shall, for the purposes of the security, be entitled to such accession.

1. Scope.

As has been seen in Note 1 on S. 63, this section also is based on the principle that the accessory follows the principal. As observed in the undermentioned case(1) this section enacts a "common rule of equity that accessions to the property mortgaged belong for the purpose of the security to the mortgagee." The distinction between this section and S. 63 is that under this section the mortgagee is entitled to the security of the accession, whether acquired by himself or by the mortgagor. In the latter case he is not bound to bear any portion of the expenses incurred by the mortgagor in acquiring such accession. Under S. 63, however, the mortgagor is not entitled to certain accessions acquired at the expense of the mortgagee unless he pays the expenses.

2. Accession.

As to what constitutes an "accession," see Note 1 on section 63. The following are further illustrations of accessions to the mortgaged property within the meaning of this section :

- (1) Where A, a Burman, mortgaged his interest in certain property to X and subsequently by the death of his wife A's interest was increased to that of an absolute interest in the property, the increase was held to be an accession to the security of which the mortgagee would be entitled.(1)
- (1A) If the share mortgaged by Hindu coparcener gets enlarged on account of death of another coparcener, it will enure to the benefit of the mortgagee and the mortgagee will be entitled to have recourse to the whole of the interest which was possessed by the mortgagor at the time the decree on the mortgage was passed.(2)
- (2) Trees planted on the mortgaged property (grove) after the date of the mortgage (3)
- (3) Where after the date of the mortgage of certain zamindari property of zamindar chowkidari chakran lands were released in favour of the zamindar by the Collector, it was held that such lands became an accession to the mortgaged property, to the security of which the mortgagee would be entitled.(4)
- (4) A, who owned a portion of a mouza and was in adverse possession of another portion of it, mortgaged the whole of it to X. Subsequently, the mouza was diluviated by a river, and after some years a new chur was formed the area of which was larger than the old mouza. The mortgagor took possession of the new chur and perfected his title to it by 12 years' adverse possession. It was held that the chur must be considered an accession to the mortgaged property under this section.(5)
- (5) Where a mortgagor acquires by inheritance, the rights of a prior mortgagee, the acquisition enures to the benefit of the subsequent mortgagee the value of whose security is thereby increased.(6)

- (1) Acquisitions by purchase or by adverse possession by the mortgagor of property adjacent to the mortgaged property.(8)
- (2) Where X leases his property first to A, then mortgages the same to B and thereafter sells his equity of redemption to A, it has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that the leasehold interest in the hands of A does not merge in the equity of redemption in his hands and that the leasehold interest cannot be considered an accession to the mortgaged property.(9)
- (3) The accrual of sir rights in Khudkasi land subsequent to the mortgage though ordinarily an accretion to the mortgaged property under this section, would not be so if there is a special enactment to the contrary, e.g., section 49 of the C P Tenancy Act (10)
- (4) Where after a mortgage of certain warg land and the Kumaki land adjoining it, the Government assigned the Kumaki lands on Dharghasi to the wargdar, it was held that the lands so assigned did not form an accession to the mortgaged property as they were at the absolute disposal of the Government at the time of the mortgage (11)
- (5) Where a plot of land with cinema theatre building being built thereon was mortgaged, it was held that the ceiling boards and exhaust fans did not pass to the mortgagee as an accession under the Court sale in execution of his mortgage decree because what was sold was the building and not the theatre.(12)

3. Accession by mortgagor's representatives.

The section does not say by whom the accession is made. The accession may be made by natural causes, such as alluvion or by the mortgagor or any other person. As has been seen in Note 3 on S. 63, a building or other structure erected by the owner on his own land will be an accession as is shown by illustration (b) to this section. The words "mortgagor" and "mortgagee" in this section as well as in S. 63 will include their representatives and the principles applicable to buildings erected on mortgaged land by a mortgagor or a mortgagee will apply equally to their representatives (1). Thus, the auction-purchaser in execution of a prior mortgage decree will be a representative of the mortgagor and a building erected by him on the land will be an accession to the property to the security of which the mortgagee would be entitled (2). A proprietary share in a village was mortgaged along with some sir fields "with reservation of occupancy rights of cultivating these sir fields." Later on the mortgagor sold his equity of redemption and then surrendered his tenancy rights in the sir fields to the transferee. In his suit on the mortgage, the mortgagee contended that with the possession of both proprietary and tenancy rights by the transferee the tenancy rights disappeared and that improved the security of the mortgagee and should be regarded as accession within the meaning of this section. It was held that this was not a case of accession. It was a case of construction of the mortgage deed. The mortgagee was taking as his security the proprietary right in certain indicated fields, i.e. the right to receive rent in respect of the land and not the land itself. That subsequently his mortgagor transferred the land to another, did not make any dif

3-A. "For the purposes of the security."

The mortgagee is entitled under this section to the accession only for the purposes of the security and not for any other purpose. X mortgaged 22 items of property to Y in 1916. Y subsequently in 1925 purchased some of these items himself. At that time, the other items not purchased had increased in value owing to improvements. Y sued to enforce his mortgage against these latter items and claimed to apportion the mortgage amount thereon, according to the value of the property on the date of his purchase. It was held that the rule that the mortgagee was entitled to the benefit of accession to the property by reason of improvements, was not applicable for the purpose of apportioning the mortgage-money between the items purchased by him and the items not purchased (1)

Where after the mortgage of the site without any buildings thereon, the mortgagor erects buildings thereon and in execution of his mortgage decree, the mortgagee becomes the owner of the site, he is entitled to get the possession of the site after removal of the buildings by the mortgagor, he need pay the value of the building only if he wants it and the mortgagor is prepared to sell it (2)

4. "If, after the date of a mortgage".

Section 63 provides that the accession should be received during the continuance of the mortgage. This section while stating the fact that the accession should have been received "after the date of a mortgage" does not expressly state whether it should have been received during the continuance of the mortgage. It has been held by the High Court of Madras that even for the purposes of this section, the accession must have been received before the mortgage become extinguished, and that the acquisition by the mortgagor after the mortgaged property has been sold in execution of the mortgage decree cannot be considered an "accession" to the mortgaged property to the security of which the mortgagee is entitled.(1)

In the undermentioned case(2) it was held that an accession to the mortgaged property after the date of the mortgage and before the mortgage decree was passed, may be sold in execution of the decree even though such accession is not specifically mentioned in the decree. Under the present law a mortgage decree for sale does not extinguish the mortgage security. Therefore, under S. 70 the mortgagee decree-holder is entitled to have his decree satisfied by sale of an accession made to the mortgaged property after the passing of the decree (3)

5. "Contract to the contrary."

The rules as to accession in Ss. 63 and 70 are only applicable where there is no contract to the contrary. In other words the parties may contract that an accession is not liable to be redeemed or that the mortgagee is not entitled to the security thereof. The contract need not be express but may be implied. The view has been expressed in the undermentioned case(1) that the words "in the absence of a contract to the contrary" suggest that the parties contemplated by the section are those who are bound by the contractual relations of mortgagor and mortgagee and not independent third parties, and that, therefore, this section and S. 63 apply only as between the mortgagor and the mortgagee and their representatives.

It has been held that there can be a contract to the contrary within the meaning of S. 70 read with S. 100 in the case of a charge created by a compromise decree as the parties are not prevented from contracting out of the rights created under such a decree (2)

71. RENEWAL OF MORTGAGED LEASE.— When the mortgaged property is a lease ^A[* * *], and the mortgagor obtains a renewal of the lease, the mortgagee, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, shall, for the purposes of the security, be entitled to the new lease.

1. Legislative changes.

The words "for a term of years" after the words "a lease" have been omitted from this section by S. 36 of the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, 1929 (Act XX of 1929), as they were unnecessary. (1)

2. Scope of the section.

It is a well established principle of law that where a trustee or other person in a fiduciary position gains for himself any advantage by availing himself of his character as trustee or person in a fiduciary position, he must hold the advantage so gained for the benefit of the persons whose interests he was bound to protect (1) Thus, where a lease is renewable by custom or contract, a renewal of the lease by a person who is a trustee, an agent or other person in a fiduciary position, enures to the benefit of the persons beneficially interested in the lease (2) The principle has been extended so as to apply to persons who cannot be said to occupy clearly a fiduciary position but who are in a special position with respect to other persons, by virtue of which they owe a duty to such persons (3) The persons in such special position may be said to be in a quasi-fiduciary position.

tion (4) Thus, a tenant for life, co-owner, mortgagee or other qualified owner of any property gaining, by availing himself of his position as such, an advantage in derogation of the rights of other persons interested in the property, will be in a quasi fiduciary position, and must hold the advantage for the benefit of the persons interested in the property (5) This has been recognised by S 90 of the Trusts Act, 1882, illustration (a) whereof runs as follows:

"A the tenant for life of leasehold property renews the lease in his own name and for his own benefit. A holds the renewed lease for the benefit of all those interested in the old lease."

The same principle has been recognised by S 64 and this section with regard to renewal of mortgaged leases. The former provides that if a mortgagee obtains a renewal of a lease which is the subject-matter of the mortgage, the mortgagor will, on redemption, have the benefit of the new lease; while this section provides that if the mortgagor obtains a renewal of the mortgaged lease, the mortgagee will, for the purposes of the security, be entitled to the new lease. The mortgagor and the mortgagee both occupy a special position in respect of the original lease that is mortgaged, and, as such, owe a duty to each other, and, consequently, the new lease is subject to the same equities as the original one (6) The theory on which the principle rests is that, in such cases, the new lease is a graft upon the old lease and forms part of the original security (7) As was stated in Rakestraw v Brewer (8) "this additional term comes from the old root, and is of the same nature, subject to the same equity of redemption." (9)

The new lease cannot strictly be called an accession to the old lease within the meaning of S. 70 and has, therefore, been dealt with separately by this section.

3. "Renewal of the lease."

It is not necessary for the application of this section that the renewal of the lease should have been in pursuance of any covenant for renewal (1) Now it is necessary that the renewal should take place before the expiry of the old lease. A renewal, even after the expiry of the old lease, would enure to the benefit of the mortgagee (2) In Villa v. Petley, (3) V was a lessee of certain property and had mortgaged the leasehold right to D by deposit of title deeds in or about the year 1910. The lease expired in 1917, but V continued in possession and the landlord accepted rent from her. In 1919, D transferred the mortgage to one P. In 1921, V obtained a renewal of the lease from the landlord. It was contended, inter alia that as the renewal was effected long after the expiry of the lease, the mortgagee could not get the benefit of the lease. It was held, firstly, that the mortgagee was entitled to the benefit of the lease by virtue of this section, and secondly, that under S 116 of the Transfer of Property Act, the acceptance of rent by the landlord from V operated as a continuance of the tenancy in favour of V till the date of its renewal. In Sham Das v. Batul Bibi (4) their Lordships of the Allahabad High Court observed as follows :

"In the case of a mortgage or charge upon leaseholds, if a new lease be obtained by a mortgagor, either on a forfeiture of the original lease or by other means, the owner of the mortgage or charge will have the benefit of the new lease for the purpose of his security, and yet the mortgagor could not, at the time of the mortgage, have transferred the new lease to the mortgagee as it was not in existence."

The mortgagee has a right only to preserve his security and to incur necessary expenses for that purpose but in law, he has right to make any improvements on demised property without consent of mortgagor. (5)

4. Fraudulent renewals.

The mortgagee would be entitled, under this section, to the new lease, though the lessee, in taking such new lease, did not intend to hold it for the benefit of the mortgagee. A renewal of the lease procured dishonestly by the mortgagor would, with greater force, enure to the benefit of the mortgagee. Where an assignee of a mortgaged lease, finding that the lease was subject to a very onerous charge, induced the lessor, who happened to be his friend, to take a advantage of a forfeiture, intentionally incurred for the purpose, and after the collusive proceedings for forfeiture were completed, got a new lease of the same property on the same terms, it was held that the renewed lease was subject to the mortgage. (1) In fact in such cases the old lease would not be deemed to have terminated at all to the prejudice of the mortgagee. (2)

5. Effect of surrender of lease on mortgage.

It is an important principle of law that a person shall not be allowed to derogate from his own grant (1) It follows that a lessee cannot voluntarily surrender his holding to the landlord so as to affect the interest of the mortgagee under a mortgage created by him previous to the surrender (2) A tenant by surrendering his interest in the property cannot derogate from his own grant and if the landlord accepts the surrender with notice of a mortgage on the leasehold interests, the mortgagee would be unaffected by the surrender and can enforce his claim on the right surrendered (3) The same principle will apply where the lessee collusively and fraudulently suffers a decree to be passed against him for eviction. (4)

6. Renewal of lease rendered impossible — Effect.

A lessee who has mortgaged his lease is not under any obligation to renew the lease at all and the mortgagee cannot compel him to renew the lease for his benefit. Where the renewal of the lease becomes impossible as where the lessee purchases the reversion after the lease, it has been held that the mortgagee would take the whole reversion as his security (1)

1. Legislative changes.

The following changes were introduced in the section by S 37 of the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, 1929 :

- (1) The words "When during the continuance of the mortgage, the mortgagee takes possession of the mortgaged property," at the beginning of the section were omitted.
- (2) The words "a mortgagee" were substituted for the word "he"
- (3) Clause (a) of the old section was deleted.
- (4) For the words "its preservation" in cl. (b), the words "the preservation of the mortgaged property" were substituted.
- (5) The proviso to the first paragraph was newly added.
- (6) In place of the words "a charge on the mortgaged property, in addition to the principal money, with the same priority and with interest at the same rate" in the second paragraph of the section, the following words were substituted :

"added to the principal money with interest at the same rate as payable on the principal money or, where no such rate is fixed, at the rate of nine per cent per annum"

2. Scope of the section.

The first paragraph of the section before its amendment in 1929 ran as follows :

"When, during the continuance of the mortgage, the mortgagee takes possession of the mortgaged property, he may spend such money as is necessary—

- (a) for the due management of the property and the collection of the rents and profits thereof
- (b) for its preservation from destruction, forfeiture, or sale :
- (c) for supporting the mortgagor's title to the property;
- (d) for making his own title thereto good against the mortgagor, and,

(e) when the mortgaged property is a renewable leasehold for the renewal of the lease and may, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, add such money to the principal money at the rate of interest payable on the principal, and, where no such rate is fixed, at the rate of nine per cent per annum.

Thus, as the marginal note to the section still suggests, the old section deals with the rights of a mortgagee in possession, while S. 76 deals with his liabilities. It was, however, held in some cases that though this section dealt in terms with the rights of mortgagees in possession, it did not raise an implication that other mortgagees had no such rights. Other kinds of mortgagees were also, therefore, held entitled to the rights under this section (1). The amendment of the section in 1929 gives effect to this view. With reference to the amendment the Special Committee in their Report observed as follows :

"It is inequitable to confine this section to a mortgagee in possession. With the exception of the provision in clause (a) relating to the management of the property and the collection of rents and profits this section may apply to all mortgagees generally. A mortgagee whether he is in possession or not, is entitled to spend money for the purposes mentioned in clauses (b), (c), (d) and (e), subject, as regards clauses (b) and (c), to the proviso that he should not be entitled to exercise that right unless the mortgagor is in default. Whether a mortgagee is in possession or not, it is to his interest to spend money to preserve his security, and he should have a right to do so. We therefore propose that a mortgagee though not in possession should be entitled to spend such money as may be necessary for purposes mentioned in clauses (b), (c), (d) and (e), subject to the condition, as to (b) and (c), that he should not be entitled to do so until the mortgagor is in default."

Clause (a) was accordingly deleted from this section and inserted in section 76.

The equitable principle underlying this section of reimbursing a mortgagee for the necessary expenses incurred by him in connection with the mortgaged security by giving him a charge on the property was applied even before the enactment of this Act (2). The rule was borrowed from the English law, (3) and was uniformly adopted and enforced by the Courts of Justice in India as a rule of justice, equity and good conscience (4). It was applied by the Judicial Committee long before the Act came into force in Nugendur Chunder v. Shreemutty Dossee,⁽⁵⁾ where their Lordships observed as follows :

"Considering that the payment of the revenue by the mortgagee will prevent the talook from being sold their Lordships would, if that were the sole question for their consideration, find it difficult to come to any other conclusion than that the person who had such an interest in the talook as entitled him to pay the revenue due to the Government and did actually pay it, was thereby entitled to a charge on the talook as against all persons interested therein for the amount of money so paid "

The present section is thus an enactment of old law⁽⁶⁾ and, in the States where the section does not apply the equitable principle embodied in it is still applied ⁽⁷⁾

The proviso to this section which was introduced by the Amendment Act of 1929 is not retrospective in operation.⁽⁸⁾

This section should be read with S 63-A which provides for the mortgagee's right to recover the cost of improvements to the mortgaged property in certain cases. Where a case falls both under S 63-A and this section the former will apply as being the more special provision.

Either section applies only to the rights of a mortgagee to recover money spent on the mortgaged property. As to the liability of a person against whom the mortgage is voidable and who elects to avoid the mortgage, see S. 63-A, Note 5.

This section gives the mortgagee a right to spend money in certain cases. There is no obligation on him to do so.⁽⁹⁾

Though under certain Revenue Laws, a person making a deposit of Government land revenue or rent to save the property from being sold has a lien over the property in the nature of a mortgage lien,⁽¹⁰⁾ the holder of such lien cannot claim to be "a mortgagee" so as to claim rights under this section.⁽¹¹⁾

3. Preservation of property — Clause (b).

A mortgagee is entitled under this clause to spend the necessary money for the purpose of preserving his security from destruction, forfeiture or sale and he can unless there is a contract to the contrary add such an amount to the principal amount. Under the proviso added to the section in 1929 the expenditure under this clause will not be deemed "necessary" unless the mortgagee has called upon the mortgagor to take proper and timely steps to preserve the property and the latter has

Hence a mortgagee who has paid prior to 1929 the municipal taxes on the property which the mortgagor was bound to pay under the contract is entitled to add that amount to the principal even if he had not given notice to the mortgagor as required by the proviso (2) See also, mortgagee who had paid rent of mortgaged land is entitled to be reimbursed at the time of redemption of mortgage (3) What constitutes a proper and necessary expenditure is a question of fact depending upon the circumstances of each case(4) and in allowing such expenses the Court must naturally be on its guard against extravagant and unfounded claims and should enquire strictly into the facts and fairness of the claim in each case.(5)

(A) Preservation from destruction.

This head will include the costs of repairs of the mortgaged property (6) An improvement of the property may be made for the preservation of the mortgaged property from destruction. The cost of such improvement, however, can now be claimed by the mortgagee under S. 63-A, as being the more special provision. (See Note 2 on this section and Notes on S. 63-A) Where, however the improvements are not necessary for the preservation of the property, the mortgagee will not be entitled to recover the cost of those improvements either under this section(7) or under S. 63-A. Thus, a mortgagee cannot claim the expenses either of an addition to or new construction upon the mortgaged property under this clause.(8) But where the mortgaged property was a dilapidated house and the mortgagee reconstructed it after pulling it down, or an original kachcha house was built into a pucca one of the same pattern, and the amount spent was reasonable such expenses were allowed to the mortgagee under this clause before the introduction of S 63-A(9). (B) Preservation from forfeiture or sale.

This head will include a payment by the mortgagee of Government land revenue, (13) the rent of the mortgaged property (14) payable by the mortgagor and the amount necessary to be deposited in order to set a sale of mortgaged property in execution of a decree obtained by a prior mortgagee in a suit to which the mortgagee making such payment was a party (15).

The word "sale" referred to in this clause is to be constructed ejusdem generis with the words "destruction" and "forfeiture" which precede it and, therefore, the clause applies only to those sales which endanger the mortgage security and not to the sale of merely the equity of redemption (16). After a mortgage is made the property is comprised of two parcels: the equity of redemption and the mortgagee rights. If a person puts to sale the equity of redemption in execution of a simple money decree, the rights of the mortgagee under the mortgage and the mortgage security remain unaffected. save the property from sale in execution of the money-decree.(17) Even if the property is sold for recovery of income-tax due from the mortgagor, the mortgagee's security is not impaired in any manner and the payment made by the mortgagee to avert the sale will not be covered by this section (18) Though the amount deposited by the mortgagee to set aside sale in execution of a prior encumbrancer's decree is recoverable under this clause, the amount of compensation to be paid to the auction-purchaser under O 21, R 89 of the Code of Civil Procedure, will not be allowed to him as it is unnecessarily expended due to his own laches in not making the payment earlier (19)

The mortgagee is duty bound to safeguard the security mortgaged. If the arrears of taxes due on the property mortgaged related to the period prior to his coming into possession of the property and if he has paid the arrears due, to save the property, he may claim the repayment of that amount at the time of redemption.(20)

Unless the mortgagor has contracted to pay the land revenue himself, a mortgagee in possession has to pay it under S 76, clause (c), and therefore, where there is no express agreement making the mortgagor liable for its payment, a mortgagee in possession is bound to pay the same, even if it is newly assessed or advanced during the continuance of his mortgage. He cannot recover it from the mortgagor under this clause (22) However, where a deed of mortgage is silent on the point as to who is liable for the payment of land revenue, it has been held that a mortgagee in possession contracts for the payment of the assessment existing on the date of mortgage only and not the newly assessed or advanced amount The liability to pay the same is fixed upon the mortgagor (23) The real effect of clause (c) of S 76, however, is to make the mortgagee in possession liable to pay the land revenue and other charges of public nature out of the rents and profits of the property only, and not otherwise. Where, therefore, the income of the property is insufficient to cover the expenditure over these heads and the mortgagee in possession has to make them out of his own pocket, he is entitled under this clause to be reimbursed in respect of such payments. If the income is sufficient to meet these payments, the mortgagee cannot take advantage of this clause to recover it again from the mortgagor at the time of redemption. In this sense this clause may be said to be subject to the obligation imposed by clause (c) of S. 76. (24)

Also see Note 8 on section 76.

4. Supporting mortgagor's title — Clause (c).

This clause enjoins the mortgagee to support the mortgagor's title (1) A mortgagee may incur expenditure for supporting the mortgagor's title to the mortgaged property where such title has been impeached, and add such expenses to the principal amount of the mortgage-money (2) The principle on which this right is based is that the mortgagor, so long as the equity of redemption remains with him, is bound under the general law of mortgage, to indemnify the estate against the expenses of protecting his title (3) This obligation on the mortgagor exists, independent of any contract between the parties to the mortgage (4)

The expenses incurred by the mortgagee must, however, be necessary and reasonable. The mortgagee, while spending in this respect, must act as a prudent owner. The question whether he has so acted is a question of fact (5) Thus in respect of tenancy of urban property or premises, the mortgagee in possession has no right to jeopardise the right of mortgagor by giving a tenancy which will continue even after the redemption of mortgage (6) It is the duty of the mortgagee to prove the exact amount of expenses incurred. In the absence of any evidence to show what these expenses actually are, he is not entitled to be given credit for any amount, even though it may appear from the facts of the case that he was put to some expense (7) Where the mortgagee obtains a decree for costs of the suit incurred in defending the title of the mortgaged property but makes no attempt to recover the same from the other party he is not entitled to debit the mortgagor in his accounts with these costs (8) After the amendment of the section in 1929, no expenditure under this

5. Costs of supporting the mortgagee's title — Clause (d).

Under the English law a mortgagee is entitled to all that his contract or the legal or equitable consequences of it, entitles him to recover, and all the costs of properly incurred in ascertaining or defending such rights whether at law or in equity (1) Thus, he is entitled not only to the costs incurred by him in a suit for foreclosure or redemption but also to the costs incurred by him to support his title, apart from any suit for foreclosure or redemption. (2) This clause is based upon the same principle. A mortgagee will, therefore, be entitled to costs in a suit for foreclosure or redemption unless he has forfeited his rights by some improper defence or other misconduct. (3) He will also be entitled to the costs incurred by him in making good his title, otherwise than in a suit for foreclosure or redemption. (4) Thus, where the mortgagee had to spend money in removing the obstruction to his enjoyment created by the mortgagor, in a suit for that purpose, it was held that the costs of that suit could be claimed by the mortgagee as a charge on the property. (5) So also where, by reason of the default of the mortgagor to deliver possession to the mortgagee under the terms of the contract, the latter has to sue for possession, the costs of the suit can be claimed by him.(6) Similarly, where a third person sued both the mortgagor and the mortgagee for recovery of a sum of money, and the mortgagee in that suit successfully defended the suit by setting up his rights of priority in respect of amounts paid by him for prior mortgages, it was held that the costs of such defence could be claimed by the mortgagee in a subsequent suit for redemption by the mortgagor.(7) But the costs of litigation concerning the mortgaged property arising out of the wrongful act of a third person will not be allowed to the mortgagee unless they were incurred in protecting the title to the estate (8) Thus the mortgagee is not entitled to the expenses incurred by him in regard to certain criminal proceedings which had taken place between the parties in regard to the mortgaged land as it cannot be said in such a case that they were incurred by him for the purpose of making his own title good against the mortgagor (9) In the undermentioned case(10) where a mortgagee had taken a mortgagee with full knowledge of a third person's interest in the property, it was held that he was not entitled, as against the mortgagor, to add the costs incurred by him in opposing the claim of such third person.

The mortgagee paid monies to the Government to avert a sale of a portion of the hypotheca for realisation of the penal assessment levied by the Government on the mortgagor on the land not comprised in the mortgage. The mortgagor thereafter filed a suit against the Government for refund of the monies so paid on the ground that the Government had no right to bring to sale the hypotheca, and for injunction restraining the Government from such sales in future. It was held that as the Government had a paramount right to realise the amount of penal assessment levied by them on the mortgagor there was no question of protecting the title of the mortgagor or the mortgagee in the suit and the expenses of such suit could not, therefore, be added to the mortgage amount (11)

Where the mortgagee is awarded costs he is entitled to recover them, not as an independent claim irrespective of his rights under the mortgage but as part of the mortgage amount realisable from the mortgaged property (12) But there is nothing to prevent the Court, in proper cases from awarding the costs personally against the mortgagor (13) Where the decree is ambiguous it should not be construed in such a manner as to enable the mortgagee to recover the costs personally against the mortgagor.(14)

Ordinarily a puisne mortgagee is not ordered to pay the costs of a mortgage suit. He is impleaded as a defendant because in a mortgage suit it is incumbent upon the mortgagee to implead as defendants all persons who would be entitled to redeem the property. In certain cases, however, the defendant mortgagee may conduct himself in such a way as to make it right and proper that he should be ordered to pay the costs of the suit. Such a case naturally turns upon its own facts and if it is sought to make a puisne mortgagee liable for the costs, the plaintiff should take care that such an order is passed by the Court and inserted in the decree.(15)

6. Renewal of lease — Clause (e).

Where the mortgaged property is a renewable leasehold property, the mortgagee may spend the amount necessary for the renewal of the lease and, unless there is a contract to the contrary, he may add the amount to the mortgage-debt under this clause. It is to be noted in this connection that a mortgagor of leasehold property is not, under S 65, bound to renew the lease. A mortgagee may incur expenditure for the renewal in order to preserve his security

Under the English law also, a mortgagee is entitled to add the cost of the renewal of the lease, to the mortgage debt and to recover the same with interest along with it (1)

7. "In the absence of a contract to the contrary."

Under this section the expenses incurred for the purposes mentioned therein can be added to the principal of the mortgage-money only "in the absence of a contract to the contrary" and not otherwise. Thus, where a malkanamdar stipulated in the deed of mortgage that he would meet at the expenses of litigation to support the mortgagor's title and he had to incur that expenditure in a suit by a rival jenmi, it was held that he could not add the amount spent to the mortgage-debt as the above stipulation was "a contract to the contrary".(1) Similarly, where a mortgagor undertook to effect all the repairs on the mortgaged property, the mortgagee was held not entitled to make them himself and add the amount to the mortgage-debt (2) See also the undermentioned cases (3)

8. May add such money to the principal money.

A mortgagee may, under the present section, add the amount of money, expended by him for the necessary purposes mentioned in the section, to the principal money and recover it with interest along with the mortgage-debt. But can he, independently of the mortgage claim, bring a suit to recover such amount? Under the English law he can claim the money expended by him only at the time of redemption and no action on a debt lies for its recovery (1). The reason is that at law the mortgagee is the owner of the property and the sum spent can be recovered only in equity as a condition of redemption at the time of redemption. In this country, the mortgagor is the owner, and the mortgagee has only a security. The English rule can, therefore, have no application in India (2).

A mortgagee in India has two separate remedies open to him, namely to sue on his mortgage adding to it the claim for monies expended for necessary purposes or to bring a separate suit to recover only the expenses. (3)

The expression "the mortgagee may, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, add such money to the principal money," clearly shows that the remedy under this section is only an additional remedy and not the sole remedy (4) and the mortgagee is, therefore, not barred from suing to recover such amounts under S. 69 of the Contract Act (5). The contrary view in the undermentioned cases (6) does not appear to be correct.

On the other hand, the mere fact that there is an agreement between the parties allowing the mortgagee to recover his expenses by an independent suit against the mortgagor personally does not take away the right of the mortgagee under this section to add the amount to the principal to the costs of the repairs, etc., made by him.)  AIR 1932 Oudh 255 (259) 8 Luck 40 (DB) (To see whether there is a contract to the contrary, the document must be considered as a whole.)

money and recover it as such.(7) Similarly where a usufructuary mortgagee leases back the mortgaged property to the mortgagor, the mortgagee's right to file a suit for accounts based on his right to interest on the mortgage amount is not merged in or substituted for his rights to rent arising from the tenancy.(8)

Suppose now that the mortgagee adopts one of the two remedies. The question arises whether he forfeits the other remedy. According to the High Court of Allahabad, he does so. In Imdad Hasan v Badri Prasad,(9) a mortgagee in possession paid the Government land revenue payable by the mortgagor to avert the sale of the property. He then sued the mortgagor and obtained a money decree for the amount spent by him. In a subsequent suit for redemption by the mortgagor, the mortgagee claimed a charge under this section for the decretal amount which remained unpaid. It was held that as he had elected to pursue one remedy to recover his expenditure, he was no longer entitled to a relief under this Section. The debt was held to have been merged in the decree and, therefore, was recoverable only under that decree. A contrary view was expressed by the High Court of Madras in Mangeswar Naraina v S Shiva Rao,(10) in which case the money decrees obtained by the mortgagee were, however, barred by limitation at the time when a charge under this section was claimed by the mortgagee in a suit for redemption. Their Lordships disallowed the claim of the mortgagee for the decretal amounts because the claim was no longer subsisting, being statute-barred. In their opinion, the Allahabad view that even if the decree is alive and enforceable, the relief under this section cannot be allowed "goes too far." It is submitted that the Madras view is correct on principle. A mortgagee does not lose his charge for the expenditure given by this section by merely obtaining a personal decree for the same. He can plead it and claim to be paid for it on redemption, provided the claim under the decree is not otherwise barred or does not become unenforceable.(11)

9. Charge for expenses, if can be enforced independently of mortgage.

The section allows a mortgagee to add to the principal of the mortgage-money the sum expended by him over the purposes mentioned therein. In other words, the mortgagee is entitled to a charge over the mortgage security even for the amount spent. But can such charge be enforced independently of the mortgage? The High Court of Allahabad has held in the undermentioned case(1) that a charge for expenses cannot be enforced apart from the claim under the mortgage. The facts of the case were that a mortgagee in possession paid certain arrears of land revenue payable by turned out of the lands and a separate suit for recovery of money could not be sustained the mortgagor to avert the sale of the property. The mortgagor deposited the principal and the interest thereon in Court which was accepted by the mortgagee and the deed and possession were delivered to the mortgagor. The mortgagee subsequently brought a suit to recover the amount of land revenue by sale of the mortgaged property. Their Lordships disallowed the suit and observed as follows :

"In our opinion, whatever may be the position or right of a person paying money under such circumstances, who is not a mortgagee, the position of a mortgagee making such payments is this :—if he makes such payments and wishes to seek a direct remedy against the mortgaged property in respect of them by a suit for sale of that mortgaged property, he must do so in his character and position as mortgagee, for it was in that character and position, and that only he paid the money. He must, if he desires to bring the property to sale in respect of such payments, add on those payments to the principal money due under the mortgage. In other words, in our opinion, a mortgagee making such payments as mortgagee, does not, by reason of making those payments, obtain a lien independently of that under his mortgage. In this case, (plaintiffs' mortgagees) having abandoned their lien and rights as mortgagees, it appears to us that the plaintiffs cannot revive them in order to sustain a suit for money which they could have added to the original mortgage debt, and in respect of which they were entitled to continue in their character as mortgagees and to hold on the deed of mortgage."

In Ambika Charan v Ramgati Guha(2), a mortgagee, after obtaining a preliminary decree on his mortgage, deposited a certain amount to set aside a sale of the mortgaged property in execution of a rent decree. The property was thereafter sold privately by the mortgagor who satisfied the preliminary decree completely. Thereafter the mortgagee brought a suit to establish his right to the lien on the mortgaged property in respect of the deposit that had been made by him. It was held by the High Court of Calcutta that the suit was maintainable for the reason that the lien acquired by the mortgagee in respect of the deposit was not discharged by the payment and satisfaction of the preliminary decree. It is submitted that this last view is not correct. A lien for expenses under this section is enforceable only along with the claim under the mortgage and so long as the latter is subsisting, if the latter claim is no longer subsisting, the mortgagee cannot have any remedy under this section. He will be entitled, however, to recover the amount under S. 69 of the Contract Act (3).

See also the undermentioned case.(4)

10. Expenditure must have been made in the capacity of mortgagee.

A mortgagee, whether in possession or not, has, under the present section, a right to spend the necessary amount for the preservation of the mortgaged property, if occasion arises, until the sale of the mortgaged property, in execution of the decree for sale, is confirmed or a final decree forecloses.

ure is passed, and to add the amount so expended to the mortgage-debt (1) In other words, the section requires that the money expended should be expended by the mortgagee in the capacity of a mortgagee, and so long only as the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee subsists between the parties. The relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee is not put an end to by the mere passing of a preliminary decree for foreclosure (2) or of a final decree for sale, the execution of which is still pending (3) and, therefore, a mortgagee spending amounts for the purposes mentioned in the section even after the passing of such decrees, has a right to add the amount so expended to the principal of the mortgage-money under this section. Where a mortgagee spends monies, not as a mortgagee, but as owner under a defective purchase which is subsequently declared void by the Court, the expenditure must be held to have been made only in his capacity as mortgagee. (4) The reason is that as soon as the conveyance is declared void, the mortgage revives and the mortgagee must be deemed to have had only that capacity all along. Where, however, a mortgagee purchased a tenure mortgaged to him in execution of his own decree for sale on the mortgage and thereafter paid the arrears of rent which had accrued before his purchase, the payment by him was held not to be in the capacity of a mortgagee but in the capacity of an owner and purchaser, in which capacity he was bound by law to make that payment himself. tioned case(3) of the Lahore High Court, interest on costs was disallowed even though parties had specifically stipulated for interest. The case, however, is not under the Act and does not give any reasons for its decision.

The rate of interest to be allowed on expenses is the same as that payable on the principal money and where no such rate is fixed by the deed, the section prescribes nine per cent per annum (4) Compound interest is not allowed on expenses.(5)

In a complete usufructuary mortgage or partially complete usufructuary mortgage, cost of improvement does not bear interest as the usufruct is supposed to wipe out all interest and the principal sum does not bear interest either. But where the mortgagee is in possession but the mortgage is not of the above kind, interest on the cost of improvement has to be calculated (6)

12. Premiums paid for the insurance of mortgaged property.

Under the second and the third paragraphs of the section a mortgagee is entitled to incur expenditure to insure and keep insured against loss or damage by fire, the property mortgaged him, when such property is, by its nature, insurable, and he may add the premiums paid by him to the principal amount of the mortgage-debt. Insurance premium paid by the mortgagee of equitable mortgage for preserving the mortgaged property can be added to the principal money in absence of a contract to the contrary.(1)

This provision was originally taken from the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881(2) the corresponding sections of which ran as follows

"Section 19 (1) A mortgagee, where the mortgage is made by deed shall by virtue of this Act have the following powers, to the like extent as if they had been in terms conferred by the mortgage-deed but not further (namely) :

(i) • • • • •

(ii) A power at any time after the date of mortgage deed to insure and keep insured against loss or damage, by fire any building, or any effects or property of an insurable nature whether affixed to the freehold or not, being or forming part of the mortgaged property and the premiums paid for any such insurance shall be a charge on the mortgaged property, in addition to the mortgage-money and with the same priority, and with interest at the same rate, as the mortgage money.

• • • • •

"Section 23 (1) The amount of an insurance effected by a mortgagee against loss or damage by fire under the power in that behalf conferred by this Act shall not exceed the amount specified in the mortgage-deed, or, if no amount is therein specified, then shall not exceed two third parts of the amount that would be required, in case of total destruction, to restore the property insured

(2) An insurance shall not, under the power conferred by this Act, be effected by a mortgagee in any of the following cases (namely) :

(i) Where there is a declaration in the mortgage-deed that no insurance is required ture incurred by mortgagee to be added to the principal money — No provision made for payment of interest thereon — Held, that there was a contract to the contrary)

- (ii) Where an insurance is kept up by or on behalf of the mortgagor in accordance with the mortgage-deed :
- (iii) Where the mortgage deed contains no stipulation respecting insurance and an insurance is kept up by or on behalf of the mortgagor, to the amount in which the mortgagee is by this Act authorized to insure.”(3)

There was a difference of wording in this section between the first paragraph and the second. The expenses under the former were to be added to the principal of the mortgage-money while those under the latter were “a charge on the mortgaged property.” The reason for such a distinction was not clear and, therefore, the amending Act of 1929 changed the wording of the second paragraph, thus bringing it in line with that of the first paragraph. The Special Committee state their reason for this change as follows :

“In the penultimate paragraph of S. 72 it is stated that a sum paid as insurance premium shall be a charge on the mortgaged property, while the second paragraph provides that sums mentioned in clauses (a) to (e) should be added to the principal money. It is not clear whether any distinction is really intended between insurance premia and other necessary costs and charges. The sums payable for insurance ought to be treated on the same footing as those spent for necessary costs and charges. We are, therefore, of opinion that such sums should be added to the principal money and should carry the same rate of interest.”(4)

The right of the mortgagee under this provision is, however, subject to “a contract to the contrary.” A mortgagor can stipulate that there should be no insurance of mortgaged property and a mortgagee insuring the property in spite of such a stipulation is not entitled to his costs. Similarly, where the mortgagor himself undertakes to insure the property, a mortgagee is not entitled to incur costs in that respect, even if the mortgagor has failed to keep up his part of the agreement.(5) Further, the right is subject to the proviso contained in the last paragraph, under which a mortgagee cannot incur expenditure over insurance where the mortgagor himself has kept up the insurance.

The section also prescribes a limit to the amount for which a mortgagee can insure the property. If the amount has been fixed by the parties themselves, that limit cannot be exceeded. But where no such amount is fixed by the parties, the section provides that the amount of insurance should not exceed two-thirds of the amount which would be required to restore the property in case of total destruction.

Where the plaintiff had insured the lorry hypothecated to him, for payment of loan, and had also insured it, it was held that plaintiff's claim for insurance premium was proper by extending the scope of section 72 — paragraph 2 — to mortgages of moveables on grounds of justice, equity and good conscience.(6)

1. Scope of the section.

This section is a particular application of what has been called the doctrine of substituted securities. (1) According to that doctrine a mortgagee is entitled to a charge upon property which through no fault of the mortgagee, has taken the place of the mortgaged property (2)

When the property upon which the charge is created gets converted into another form the buyer will be entitled to proceed against the substituted security. This is a general principle of law and S 73 is only an example of the said principle.(3)

The doctrine is of wide application. Thus, where the subject of a mortgagee is an undivided share in property and the joint sharers effect a partition, the security of the mortgagee will attach to the share allotted in severalty to his mortgagor.(4)

The doctrine, however, cannot be applied to cases where altogether different and distinct items are allotted. Thus where, notwithstanding the acquisition by the Municipality of a portion of the property and its substitution by a distinct plot as a compensation to the owner, a decree was passed purporting to create a charge over the entire old property making no mention of the substituted property and the entire property was proclaimed for sale and purchased in execution by the decree holder, the sale certificate making no reference to the substituted property, it was held that neither S 73, in terms nor the principle of substituted security was applicable and the decree-holder auction-purchaser was not entitled to claim any title of the substituted property (5)

The right which the mortgagee obtains to realise the amount due to him from out of the item allotted to the mortgagor is not in the nature of a mortgage. It is a right to a security and would come within the definition of a charge in S 100. Consequently, a bona fide transferee pursue chattels due in of the charge lost his mortgage right such a charge. The same result is reached if the right of the mortgagee is considered an equitable right. The right of a puisne mortgagee to the surplus proceeds on a sale under the first mortgage is also based on the doctrine of substituted security.⁽⁶⁾ A suit by the first mortgagee was decreed and the mortgaged property was being put to sale when puisne mortgagee intervened and at his instance the property was sold subject to the puisne mortgage and after satisfaction of the decree-holder's claim there remained a surplus which was attached by a creditor it was held that the puisne mortgagee had no right to the surplus as against the attaching creditor because Section 73 merely protects the mortgagee's interest in the secured property but does not give a preferential right ⁽⁷⁾ So also where a mortgaged house was pulled down by the mortgagor and the materials were utilised by him for building another house, it was held that the mortgage lien attached, on the principle of substituted securities, to the new building ⁽⁸⁾ It has been held that a hypothecatee of chattles cannot recover the proceeds of the sale of the chattel in the hands of the hypothecator, or claim a lien on the property substituted in place of the hypothecated property on the principle of substituted security in the absence of a contract to that effect.⁽⁹⁾ See also the undermentioned cases.⁽¹⁰⁾

The doctrine of substituted security which applies to the case of a mortgage by a co-sharer of a specific item of joint property is equally applicable to the case of a transfer by a cosharer of a specific item of property.⁽¹¹⁾ In other words, the fact that a cosharer mortgaged specific fields as distinct from his share in the holdings does not affect the applicability of the doctrine if the partition is not challenged on the ground of unfairness or fraud.(12)

The old section, before its amendment in 1929, applied only to cases where the mortgaged property had been sold for failure to pay arrears of revenue on rent due in respect of the property and further provided that the mortgagee had merely a charge on such proceeds. The use of the word "charge" was not quite correct as, under S 100 a "charge" related only to the immovable property and did not apply to a claim against the fund into which the property was converted. As was stated in the report of the Special Committee "the procedure for enforcing a simple mortgage obviously does not apply to the enforcement of a claim against a fund. The use of the word also leaves the remedy of the mortgagee uncertain." The section was, therefore, recast omitting the word "charge" and by inserting a provision entitling the mortgagee to claim payment of his amount from out of the surplus proceeds. Its scope has further been widened by making it applicable not only to the revenue and rent sales but also to sales for the recovery of arrears of all charges of a public nature and to the compulsory acquisition under law of the mortgaged property.

Principle of Section 73 has been extended in practice to judicial sales. Where by process sanctioned by law the security given to a creditor metamorphoses and changes into something other than the property which constituted the original security the mortgagee or the charge holder over the quondam property is not helpless but could trace his right to such metamorphosed security, under the doctrine of substituted security.(13)

It may be noted that the doctrine of substituted security rests on the fact that the mortgagee has lost his mortgage right on the property sold or acquired, through no fault of his own and has, therefore, to be given a right to proceed against the substituted property (14). It follows that the doctrine and, therefore, this section applies where the property has been sold or acquired free of the mortgage(15) but not where the mortgage has not been extinguished by the sale or acquisition or other transaction (16). Thus, where mortgaged property is sold for arrears of revenue or rent but the

(11) that the alienee is entitled only to recover properties of the value equal to the specific items transferred in his favour and out of the substituted properties.)

21. AIR 1969 Pat 162 (164).

The effect of sub-sections (2) and (3) of this section is that where mortgaged property is compulsorily acquired, the compensation payable by the acquiring authority becomes the substituted security in respect of the mortgage-debt and a statutory charge is created by the operation of sub-sec. (2) on the compensation money in respect of the dues of the mortgagee (23) It has been held that S. 73(3) is contrary to the scheme and provisions of West Bengal Estates Acquisition Act 1953 (1 of 1954) and that section 73(2) comes into conflict with the provisions of S. 26 of that Act(24).

It is not necessary that all the incumbrances on the property which the mortgagee or any other person may have on the property should be extinguished. It is enough if the particular mortgage in respect of which a claim under this section is made, has been extinguished(25)

The right under this section to claim surplus proceeds or the compensation money, as the case may be, is over and above the rights which the mortgagee may have under the law to enforce payment of the mortgage-money, e.g., under S. 68 of the Transfer of Property Act, or under any personal covenant to pay the money(26).

The undermentioned case(27) holds that the mortgagee is not required to bring a suit to enforce his claim under this section.

2. Section, whether retrospective.

It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that this section is retrospective, at least when no action was pending on the 1st of April 1930 when the amendments came into force. Accordingly where a portion of the mortgaged property was acquired under the Land Acquisition Act before the amendment and the compensation amount was received by the mortgagor, the mortgagee was held entitled to a personal decree for that amount against the mortgagor by virtue of the provisions of this section(1).

3. "Is sold owing to failure to pay arrears of revenue," etc.

Sub-section (1) of the section applies only where mortgaged property is sold owing to failure to pay arrears of revenue, etc. When property is sold for failure to pay dues which are not arrears of revenue or other public charges, but which are under the law to be recovered as if they are arrears of revenue, the purchaser does not take it free of incumbrances (1) Consequently the question of applicability of this section cannot arise in such cases

4. "Arrears."

The word "arrears" must be read not only with the word "revenue" but also with the words "charges of a public nature or rent"(1).

5. "Other charges of a public nature."

The words "charges of a public nature" must be taken to mean charges of a public nature of a kind similar to revenue. Arrears of loan advanced by the Government under the Agriculturists' Loans Act, 12 of 1884, cannot be said to be arrears of charges of a public nature within the meaning of this section(1).

6. Sale by reason of mortgagee's default — Effect.

When the mortgagee is himself bound to pay the revenue, rent or other public charges on the mortgaged property and the property is sold for failure to pay such amount, the mortgagee cannot obtain the benefit of this section and cannot claim any amount from out of the surplus sale proceeds. Nor can the mortgagee, in such a case, by purchasing the property himself or in some other person's name on his behalf, extinguish the right of redemption of the mortgagor.(1) If the mortgagee is not bound to pay such arrears and the sale is held owing to the mortgagor's default in payment of the arrears, this section will apply and the mortgagee will be entitled to claim, in whole or in part, the surplus sale proceeds. If the mortgagee purchases the property himself at such a sale, the mortgagor will not be entitled to redeem it.(2) Further, if the mortgagor purchases the property in such a sale in his own name or in the name of another, the mortgagee can, in addition to his right to claim surplus sale proceeds under this section, proceed against the mortgaged property for any balance due on the mortgage. The reason is that it is a general principle that a mortgagor cannot set up against his own incumbrancer any other incumbrance created by himself(3).

7. "Shall be entitled to claim payment of the mortgage-money."

The old section provided that the mortgagee had merely a charge on the surplus sale proceeds. It has now been recast by omitting the word "charge" and providing that the mortgagee shall be entitled to claim payment out of the fund.

The change in the language does not warrant an inference that the Legislature intended to depart from the principle of substituted security(1)

The reason for the change in the language of the section has been stated by the Special Committee in their Report as follows :

"The use of the word 'charge' appears to us to be unhappy inasmuch as a charge under S. 100 relates to immovable property and is enforced as a simple mortgage. The procedure for enforcing a simple mortgage obviously does not apply to the enforcement of a claim against a fund. The use of the word also leaves the remedy of the mortgagee uncertain. We, therefore, propose to avoid its use and to provide that the mortgagee shall be entitled to claim payment out of the surplus fund or compensation money payable to the mortgagor, as the case may be"(2)

The amendment of the section by the introduction of the word 'claim' instead of 'charge' shows that a suit is not now necessary to enforce the claim under the section(3)

Where the loan from a co-operative bank is taken by an agriculturist for agricultural purpose and his land is mortgaged with the bank and in later point of time, the land is acquired on a whole or in part, the bank has first and foremost claim to the total exclusion of the claim of mortgagor on the amount of compensation. However, the claim shall be to the extent of outstanding amount of loan. The circular dt. 17-7-1985 issued by the Govt. of Gujarat directing that proportionate compensation can be given to mortgagee bank is in total contravention of the provisions of S. 73 and is liable to be quashed(4).

8. "In whole or in part."

In Sustalabala Das v. Dinabandhu Nandi(1) a landlord first created a mortgage on his land and then a patni interest therein. The mortgagee obtained a decree upon his mortgage binding even the patni interest, and, subsequent thereto, the property was sold for arrears of revenue subject to the patni interest. The mortgagee took the surplus sale proceeds and claimed to proceed against the patni interest also for the balance. It was contended that the effect of S. 73 was to transfer the whole of the charge to the sale proceeds leaving the mortgaged property thereafter absolutely free from the charge. In other words the contention was that under S. 73 the sale proceeds must be accepted in full satisfaction of the mortgage-debt and not in part satisfaction thereof. The High Court, however, rejected the contention and allowed the mortgagee to proceed for the balance.

The insertion of the words "in whole or in part" only serves to state the above law in clear terms.

9. "All charges and deductions directed by law."

These words were added by the amending Act of 1929. The amount that the mortgagee would be entitled to claim is the amount which remains after payment of the arrears and of "all charges and deductions directed by law."

The word "charges" in this expression means "costs"(1).

When the property is sold under a rent decree under the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, the landlord decree-holder is entitled under S 169 of that Act to recover from the total sale proceeds not only the decretal amount but also the amount of rent that has accrued due, in respect of that tenure, from the date of suit till the date of confirmation of sale, and the mortgagee can take the proceeds only after his amount also is deducted therefrom.(2) Before the amending Act of 1929, the landlord's right to this amount was only under S 169 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, but now it is conceived he will be entitled to claim this amount under this section also as a 'deduction directed of law.'

10. Sub-section (2).

Property acquired under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act is free of all incumbrances. So also will be property which is compulsorily acquired under any other enactment for the time being in force providing for the compulsory acquisition of immovable property. The principle of substituted security will Prima facie apply to such cases (1) But there was a conflict of opinion on the point, due to the fact that the section as it stood before the Amending Act of 1929, did not specifically deal with land acquisition cases. According to the High Court of Allahabad(2) and the undermentioned cases of the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Oudh,(3) the mortgagee had no charge on the compensation amount awarded. A contrary view was taken by the High Courts of Calcutta,(4) Madras(5) and Patna,(6) the Chief Court of the Punjab(7) and the undermentioned case(8) of the Chief Court of Oudh. The above conflict has now been set at rest by the introduction of sub-sec (2) giving the mortgagee rights with respect to the compensation money similar to those given to him with respect to the surplus sale proceeds under sub-section (1) (9) Such right cannot, however, be sold.(10) If before the final decree is passed mortgaged property is substituted by another security in the form of compensation money, a final decree directing payment of this fund may be justified and on an application made on behalf of the plaintiff mortgagee the original Court can award final decree against the substituted security But where final decree is already passed as against the original property it has been held that the directions pertaining to the mortgaged property can appropriately be read as those pertaining to the substituted security by reason of S 73(2), and the Court executing the decree can secure realization and application of the fund standing as substituted security(11).

When only a portion of the mortgaged property is acquired, the mortgagee is entitled to claim the whole of the compensation money awarded if such amount is less than the amount due under the mortgage (12) The expression "in whole or in part" merely means that where the mortgagor creates a mortgage over two properties and one of it is acquired the mortgagee can take the entire amount due to the mortgagor as a compensation and recover the balance, if any against the other property (13) Where in a suit on the mortgage, the Court passed a composite decree clearly and unambiguously providing that the mortgage-decree-holders would be justified in executing the personal decree against the mortgagor judgment-debtor only if any after they had exhausted their remedy against the mortgaged properties and had not been able to recover the whole of the decretal amount by that process, and before the mortgagee decree-holders could realise the decretal amount by sale of the mortgaged zamindar properties, the mortgaged properties had vested in the State of Bihar under the provisions of the Bihar Land Reforms Act (30 of 1950), it was held that the amount due to the decree holders having been already determined by the claims officer, the mortgagee decree-holders must first seek to recover that amount as provided by the relevant provisions of the Act before they could proceed to execute the personal decree(14)

Where under the terms of the mortgage decree, the decree holder is entitled to proceed against other property of the judgment-debtor if the property mortgaged is not found sufficient to pay off the decretal amount and the mortgaged property is subsequently acquired by the State the right to proceed against other property of the judgment-debtor guaranteed under the decree cannot be taken away merely because of the fact that for acquisition of the property, the State would pay some compensation and that the mortgagee decree-holder would, under this sub-section, be entitled to claim payment of the mortgagee money out of that compensation money(15)

Where a mortgaged security was acquired the amount representing the interest in the property out of the amount of compensation awarded to the mortgagor can be claimed by the mortgagee. Such a right is not taken away by sub-section (2) of Sec. 73 but he cannot claim damages for loss of security(16).

The section gives a right to the mortgagee to receive compensation but does not affect his rights and liabilities under the Land Acquisition Act. Thus where a mortgage has been effected before the acquisition is made, it is open to the mortgagee to make a claim before the Collector. If he does not, he cannot claim payment of compensation to him under S. 31(1) and (2) of that Act(17).

On acquisition of the mortgaged property the mortgagee is entitled to claim payment due to mortgagor as compensation and the claim can be enforced notwithstanding that the principal money on the mortgage has not become due(18).

Where the entire estate of the mortgagor landlord in the estate did not vest in the State, but by virtue of S. 6 read with S. 4 of the Bihar Land Reforms Act (30 of 1950), some interests in the bakasht land were left with the mortgagor landlord, it was held that the mortgagor is entitled to follow that property, viz., bakasht lands, and enforce the mortgage security against that property, on the ground of accession to the mortgaged property, if not on the ground of substituted security(19). The Supreme Court has held that bhumidan rights created under S. 18 of U.P. Act 1 of 1951 are not compensation and cannot be followed by the mortgagee as substituted security(20).

A decree-holder who has a charge over property which has since been acquired under the West Bengal Estates Acquisition Act, 1953, and in respect of which compensation is payable under the Act is entitled to an order directing the receiver to obtain payment of the compensation money and to apply the same towards satisfaction of the dues of the decree-holder(21).

Where a buyer has a charge on the property acquired by Government he is entitled to apportionment of compensation and is a person interested in maintaining the writ in respect of the acquisition(22).

Even in case of a charge, the charge holder has the same rights as a mortgagee has under S. 73 to claim payment out of the amount paid for the compulsory acquisition of the rights of the lessee(23).

quent mortgagee(2) or a creditor having a personal remedy against the mortgagor,(3) the mortgagee can sue them for recovery of the amount. Similarly, by virtue of this provision, a claim for payment of monies charged on the property acquired under the West Bengal Estates Acquisition Act, 1953, must prevail against all claims other than those of prior incumbrancers(4)

The Government in the position of a subsequent mortgagee is in no better position than any other person who has taken a subsequent mortgage(5)

This sub-section also allows a mortgagee to claim the surplus sale proceeds or the compensation money even before the mortgage-money has become due. The object is to protect the mortgagee from the loss that may accrue to him by the withdrawal of money by the mortgagor in case the sale or acquisition, as the case may be, takes place before the mortgage-debt becomes due (6). Moreover, the mortgage security being converted into money, there is no reason why the mortgagee should not wait until the due date(7).

Land was given on lease by Government with the right of resumption reserved. Lessee constructed a building thereon and mortgaged the property to bank, with permission of Government. Bank obtained final decree for sale. Therefore the land was resumed by State. Suit by bank challenging quantum of compensation fixed and for declaration that bank has first charge on amount of compensation is maintainable(8).

In the case mentioned below,(9) decided under the old section, the mortgagee was allowed to take the compensation money even before the mortgagee-debt had become due, with the consent of the mortgagor :

and y were mortgaged to A and property x was sold for arrears of Government revenue but the sale did not, by virtue of section 54 of the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 11 of 1859, extinguish the incumbrance, it was held by the Patna High Court in the undermentioned case(1) that the mortgagee A could not only claim the surplus sale proceeds but could also proceed to enforce his mortgage against even the portion of the mortgaged property sold. A similar view was taken in the cases noted below,(2) where the property was sold for arrears of rent, but the incumbrances were not annulled. A contrary view has been taken in Krishna Chandra Dhar v Bipin Behari Padhi(3) that the mortgagee, in such a case, is not entitled to the surplus sale proceeds. The Court observed

"To accede to the proposition that he can also proceed against the sale proceeds would mean that by reason of the revenue sale the security held by the mortgagee was increased. This was clearly not the intention of the Legislature. The only reason for S. 73 was to protect a mortgagee whose security has in fact been diminished."

The previous case was sought to be explained on the ground that the effect of the sale in the said case was "to diminish the security to a certain extent without extinguishing it altogether." The explanation is not clear. It is submitted that the first mentioned view is not correct.

Where a part of the mortgaged property or a particular interest in such property is sold and the sale is, in respect of that part, free from the mortgagee, the mortgagee can claim the surplus sale proceeds and for the balance due on the mortgage he can proceed against the remaining property not sold(4)

13. Revenue sale set aside — Right of mortgagee to proceed against the property.

Where the sale for arrears of revenue is set aside and the property reverts in the mortgagor, the mortgagee cannot claim the sale proceeds but can enforce his mortgage against the property(1)

14. Surplus proceeds or compensation money withdrawn by mortgagor or other person — Remedy of mortgagee.

Where the mortgaged property has been sold for arrears of revenue, etc. or has been compulsorily acquired, and the surplus proceeds or the compensation amount, as the case may be, has been withdrawn by the mortgagor or other person, there are several remedies open to the mortgagee :

(1) He can sue the person who has withdrawn the amount, for recovery thereof on the basis that the money belonged by virtue of this section to the mortgagee and has wrongfully been received by such person. Such a suit would, it is conceived, fall under Art. 24 of the Limitation Act, 1963, the starting point of time being the date of the withdrawal of the amount.

(2) (a) In the case of sales for arrears of revenue, etc.

He can under S. 68 clause (c) sue for the recovery of the mortgage-money(1) and the suit would be governed for purposes of limitation by Art 55 or Art 113 of the Limitation Act, 1963. The difference between the first remedy and this is that the latter is available only against the mortgagor. But the whole of the mortgage money can be recovered and not merely the surplus sale proceeds taken away, as in the former case.

(b) In the case of compulsory acquisition of the property.

Where the mortgaged property has been compulsorily acquired the mortgagee can sue under S 68 only if clause (b) thereof applies. There is a difference of opinion as to whether acquisition would amount to a "destruction" of the property within the meaning of that clause. (See S 68, Note 3.) Assuming that that clause applies to a suit by the mortgagee for the mortgage-money would be governed by Art 55 or Art 113 of the Limitation Act, 1963(2).

(3) Under the old section he could, according to the undermentioned decisions (3) sue to enforce his charge against the fund, and such a suit was governed by Art 132 of the Limitation Act, 1908. Even under the present section he may, according to the undermentioned cases, (4) enforce by a suit his mortgage security against the fund withdrawn by the mortgagor or other person.

As has been seen already the fund is really a substituted security and the mortgagee can enforce his mortgage against such security by a suit on the mortgage. The only advantage of this remedy over the others will be that if the fund is not sufficient to pay the mortgage-money the mortgagee will be entitled to claim a personal decree against the mortgagor (in case where such personal remedy is not barred) for the balance under O 34, R 6 of the Code of Civil Procedure(5).

It may be pointed out that the mortgagee who takes advantage of the first mentioned remedy is not barred from resorting to the second remedy for the recovery of remedy he cannot thereafter resort to the third remedy. The reason is that the second remedy is available only if the mortgagee gives up his security, whereas the third remedy involves the enforcement of the security(6).

The repealed section 75 ran as follows :

"75. Every second or other subsequent mortgagee has so far as regards redemption, foreclosure and sale of the mortgaged property, the same rights against the prior mortgagee or mortgagees as his mortgagor has against such prior mortgagee and the same rights against the subsequent mortgagees (if any) as he has against his mortgagor."

The first portion of the section is now found re-enacted in Ss. 91 and 92 and the second portion printed in italics has been re-enacted as section 94. See Notes on section 94. [Ed.]

76. LIABILITIES OF MORTGAGEE IN POSSESSION.— When, during the continuance of the mortgage, the mortgagee takes possession of the mortgaged property,—

- (a) he must manage the property as a person of ordinary prudence would manage it if it were his own;
- (b) he must use his best endeavours to collect the rents and profits thereof;
- (c) he must, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, out of the income of the property, pay the Government revenue, all other charges of a public nature [^][and all rent] accruing due in respect thereof during such possession, and any arrears of rent in default of payment of which the property may be summarily sold;
- (d) he must, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, make such necessary repairs of the property as he can pay for out of the rents and profits thereof after deducting from such rents and profits the payments mentioned in clause (c) and the interest on the principal money;
- (e) he must not commit any act which is destructive or permanently injurious to the property;
- (f) where he has insured the whole or any part of the property against loss or damage by fire, he must in case of such loss or damage, apply any money which he actually receives under the policy or so much thereof as may be necessary, in reinstating the property, or, if the mortgagor so directs, in reduction or discharge of the mortgage-money;

- (g) he must keep clear, full and accurate accounts of all sums received and spent by him as mortgagee, and, at any time during the continuance of the mortgage, give the mortgagor, at his request and cost, true copies of such accounts and of the vouchers by which they are supported;
- (h) his receipts from the mortgaged property, or, where such property is personally occupied by him, a fair occupation-rent in respect thereof, shall, after deducting the expenses ^A[properly incurred for the management of the property and the collection of rents and profits and the other expenses] mentioned in clauses (c) and (d), and interests thereon, be debited against him in reduction of the amount (if any) from time to time due to him on account of interest ^B[* * *] and, so far as such receipts exceed any interest due in reduction or discharge of the mortgage money; the surplus, if any, shall be paid to the mortgagor;
- (i) when the mortgagor tenders, or deposits in manner hereinafter provided, the amount for the time being due on the mortgage, the mortgagee must, notwithstanding the provisions in the other clauses of this section, account for his ^C[*] receipts from the mortgaged property from the date of the tender or from the earliest time when he could take such amount out of Court, as the case may be ^A[and shall not be entitled to deduct any amount therefrom on account of any expenses incurred after such date or time in connection with the mortgaged property.]

Loss occasioned by his default.

If the mortgagee fails to perform any of the duties imposed upon him by this section, he may, when accounts are taken in pursuance of a decree made under this chapter, be debited with the loss, if any, occasioned by such failure.

1. Scope of the section.

This section enumerates the duties of a mortgagee who takes possession of the mortgaged property during the continuance of the mortgage (1) Such duties are, however, between himself and the mortgagor and not as between himself and third parties(2)

The section deals mainly with the debit side of the mortgagee's account, while S 72 deals with the credit side(3)

The section does not lay down any new principles, the rules laid down in the section were recognised even before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act,(4) and the provisions of the section are a mere codification of the law in existence before the passing of the Act.(5) The principles of the clauses have been, therefore, applied to cases arising out of mortgages executed prior to the Act(6)

A mortgagee in possession may spend the income in any way agreed upon between him and the mortgagor, provided that the security of prior mortgages is not thereby imperilled(7).

(A darpatnidar in possession of patni under S 13, Bengal Patni Regulation, 1819, is entitled at the request of the mortgagor, i.e., the patnidar, to devote the income of any year to the purchase of subordinate tenures, thus enhancing the value of the security.)

Where the mortgage deed clearly provided that the rent and profits from the mortgaged property were to be appropriated by the mortgagees in lieu of interest, the mortgagor was not required to pay any interest and could not recover any rent from the mortgagee and the mortgagor was made responsible to carry out the repairs and in case he failed to do so the mortgagee could require him to carry them out by two weeks notice and in default carry them out by himself and add the amount spent to the mortgage money, the applicability of clauses (b), (d) and (g) and (h) of S. 76 of T P Act would clearly be ruled out by S. 77 (8). Thus, S. 77 is an exception to the liabilities of the mortgagee as mandated by Cls. (b), (d), (g), (h) of S. 76. That means that when there is a contract between the mortgagor and the mortgagee that the mortgagee shall appropriate the income from the mortgage property in lieu of interest or in lieu of interest and certain portion of the principal amount of loan, there shall be no application of S. 76(9).

The right and liabilities of the parties in an anomalous mortgage have to be determined as warranted by S. 98, with reference to the terms of the contract between the parties in instant case certain fixed sum was to be paid every month, which was to be levied by the parties to be a "fair occupation rent". The document did not provide for payment of interest. The amount was to be paid irrespective of any profit from the property what was agreed was payment of fixed sum every month irrespective of any profit and not a division of profits between the mortgagor and mortgagee.(10)

The mortgagees were in possession of the mortgaged property for more than fifty years. The decree for redemption of mortgage had become final against them and during the execution proceedings S. 4A of the Kerala Land Reform Act came into force. The decree-holder mortgagor deposited the mortgage amount and value of improvements and the Executing Court ordered delivery of property to mortgagor, on such payment. Thereafter the mortgagees continued to remain in possession only as judgment debtors illegally sticking to the land. The relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee between the parties got snapped. If the mortgage money has been received by the mortgagee and thereafter he refuses to perform the acts which he is bound to do under S. 60, the mortgagor can enforce his right to get back the mortgaged documents, the possession of mortgaged property and the reconveyance of that property through Court. Thus the mortgagee in the instant case could not invoke S. 4A of the Kerala Land Reforms Act for claiming to be deemed tenant(11)

2. Law in the Punjab.

The Act does not apply to the Punjab. This section cannot, therefore, in terms apply to it. But the rules embodied in the section enact only the general law and, therefore, the principles underlying the section have been applied to cases arising in the Punjab(1).

3. Section not applicable to cases governed by Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, 1879.

This section did not apply to cases governed by the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act(1) for the reason that that Act was a special Act which regulated the relations between impoverished and indebted agriculturists and their creditors, while the Transfer of Property Act regulates the relations between mortgagor and mortgagees generally. Under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, the relations between the mortgagor and the mortgagee as settled by themselves were practically set aside and the Court was directed to go into the history of the transactions between them and to calculate the debits and credits according to the rules in the special Act. This complete setting aside of the original contractual relations between the parties cannot be reconciled with the rules of the general law(2).

4. "During the continuance of the mortgage."

The section does not apply unless possession is taken by the mortgagee during the continuance of the mortgage. The expression "during the continuance of the mortgage" means "from the time the contract establishing the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee has been entered into and till the time the mortgage comes to an end or is extinguished" (1) Thus, it applies to usufructuary mortgages (2) The undermentioned cases (3) which holds that it does not apply to a usufructuary mortgage, as possession under it is taken at the inception of the mortgage and not during the mortgage, must be held to be no longer good law in view of the Supreme Court decision in Manhar Prasad v. Deonarayan Prasad (4) In a suit by a simple mortgagee for money on default in payment, the Court instead of ordering the proper relief, made a decree for possession after the expiry of the period of grace. The mortgagee entered into possession under it. The decree became final. The Privy Council deciding that the decree was not according to law, held that as it did not purport to put an end to the bond and to the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee, the mortgagee became a mortgagee in possession (5) The section, however, will not apply to a case where the mortgagee enters into possession at a time when the mortgage has in fact become extinct. (6) Mortgagee's possession after the discharge of possessory mortgage is permissive and not adverse (7) Possession of the mortgagee will not be wrongful he will not be liable for mesne profits even in a case where under the provisions of the moneylenders Act the mortgage debt is discharged by operation of law (8).

5. "Takes possession."

In order to charge a mortgagor with the liabilities under this section—

- (i) the possession of the mortgaged property must be with the mortgagee, and
- (ii) such possession must have been taken in his character as mortgagee

A mortgagee, like any other person, may hold possession through an agent(1) and will be liable for the acts of the agent (2) Where the mortgagor had, as a condition of the mortgage, to appoint the mortgagee's nominee as manager, it was held that the possession of the manager was as an agent of the mortgagor and not of the mortgagee (3) But where in pursuance of the stipulation in the mortgage-deed the mortgagee was at liberty to place a mehta or clerk of his own to receive the collections but who was to be paid a weekly salary by the mortgagor, and such mehta received the collections and paid them over to the mortgagee, the possession was held to be that of the mortgagee (4) Where the mortgagee instead of himself entering into possession to which he was entitled under the mortgage, leases the property back to the mortgagor, it is the mortgagee who is in possession(5) though, in case of default by the mortgagor in such cases, the mortgagee has been held not liable. This, however, is on a different principle(6).

Where the mortgage deed contained an attornment clause but no possession was taken under it, it was held that the mortgagee was not placed in the position of a mortgagee in possession and thus liable to account merely on the ground that the deed contained an attornment clause (7) Where the mortgagee entitled to possession calls on the tenant of the mortgagor to pay the rent to him but the tenant states that the rent has been spent on repairs and the mortgagee keeps quiet, he cannot be deemed to be a mortgagee in possession, if the tenant has not attorned to him(8)

Normally in cases of usufructuary mortgages over land in possession of tenants, the tenants attorn to the mortgagee and his possession as against the tenant is that of an attorney of the mortgagor having authority to receive rent and profits. In such cases the tenant remains the tenant of the mortgagor even though he may also be described as tenant of the mortgagee as he receives the rent(9)

But if the mortgagee gives notice to the tenant not to pay to the mortgagor, he will be answerable as a mortgagee in possession(10).

Unless tenancy is determined the tenant of the mortgagor becomes tenant of the mortgagee and on redemption becomes the tenant of the mortgagor. But where the tenant himself becomes the mortgagee and the mortgagor sells the mortgaged property to another person the tenant mortgagee cannot claim a superior right of pre-emption as he is not a tenant of the mortgagee(11).

The fact that the mortgagees are in receipt of the rents and profits of the mortgaged estate, does not necessarily make them mortgagees in possession. In order to show that a mortgagee in receipt of the rents and profits is in possession, it ought to be shown, not only that he gets the amount of the rents paid by the tenants, but that he receives it in such a way that he has taken upon himself to intercept the power of the mortgagor to manage his estate and has himself so managed it and received the rents as part of the management (12) In Noyes v Pollock, (13) B who was the agent of the mortgagor, received the rents of the estate for him and applied them in payment of the interest to the mortgagees. The mortgagees wrote to B enclosing notices to the tenants to pay the rents to them, which B was to serve on the tenants if the mortgagor should attempt to interfere. The notices were not served on the tenants, but B paid the rents as he received them to the mortgagees. It was held that the mortgagees could not be charged as mortgagees in possession. See also the undermentioned case(14) to the same effect.

Where the mortgaged property consists of independent tenements, possession of one will not mean possession of the other (15) The same rule has been held to be good in Simmins v. Shirley, (16) in the case of properties which are conterminous. It was held in that case that to take possession of a farm or a field surrounded by copses is not to take possession of the copses. Where the mortgagee is in possession of part of the mortgaged property and allows the mortgagor to remain in possession of the rest, he cannot, at the suit of the subsequent encumbrancer, be charged constructively as in possession of the whole.(17)

The second condition which must be satisfied in order that the section must apply is that the mortgagee's possession must be qua mortgagee (18) The Courts are slow to decide that such possession has been taken(19) and they will not treat possession as being held by the mortgagee as such, unless they are satisfied that he took possession in his capacity of mortgagee without reasonable ground for believing himself to be in possession in any other capacity.(20) It has however been held in the undermentioned case(21) that in the absence of any definite proof by the mortgagee that his possession was referable to any other deed or contract it must be presumed that he came in possession of the property as a mortgagee. Where the mortgagee takes possession as auction-purchaser, he is not liable to account (22) Similarly, where the mortgagee is in possession in his capacity as lessee, he cannot be charged as a mortgagee in possession (23) But in some instances the mortgage and the lease really form part of the same transaction (24) In these cases, the mortgagee in possession is an mortgagee. (25) So also where a tenant purchases a mortgage and thereby becomes a mortgagee or where a tenant becomes a mortgagee by virtue of a mortgage created by the mortgagor in his favour and continues in possession after the termination of the lease, he does so as a mortgagee. (26) Where the mortgaged was placed in possession under a sudbharmā bond but no consideration was paid by the mortgagee, he was held liable to account for the income of the property as he was in possession qua mortgagee (27) Where, however, the mortgagee obtains possession under an invalid transfer of the equity of redemption, the generally accepted view is that the possession of the mortgagee from the date of the transfer will be not in his character as mortgagee, but under claim of full ownership (28) In the undermentioned case (29) of mortgage by conditional sale, the mortgagee, on failure of the mortgagor to pay the mortgage-money on the due date, took possession of the mortgaged property with the consent of the mortgagor. It was held by the High Court of Calcutta that the mortgagee was bound to appropriate the rents and profits obtained during the period of possession, towards the mortgage-debt under clause (h) of this section as the arrangement did not change the relationship between the parties but was merely a mode of satisfaction of the debt.

Where the mortgagee, during the continuance of the mortgage, enters into possession wrongfully, it has been held that the law will treat his possession as that of a mortgagee and the principle of this section has been applied, (30) on the ground that 'by a wrongful act a man may acquire no right and yet become subject to the responsibilities of a position wrongfully assumed by such act".(31)

In England, it has been held that once a mortgagee takes upon himself the burden which is imposed on all mortgagees who are in possession, he must continue to perform the duty, and cannot, when he please select to give it up,(32) although the Court may relieve him in a proper case of the duties of mortgagees in possession by the appointment of a receiver.(33) Under S. 24 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 and 45 Vict., Chap. 41), a receiver appointed by the mortgagee is deemed to be the agent of the mortgagor.(34) In this country also, the receiver appointed will, under S. 69A of the Transfer of Property Act, be deemed to be the agent of the mortgagor.

The question whether the mortgagee is a mortgagee in possession, and, if so, from what time, must be determined by the Court and ought not to be left to the Commissioner appointed to take accounts.(35)

Where an urban property is leased out to a tenant by the mortgagee in possession the tenancy would come to an end on the redemption of the mortgage in the absence of any authority given by the mortgagor to the mortgagee to induct a tenant. Thus the tenant would not be entitled to protection under Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (1947), when the mortgagor had never accepted him as tenant.(23)

Where the mortgagee inducted a tenant during the subsistence of attachment of the property the lease was affected by S 64, Civil P C and was voidable at the instance of the mortgagor. Thus the tenant could not claim the status of tenant against the mortgagor.(24)

A tenant who is inducted by usufructuary mortgagee gets his statutory rights under S. 9 of the Punjab Security of Land Tenures Act after its enforcement and simply on the redemption of mortgage, the mortgagors do not get a right to evict the tenant straightway without following the provisions of law.(25)

Section 76(a) of the Transfer of Property Act cannot apply to cases of urban immovable property and hence the lease created by the mortgagee in possession of an urban immovable property would not be binding on the mortgagor after redemption of the mortgage, even if it were to be assumed that the lease is such as a prudent owner of property would have granted in usual course of management.(26)

The lease given by the mortgagee terminates with redemption, in case of tenancy of urban house property and he is not entitled to protection under the Rent Control Act.(27)

The principle of Section 76(a) that acts done bona fide and prudently in the ordinary course of management may bind even after the termination of the title of the mortgagee in possession applies ordinarily to the management of agricultural lands and has seldom been extended to urban property.(28)

Where the management had not empowered the mortgagee to create a lease which would be binding on them after the redemption of mortgage, the tenant can claim tenancy rights only against his landlord viz., mortgagee and not mortgagor (29)

Where under mortgage deed mortgagee was not entitled to induct tenant who would continue beyond term of mortgage, and tenant continued in possession even after redemption of mortgage without any approval of mortgagor for such continuance, the tenant would not be entitled to protection of Rent Act as induction of tenant was not an act of prudent management (30)

It may be open to a tenant inducted upon urban property by a mortgagee with possession to rely upon S. 76(a) to claim tenancy right for the full term of tenancy, notwithstanding the redemption of the mortgage earlier.(31)

No person can confer on another a title better than he himself had. Therefore a mortgagee in possession cannot create in the tenant inducted by him a right to continue in possession beyond the period of redemption.

Section 76(a) carves out an exception to the above rule but this exception is available only with regard to agricultural lands and not urban properties

The mortgagor would be bound by the tenancies if there is any stipulation in the mortgage deed authorising the mortgagee with possession to lease out the property. In such case a tenancy may go beyond the term of the mortgage (32)

In a case from the Gujarat High Court, however, it is held that the principle of clause (1) not only extends to agricultural lands but also extends to urban property and a person lawfully inducted on the property by the mortgagee in possession continues to be a tenant under the Bombay Rent Control Act even after redemption. It was further held that a tenant lawfully inducted on the property by a mortgagee under the terms of the mortgage is not affected by premature redemption of the mortgage.(33)

There is no distinction between agricultural land and urban immovable property in applying this principle. If the principle is made applicable to urban property the Rent Acts at once come to the aid of the tenant of urban property after the termination of the mortgagee's interest. During the continuance of the mortgage the rent control legislation does not apply. But if the tenancy is binding on the mortgagor after redemption the Rent Acts apply. The execution of a fresh rent note by a tenant in favour of the mortgagee when he was already in possession of the premises as tenant under the mortgagor does not amount to creation of fresh tenancy by the mortgagee and the tenant cannot be said to have been inducted by the mortgagee and such a tenant cannot be dispossessed when the property is redeemed by the mortgagor. The tenant holds the property as a tenant of the mortgagor and enjoys the protection given by the Rent Acts. (34)

Tenant of a mortgagor, unless his tenancy is determined at the time of the mortgage, necessarily attorns to the mortgagee and after redemption he is relegated as tenant of the mortgagor (35)

In a case relating to agricultural tenancy in Vidarbha region of Maharashtra a lessee was inducted on the agricultural land by the mortgagee at the time when the tenancy legislation granting greater protection including proprietorship to lessees of agricultural land was on the anvil. As per the mortgage deed the mortgagee was required to cultivate the land himself. It was held that the granting of the lease was not the prudent act of management. 7. Clause (b).

Under this clause, the law requires a mortgagee to be diligent in realizing the rents and profits (1) In Lord Kensington v Bowerie (2) Lord Justice Turner explained the reason underlying such a provision thus :

"A mortgagee, when he enters into possession of a mortgaged estate enters for the purpose of recovering both his principal and interest, and the estate being, in the eye of this Court, a security only for the debt, the Court requires the mortgagee so entering to be diligent in realizing the amount which is due on the mortgage, in order that he may restore the estate to the mortgagor who, in the view of the Court, is entitled to it."

But he is not an assurer of the continuation of the same rate of profits which his mortgagor was able to raise. The very change of management and possession may cause a falling off of receipts (3) The mortgagee, therefore, is not chargeable for the gross rentals as shown in the jamabandi (4) The rule is that the mortgagee in possession is only liable for what he received, unless it be proved that, but for his wilful default, he might have received more (5) The burden of proving wilful default is on

Where the land mortgaged is one which is usually leased out, the mortgagee is answerable not only for what the tenants pay, but for not letting the property if he could have done so and for not getting the full rents from the tenants, if they could have paid them (7) But he is not necessarily bound to accept the highest rent offered irrespective of other considerations. Thus, the fact that the mortgagee could have got a better rent does not necessarily make out a case of wilful default (8) The law on the subject has been succinctly laid down in Hughes v. Williams, (9) in which Lord Chandelior Erskine observes :

"I do not mean to say, that to charge a mortgagee in possession, actual fraud is necessary. It is sufficient, if there is plain, obvious, and gross negligence, by not making use of facts within his knowledge. If for instance, the mortgagee turns out a sufficient tenant, and, having notice that the estate was under-let, takes a new tenant, another person offering more, an offer however not to be accepted rashly. Another circumstance, that weighs with me, is, that the mortgagor, if he knows the estate is under let, ought to give notice to the mortgagee, and to afford his advice and aid, for the purpose of making the estate as productive as possible. Can the mortgagor lie by, not giving notice, that a greater rent may be made, and come afterwards, by way of penal enquiry, to charge the mortgagee with the effect of his own negligence? If such gross negligence can be shown as comes up to the description of wilful default, he ought to be answerable for it. But I determine this exception upon the principle that a mortgagee taking possession, is to take the fair rents and profits. He is liable only for wilful default, of which in this instance there is no pretence, this mortgagor not having even communicated that he had any proposed tenants. It would be most dangerous to entangle mortgagees in a minute enquiry, whether some person would have given more which was never communicated."

Where the mortgagee fails to recover rent from tenants and allows it to become irrecoverable, (10) or obtains a decree and fails to execute it (11) he is liable for wilful default. In White v City of London Brewery Company, (12) the mortgagees in possession were brewers. They let the mortgaged premises with a restriction that the tenant should take his supply of beer entirely from them. It was held that the mortgagee must account for such additional rent as they would have made if the premises had been let without restriction. It cannot be said as a rule that tadi from sindi trees is ordinarily a source of income. A mortgagor of land on which there are sindi trees cannot, therefore, claim any profits on account of tadi, which it is possible to tap from the trees, though he can claim the lease money if it is proved that the trees were actually leased in any year, or the income, if the mortgagee tapped from personally (13). See also the undermentioned case. (14)

Where the mortgagor himself is in occupation as lessee (15) or as agent (16) and has obstructed the mortgagee from making the best use of the property, the mortgagee cannot be held accountable on the basis of wilful default. The reason is, where the party seeking relief is the sole guilty party, the Courts of Equity will leave him to the consequences of his own inequity and will decline to assist him to escape from them (17). In the undermentioned cases, (18) however, where the mortgagee obtained a decree for rent against the mortgagor, but allowed the decree to be barred by limitation, the rule of liability for wilful default was applied.

It has been held in the case noted below (19) that a mortgagee entitled to possession and allowing the mortgagor to be in possession will, as against subsequent encumbrances, be charged with profits.

A mortgagee is not liable for his failure to make illegal collections (20)

8. Clause (c).

Under this clause the mortgagee in possession is bound to pay—

- (a) the Government revenue;
 - (b) other charges of a public nature;
 - (c) all rent accruing due in respect of the mortgaged property during his possession, and
 - (d) any arrears of rent in default of payment of which the property may be summarily sold.

income of the property As long as the income is sufficient to meet these, the mortgagee must make the payments out of that income and cannot add the payments to the principal money under S. 72, clause (b). If the income does not permit of such payment, he can add these payments to the principal money under that section.(1)

The provisions of the clause are not, however, absolute but are subject to a contract to the contrary, and if the mortgagor, by such a contract, agrees to make these payments, this clause has no application.(2)

A mortgagee who has paid rent of the mortgaged land is entitled to be reimbursed at the time of redemption if there is a contract to that effect.(3)

This clause is not referred to in S. 77. Therefore even where there is a contract between the mortgagor and the mortgagee that the receipts of the mortgaged property shall be taken in lieu of interest or in lieu of interest and a defined portion of the principal, the mortgagee is liable to make payments under this clause unless there is a contract to the contrary within the meaning of this clause (4). The contrary view taken in the undermentioned case(5) is, it is submitted, not correct. Neither this section nor S. 77 was referred to in the discussion of the question.

such a contract to the contrary must depend on the facts of each case (13) Where a mortgage deed provided that the mortgagee should pay a specified sum as Government revenue and appropriate the balance towards interest and the revenue was increased during his possession, it was held that it was clearly the intention of the parties that the income, less the specified sum, should go towards interest; that there was contract to the contrary within the meaning of this clause and that the mortgagor was liable to pay the enhanced portion of the revenue. The right to redeem will subsist notwithstanding any sale or forfeiture of the right of the mortgagor.(20)

(B) Rent.

Where the mortgaged property is leasehold property the mortgagee in possession is bound to pay the rent accruing due during the period of his possession (21). The words "and all rent" were inserted by the amending Act 20 of 1929. The amendment, however, has not effected any change in the law. Even under the law before the amendment it was the duty of a mortgagee in possession to pay the rent. From the provisions of S. 65, Cl. (d) which required the mortgagor to pay the rent so long as the mortgagee was not in possession, it was clear that the Legislature had cast upon the mortgagee in possession the duty to pay the rent.(22)

Though the mortgagee in possession is bound to pay rent to the lessor under this clause the liability is, as has been seen in Note 1, only as between the mortgagor and the mortgagee; the clause does not give the lessor any right to recover rent directly from the mortgagee (23). Nor can the lessor recover such rent from the mortgagee under the general law inasmuch as there is no privity of any kind between the lessor and the mortgagee of leasehold interest. In order to create a privity of estate between them there must be an absolute assignment of the lessee's interest in favour of the mortgagee. The mere fact of execution of mortgage and the taking of possession by the mortgagee is not sufficient to create such privity (24).

The mortgagee in possession is bound to pay only the arrears of rent in default of payment of which the mortgaged property will be liable to be summarily sold (25) It has been held that the word "summarily" indicates that the proceedings for realization of rent by sale of the property are of a summary nature as, for instance, in the case of a certificate proceeding under the Public Demands Recovery Act; and that it is not meant to apply to cases where sales are held under the provisions of the tenancy law according to which the property itself and not merely the right, title and interest of the mortgagor will pass.(26)

There is a difference of opinion on the question as to whether the mortgagee in possession is liable to pay only the arrears of rent that have accrued due during his possession or even the arrears of rent accrued due before his taking possession. According to one view,(27) he is liable to pay only the arrears of rent which have fallen due during his possession, while according to the undermentioned cases(28) he is liable to pay the arrears of rent even for a period prior to his possession. It is submitted that the latter view is to be preferred. No doubt S. 65, clause (d) imposes on the mortgagor the duty of paying rent for the period during which the mortgagee is not in possession and hence it may be said that the mortgagor is liable for the payment of arrears of rent for that period, but the liability to pay such arrears seems to have been purposely imposed on the mortgagee in possession who is in receipt of the income of the property, so that the property may not be summarily sold away. Otherwise there seems to be no reason for making provision, in the clause, for payment of arrears of rent if they are to be taken to be limited to the period of the mortgagee's possession when the mortgagee has been already made liable for the payment of rent for that period

(D) Failure to make payments.

When the mortgagee in possession being bound to pay the rent or the revenue fails to pay the same and the mortgagor is obliged to pay it himself, the mortgagor, in the redemption suit, can ask for the account which would debit the mortgagee with the amount paid by the mortgagor.(29) It is also open for him to realize the sum by a separate suit based on S 69 of the Contract Act.(30) He can also claim interest on such amount (31) It has been held that where the mortgagor is not forced to pay the amount of rent unpaid by the mortgagee but voluntarily pays it to the lessor, the mortgagor would be entitled to obtain a money decree for three years' rent only, against the mortgagee under S. 70 of the Contract Act, that he cannot claim an amount under the last paragraph of this section there being no loss occasioned to him, and that he cannot claim interest on such amount. (32) Where the mortgage provided that the mortgagee was to appropriate, in lieu of interest, the balance of the profits remaining after payment of rent to the lessor, and that mortgagor was to redeem on payment of the principal, the mortgagee escaped paying rent for several years, it was held that the mortgagee, and not the mortgagor, was entitled to the benefit of such non-payment and that the mortgagor could not claim a reduction of the principal (33) It was observed in the undermentioned case (34) that the utmost that the mortgagor could be allowed to claim was that he should be indemnified against the contingency of a valid claim for arrears of these payments being made against him after his recovery of possession.

Where the mortgagee allows the property to be sold in default of payment of Government revenue, etc., and himself becomes the purchaser in the revenue sale, the sale does not deprive the mortgagor of his right to redeem (35) under S. 90 of the Trusts Act, 1882, the mortgagee purchaser holds the land so purchased for the benefit of the mortgagor, subject to the repayment of the amount due on the mortgage and of his expenses properly incurred as mortgagee. So also where the property is sold to third person due to failure of mortgagee to pay the land revenue by operation of last para of S. 76, the mortgagor is entitled to the accounting of the loss occasions to it. At best in such case, the question purchaser, on redemption would look to the mortgagee who had committed default in terms of mortgage and the court would give suitable directions in that behalf the posses

9. Clause (d).

This clause imposes on the mortgagee in possession the liability to make such necessary repairs of the mortgaged property as can be done out of the balance remaining after deducting from the rents and profits the payment mentioned in clause (c) and the interest on the principal money. To the extent of this balance his liability to make necessary repairs is paramount (1) If loss is caused to the mortgagor by his failure to make such necessary repairs it may be debited against the mortgagee in the accounts to be taken in the settlement of the mortgage (2) He is, however, not bound to spend money any further than to keep the estate in necessary repairs (3) Nor is he bound, where the expenditure on the necessary repairs is likely to exceed the balance in his hands, to spend money out of his own pocket (4) If he does spend money out of his own pocket he cannot claim repayment from the mortgagor under this clause but will be allowed to add the expenditure to the principal money under S 72, clause (b) if it is incurred for the preservation of the property from destruction.(5) Thus, the authority of mortgagee to make repairs is restricted to the net income from property meaning thereby that he can make repairs only from the amount out of rents and profits from property after deducting interest on the principal amount (6)

Any work by way of protection and maintenance of fruit trees on the mortgaged property which is only an ordinary operation of husbandry, does not call for any payment of compensation under the Kerala Compensation for Tenant's Improvements Act (7)

Under the English law a mortgagee in possession is allowed the expenses of necessary repairs under the head of "just allowances" in the accounts taken under the decree in a redemption suit (8)

The repairs which the mortgagee is bound to make must be necessary. Where the mortgagee in possession laid water-pipes in the house mortgaged to him and claimed credit for the money spent therefor, it was held that the act of the mortgagee was not a necessary repair and that consequently he was not entitled to be credited with the amount so spent (9)

Expenditure incurred in preserving the irrigation system of a zamindari has been held to be for keeping the property under repairs.(10)

The provisions of this clause, like those of clause (c), are not absolute but are subject to a contract to the contrary. Thus, where a mortgage bond contained an agreement between the parties on the matter of repairs, it was held that the Court was not competent to go outside the mortgage-bond in deciding on the matter.(11)

There is no contradiction between the provisions of this clause and clause (h) of this section as this clause is concerned only with making it obligatory on the mortgagee, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, to carry out necessary repairs to the property and limiting the amount which can be spent by him for carrying out the necessary repairs and not with the question of priorities.(12)

A mortgagee is bound to inform the mortgagor immediately by notice about the trees being cut and removed. If he is not informed he is liable for the value (13)

10. Clause (e).

A similar provision is made in S 66 for a mortgagor in possession and in S 108 clause (a) for a lessee. The clause in short means that the mortgagee in possession must not commit waste on the property (1) This duty follows from his duty to manage the property as a person of ordinary prudence would manage if it were his own (2), and from his liability to return the property back to the mortgagor on redemption, in the same condition in which he received it (3) It is a well understood, though implied, term of every usufructuary mortgage, or even a lease, that a garden land should not be converted into a desert, by cutting all the trees, or a wet land denuded of all its fertility by continuous cultivation without manuring. (4) No reasonable mortgagor will contemplate the garden land being handed back to him after the period of 60 years, when the usufructuary mortgage is over, with no trees whether on the ground that all the trees existing on the land mortgaged had died or had fallen down. (5)

A specific clause in the mortgage is not required for delivering back the land in its original state by planting substitute trees in the place of the existing trees, and it is required only to support an alleged right for not planting substitute trees and delivering back the land with no trees (6) Where a mortgagee of a garden with arecanut trees on it plants substitute trees for those lost by age, he cannot claim compensation for them on the expiry of the mortgage (7) (See also Notes on S. 63A).

Subject to these restrictions he is entitled to use the property in any way he pleases (8) Thus he can grow any crop he can on the land and cut it away before the land is handed over to the mortgagor (9) Similarly, if he has planted trees on the land, he is entitled to remove them before handing over the land to the mortgagor (10). But as seen above, he will be committing waste if he cuts down trees already existing on the land(11) or pulls down the property(12) The cutting of bamboos amounts to safer produce just like the cutting of jungle which requires to be cut periodically for its proper growth and in such a case the mortgagee in possession does not commit waste by cutting bamboo clumps planted by the mortgagor provided he shows that the bamboos were at the time when they were cut, of a mature age and ripe for cutting (13)

Where the land mortgaged is not agricultural land, it cannot be said that its utility is injured by the roots or stumps of trees planted by the mortgagee (14) Grant of a lease by the mortgagee in possession which is to enure beyond the redemption of the mortgage defeats the right of the mortgagor to khas possession and is an act which comes within the prohibition of this clause(15). (See also Note 6).

The mortgagees must not only not himself commit any act which is destructive or permanently injurious to the property but must not allow others also to do so (16) Thus, where A the owner of a house having a door which gave communication between one half of the house and the other, mortgaged the two halves to different persons B and C after closing the door and subsequently B opened the door, it was held that the opening of the door was destructive of the property as it materially altered the condition of the house in which the mortgage A considered it to be most useful and that C the other mortgagee could institute a suit against B in order to have the door closed and restored to the condition in which it was when he entered on the property as a mortgagee.(17) the house to A. Subsequently, C purchased the equity of redemption at an execution sale. After C's purchase A removed portions of the house, C brought a suit against B for redemption and claimed damages for the removal. It was held that B was not in possession but A remained in possession as the tenant of B and therefore A was responsible, if any one was, for the loss, and not B. It is submitted that the decision does not seem to be correct because although B leased back the house to A, B was still in possession through A, and B was therefore responsible for the loss caused by A after C's purchase. Had A himself claimed damages from B as mortgagee in possession the matter would have been different because in that case A could not take advantage of his own wrong but in this case after C's purchase A remained in possession as the tenant of B and not on behalf of C who had no right to take possession till the redemption of the mortgage.

A mortgagee in possession is not responsible for the loss arising from accidental causes such as fire.(19)

Where the mortgagee in possession commits waste, he may, when accounts are taken in pursuance of a decree for redemption, be debited with the loss occasioned (20). Thus, where a mortgagee in possession cut down trees existing on the land, it was held that the mortgagor was entitled to a deduction at the time of redemption, of the amount equivalent to the value of the trees cut.(21) So also where the mortgagee in possession granted to the non-occupancy tenants, occupancy rights in return for nazarana, it was held that the land could not, after the accrual of the occupancy rights, be so valuable to the mortgagor as before and that the mortgagor was therefore entitled to the amount of nazarana.(22)

In the undermentioned case(23) decided before the Transfer of Property Act, the Allahabad High Court disallowed, in a suit for redemption, the claim of the mortgagor to set off against the mortgage-money the amount of compensation for waste committed by the mortgagee, on the ground that the amount of compensation was not an ascertained sum of money under S. 111 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1877 (now Civil Procedure Code, 1908, O. 8, R. 6). This case was not followed in a later Madras case(24) decided under the Transfer of Property Act, and is no longer good law in view of the express provision in the last paragraph of this section.

Where a mortgagor makes a deposit under S. 83 of the Act and the deposit is accepted by the mortgagee, it has been held that the mortgagor can institute a suit for compensation for the waste within three years from the date of his re-entry under Art. 105 of the Limitation Act of 1908(25). 11. Clause (f) — Insurance.

Section 72 provides that where the mortgaged property is, by its nature, insurable the mortgagee may, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, insure and keep insured against loss or damage by fire, the whole or any part of such property. This clause provides that when he has so insured it and loss or damage by fire occurs, he must apply the money received by him under the policy or so much of it as may be necessary in reinstating the property or, if the mortgagor so directs, in reduction or discharge of the mortgage-money. It may be noticed that under S. 72 if the mortgage deed does not specify the amount of insurance, the mortgagee can insure the property only for an amount which will not exceed two-thirds of the amount required to reinstate the property in case of total destruction.

The last clause of S. 72 provides that where the mortgagor himself has insured the property for the amount for which the mortgagee is authorized to insure, the mortgagee cannot insure the property again. When the mortgagor himself insures the property, and loss or damage by fire occurs, the mortgagee himself cannot claim from the insurance company the payment of the insurance money for the reason that the contract of insurance is a contract by the insurer to indemnify the insured against the loss that he may suffer. It is not a contract to indemnify a third person and there is no privity between the insurer and the third person. In order to entitle the mortgagee to a claim on the insurance money in such a case there must be a covenant not only to insure but to insure for the benefit of the mortgagee or the policy must be properly assigned to the mortgagee by the mortgagor.⁽¹⁾ But through the mortgagee himself cannot claim the insurance money from the insurance company, he can require the mortgagor, in a case where the mortgaged property is already insured by the mortgagor on the date of the mortgage, to apply the insurance money actually received by him in reinstating the property under section 49.

By the terms of a mortgage deed the mortgagor agreed to insure and keep insured during the continuance of the security, the mortgaged premises from loss or damage by fire and assign the policy to the mortgagee. In default of payments by the mortgagor, the mortgagee was to make the payment of the premium and such payments were to be a charge on the mortgaged premises. It was further provided that all sums received under such insurance would be applied by the mortgagee, if so required by the mortgagor, in reinstating the premises. The property was not insured. The mortgagee brought a suit upon the mortgage and a receiver was appointed by the Court in the mortgage suit. The receiver insured the property under the orders of the Court. The loss by fire took place and the mortgagor claimed that according to the terms of the mortgage deed the insurance money should be applied in reinstating the property. It was held that the policy was not governed by the terms of the mortgage deed; the deed did not provide for what would happen in a case where the property, having come into the custody of Court, was insured by an officer of the Court, for the benefit of all the parties to the suit; it might be that there were other parties to the suit besides the mortgagor and the mortgagee, the money having come by payments made by an officer of the Court, the Court had ample discretion in directing in what manner the money so received should be laid out, and in this case the Court came to the conclusion that the most convenient and best course for the application of the money was to allow the mortgagee to receive the money in part satisfaction of the mortgage rather than to direct the receiver to undertake the reconstruction of the property.⁽²⁾

12. Clause (g) — Mortgagee must keep accounts.

This clause imposes upon a mortgagee in possession a statutory duty to keep and render accounts of all the sums received and spent by him as a mortgagee.⁽¹⁾ The duty is analogous to that imposed upon a trustee by S. 19 of the Trusts Act, 1882, and was recognised and enforced even before this Act.(2) It owes its origin in the view held by the Court of Equity that the rents and profits of the mortgaged property are incidents de jure of the ownership of the equity of redemption and that the mortgagee in possession is bound to apply whatever profits he actually receives towards the satisfaction of the mortgage-debt (3) The usufruct of the property thus represents the mortgagor's money in the hands of the mortgagee who is bound to render account at the time of redemption.(4) There will be two decrees in the suit namely, preliminary decree and final decree. So far as the amounts statutorily debited to the mortgagee under this clause before the preliminary decree are concerned, these cannot be taken into account if the preliminary decree does not take these amounts into consideration at the time the Court makes the preliminary decree (5) But the same cannot be said of the net receipts realised by the mortgagee subsequent to the preliminary decree. between the preliminary decree and the final decree (6)

This clause and the next one are absolute in their terms in the sense that they are not stated to be subject to any "contract to the contrary". It is not, therefore, open to a mortgagee in possession to contract himself out of the statutory obligation under this clause (7). The only exception to the clause is provided by S. 77 and a mortgagee can be exonerated from the liability to render accounts only if he succeeds in bringing his case strictly within the provisions of that section (8). A simple case under S. 77 would be where the mortgagee is to appropriate the whole of the rents and profits in lieu of interest or in lieu of interest and a defined portion of the principle (9) But there may be a case, of a mortgagee who, while appropriating the rents and profits as stated above, also agrees to make an annual payment to the mortgagor. In such a case a question whether the mortgagee is liable to account under this clause depends upon whether the annual payment is to be made independent of the rents and profits or out of the rents and profits. In the former case there is no question of accountability under this clause as the case is really one under S. 77 and the obligation to pay is independent of it. In the latter case, however, where the annual payment is to be made out of the rents and profits, the mortgagee is liable to account, though the question of accounting will only arise in case the mortgagee makes default in payment (10) As the obligation to pay arises out of the mortgage transaction there is no question of limitation in respect of these payments and they continue to be recoverable so long as the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee exists between the parties. (11)

Although a mortgagee may not be entitled to claim possession on the basis of covenant contained in the mortgage bond and if for any reason he enters into possession as a mortgagee he would still be liable to fulfill the conditions laid down in S. 76. Prior to the passing of the Act, a mortgagee taking the usufruct of the mortgaged property in lieu of interest was liable to render accounts at the time of redemption under various usury Regulations even if there was a contract between the parties not to take accounts, (13) but those Regulations are repealed by the Usury Laws Repeal Act, XXVIII of 1855, and those cases are now governed entirely by S. 77.

The accounts to be kept by the mortgagee must be clear, full and accurate, and to be full they must be detailed and supported by the vouchers (14) The accounts must state the gross receipts realised from the tenancy and not merely of what reaches the mortgagee's hands (15) Thus where a mortgagee employs an agent to collect rents, he must account not only for what his agent has handed over to him but also for what has been received by his agent as he must be treated as having received everything that was received by his agent (16) The account must be full and complete and not merely an abstract of receipts in lump sums during the period of the mortgagee's possession (17) The fact that the realisations made by the mortgagee are unauthorised or wrongful does not qualify the mortgagee's liability to render account in respect of such realisations (18)

In Goluck Chunder Dutt v Mohan Lal,⁽¹⁹⁾ the way in which the account is to be kept by the mortgagee has been stated as follows :

"In fact, the account required from the mortgagee is one setting forth what he has realised — from what portions of the mortgaged property — in what terms or periods — with what loss and gain on the several assets — with that necessary reductions — and what remains then as the net profits which can be taken as actual realisations towards liquidating the sum due under the mortgage transaction. It is such an independent account as this, to be supported, and proved, and vouched that the law requires."

The account may be kept by the mortgagee himself or by his own agent.⁽²⁰⁾ The accounts kept by the agent of the property managed by him are the principal's accounts on the principle qui facit per alium facit per se.⁽²¹⁾ The account required of the mortgagee is, however, independent of that to be kept by any one else, such as a patwari of the village and cannot be dispensed with on the ground that the latter is keeping them.⁽²²⁾

It is not necessary that a separate account should be maintained. The accounts relating to the mortgage contained in the general account books of the mortgagee can be relied upon ⁽²³⁾

Obviously, a mortgagee is required to keep and render accounts only in respect of that portion of the property of which he has taken possession ⁽²⁴⁾

Where three out of the four mortgagees enter into possession of some only of the mortgaged properties under a lease subsequent to the mortgage the possession not being in law as mortgagees' they are not liable to render account for rents and profits.⁽²⁵⁾

An assignee of a mortgage is bound to account not only for the period subsequent to his assignment, but also for the period before his assignment ⁽²⁶⁾

It has been held that a person who has taken possession under a void mortgage is not under any liability to account, his duty is but to deliver possession to the person entitled to be in possession with mesne profits.⁽²⁷⁾

Under S. 3(b) of the Madras Estates Abolition and Conversion into Ryotwari Act (26 of 1948), on and from the notified date the entire estate stands transferred to the Government and vests in them free of all encumbrances. Though the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee between the parties may continue in spite of the notification under the Act and the mortgagee in possession will be liable to render an account in accordance with the provisions of this clause, the mortgagor will not be entitled, in such taking of accounts, to the rents and profits of the property on and from the notified date.⁽²⁸⁾

13. Accounts when to be taken.

It is a well-settled rule that the accounts between the mortgagor and mortgagee are to be made up and settled only at the time of redemption(1) and that the mortgagor must seek redemption before he calls upon the mortgagee to account. A suit merely for rendition of accounts is not maintainable. The mortgagor must ask for the further relief of redemption (2) See also Note 21.

Where it was not stipulated in the mortgage deed that mortgagee was placed in possession over the mortgaged property in lieu of interest only and was not accountable, Section 76(g) and (h) would apply and not S. 77. The mortgagee was therefore bound to account at the time of redemption.(3)

There is an exception to the above rule. Under the Dekkhan Agriculturists Relief Act.(4) a mortgagor could file a suit merely to take accounts and such a suit did not bar a further suit for redemption (5). The mortgagor can enforce the remedy of redemption and accounts in one suit, but if due to statutory provision redemption is unenforceable he can still pursue the remedy of accounts.(6)

Where in a suit on the mortgage for recovery of money by sale of the mortgaged property, the mortgagee who was in possession of the property during the continuance of the mortgage fails to establish his case that such possession was referable to his status as a tenant under the mortgage, the latter is entitled in that suit itself to have an accounting from the mortgagee for the profits.

14. Proof of accounts.

The mere putting forward of accounts is not sufficient proof of the accuracy of the accounts. They must be supported by some other evidence which the Court believes.(1) It is for the party who puts forward the accounts, namely the mortgagee, to explain them and to support them in such a way as to convince the Judge that there is such a probability of their accuracy as to make it reasonable for a prudent man to accept them (2) It is open to the mortgagor to show the accounts to be false.(3) Patwari's accounts may be used as a test of the accuracy of the accounts filed by the parties (4) Where the account in respect of the cost of improvements made by the mortgagee consisted of an account book which was not written from time to time and was not a contemporary record of the cost incurred but was one written ad hoc from rough slips of paper at a number of consecutive sittings, it was held that the account was not admissible in evidence but that the slips of paper would be admissible to corroborate the testimony of the mortgagee (5)

15. Failure to keep accounts — Effect of.

Where a mortgagee in possession fails to keep full and accurate accounts or neglects to produce them in Court, the Court will make every presumption against him (1) The Court will, in such cases, proceed on the hypothesis that all the tenants have paid their rent to the mortgagee and take

"If the mortgagee has not kept proper accounts, the general presumption will be against him, but by this we do not mean to say that, because the mortgagee has neglected to keep proper accounts, all statements of the mortgagor against him must be taken as true. 16. Clause (h) — Mode of taking accounts.

This clause lays down a mode in which the accounts between the mortgagor and the mortgagee are to be taken. It embodies the same mode of calculations as was followed in cases before the Act (1) The method followed is to ascertain the gross collections at the end of a certain period, usually a year, and after deducting the necessary outlay on account of revenue, expenses of collection and the preservation of estate, the balance goes to reduce the interest, and if there is a surplus over, it goes to the reduction of the principal, the account being closed at the end of each period (2) If the net receipts are less than the amount due on account of interest, the deficit of interest is not, in the absence of a contract to that effect, to be added to the principal as that would mean charging compound interest (3) This mode of taking accounts is called accounting with rests and the advantage of it is, that when there is a surplus of net receipts over the amount of interest then due, the balance goes to reduce the principal and then the interest for the next period is calculated on the or producing the necessary accounts does not necessarily raise the presumption that the whole of the mortgage-money has been wiped off by the receipts of rents and profits of the mortgaged property.)

reduced principal.(4)

This clause does not lay down any definite rule as to when the rests are to be made. It simply states that the receipts should be debited against the mortgagee "from time to time." The practice of the Courts is, however, to make rests at the end of each year(5) though, in one case, half yearly rests were made in calculating the interest.(6)

The mode of accounting in England differs from the above rule. The ordinary rule there is not to direct rests in an account against a mortgagee in possession, unless at the time of entry into possession there is no arrear of interest due or there are any other special circumstances in the case to justify such a direction.(7) Thus, the amount of rents and profits runs from the beginning to the end without reference to the question whether the mortgagee has, at any particular time, had in his hands more than sufficient money to pay the interest or not. The rule is based on the ground that a mortgagee is not bound to accept payments in dribblets but is entitled to have the account taken as a whole. The mortgagee is not, therefore, treated as repaid until such account is taken (8)

As stated above, the method of accounting under the clause does not contemplate the charging of compound interest, unless the parties specifically stipulate for it. Before the amendment in 1929, the expression used in the clause was "interest on the mortgage-money" As defined in S 58, "mortgage-money" includes both principal and interest and hence it was thought that the expression in the clause might suggest charging of compound interest even where the deed of mortgage provided for simple interest. The word "mortgage-money" after the word "interest" was therefore omitted by the amendment in 1929 and now it is clear, that the interest may be simple or compound according to the contract of mortgage.(9)

Sections 11(1) and 17 of the Orissa Money-lenders Act (3 of 1939) override the provisions of this clause as respects matters provided therein.(10)

See also Note 12.

17. "Receipts from the mortgaged property."

The term "receipts" means the actual and gross realisations from the mortgaged property.(1)

Where a mortgagee in possession is evicted by the mortgagor and the mortgagee obtains against him a decree for possession with damages, the mortgagee is not liable to account for the amount of damages recovered by him under the decree, as the amount of damages is not the usufruct of the property.(2)

18. "Fair occupation rent."

Under cl. (h), occupation rent is to be charged against a mortgagee only when he personally occupies the mortgaged property.(1) Occupation must be distinguished from possession. A man may be in possession of an estate without being in occupation of it. A person who takes rents from the tenants is in possession of the land, but the occupation of the land is with the tenants.(2) There is, therefore, no question of occupation rent if the mortgagee lets the property to tenants.(3) A man may be in occupation in law by occupying the estate himself or through his servants.(4) The term, "occupation rent", has also been used in S. 62 of the Trusts Act, 1882.

A fair occupation rent is properly represented by the rent which the mortgagee would have realised by letting it out to the tenants. Where, therefore, a mortgaged property is land and the mortgagee personally cultivates it, instead of letting it to tenants, the net profits of cultivation cannot be taken as occupation rent (5) It has, however, been held in the undermentioned case(6) that a mortgagee personally occupying and cultivating the land may be charged with either an occupation rent or with the net profits of his cultivation as, under the circumstances of the case, may seem just. It is submitted that the clause lays down only one mode of charging the mortgagee in such a case and that is to charge a fair occupation rent. The clause does not warrant the other alternative mode of charging as suggested by the above case. What is the amount which the mortgagee would have realised if he had let out the land on the best terms available is in each case a question of fact.(7)

A mortgagee in possession of a house will not be charged with occupation rent during the time it is in so ruinous a condition that rent could not have been obtained for it (8)

It has been held that the mortgagee cannot charge loss in his agricultural operation to the debt account but must bear it himself (9)

19. Expenses of management and collection of rents and profits.

The provision for deducting, from the receipts, the expenses of management of the mortgaged property and of the collection of rents and profits thereof is new and has been introduced by the Amending Act of 1929. Prior thereto, the mortgagee could treat such expenses as accretions to the principal money and add them as such to the principal money at the time of redemption, under clause (a) of S. 72. It was, however, considered later on, that these expenses were more in the nature of outgoings than in the nature of accretions. In England also such expenses were and are treated as "just allowances".(1) The amendment gives effect to this view (2) A mortgagee in possession is now entitled to incur expenses for the management and for the collection of rents and profits thereof and can recover the same by making appropriate deductions from the receipts in his hands. The expenses of revenue survey of the mortgaged property(3) and the expenses incurred in digging a new well(4) have been allowed under the head of management expenses. Similarly, where a mortgagee employs servants or agents to manage the property, their salaries would be allowed to him as expenses of management.(5)

As for the expenses of collection of rents and profits of the mortgaged property the general practice in this country is to allow a commission of ten per cent. on the gross rental to cover the cost of collection.(6) unless there is a stipulation providing otherwise or it is shown that the amount so allowed is unreasonable (7) In the undermentioned cases,(8) however, it was held that where a mortgagee files an account, the proper sum allowable is not five or ten per cent of the receipts, but what the mortgagee has actually spent and has shown in such account to have been spent for that purpose. A mortgagee is also allowed expenses bona fide incurred by him for realizing rent from the tenants through Court.(9)

It is, however, a well-established principle that a mortgagee in possession is not entitled to any remuneration for his personal trouble in respect of the mortgaged property and, therefore, cannot charge anything by way of salary or allowance for his personal services either, in connexion with the management or for the collection of rents and profits.(10) This principle was applied by their Lordships of the Privy Council even to a case where one of the co-mortgagees resided on the mortgaged property and managed it for the benefit of himself and his co-mortgagees.(11) But a mortgagee in possession may, in the deed itself, stipulate for a payment for his personal work and effect will be given to the stipulation if it is free from any circumstance of oppression or unfair dealing (12) In the undermentioned case(13) a stipulation contained in a separate agreement for payment of salary to the mortgagee in possession for management of the property — a mill in that case — was held valid and enforceable by the Court.

20. "Surplus, if any, shall be paid to the mortgagor."

The clause further provides that if there is any surplus left in the hands of the mortgagee after the discharge of both interest and principal, it shall be paid back to the mortgagor (1) It is, however, silent on the point whether interest should be charged against the mortgagee when he retains the money in his hands instead of immediately refunding it to the mortgagor. As a general rule interest will be allowed on the surplus on equitable grounds, (2) but there is a conflict of opinions as to the time from which it should be granted. According to some cases, as soon as the debt is discharged the money belongs to the mortgagor and hence interest should begin to run from the time when the debt stands discharged, (3) while, according to other cases, it should begin to run only from the date of the institution of a suit for redemption. (4)

The fact that the mortgagees have been paying the surplus profits for a period of twelve years to a stranger or for that matter even to a person who was once the owner of a part of the equity of redemption, instead of to the purchasers of the equity of redemption, does not take away the right of the purchasers to redeem the mortgage for a period of sixty years which is inherent in them under the Limitation Act. (5)

21. Clause (i).

Where a mortgagor makes a valid tender of, or deposits, the mortgage money in Court the mortgagee is bound to account for all the receipts of the property after the date of the tender or from the earliest time when the mortgagee could have taken the amount of the deposit out of Court, and the mortgagee is not entitled to deduct anything on account of expenses such as Government revenue, repairs, costs of management and collection charges (1) A conditional tender of mortgage money does not amount to a valid tender (2) The words "and shall not be entitled to deduct any amount therefrom on account of any expenses incurred after such date or time in connection with the mortgaged property" were added by S. 40 of the Amending Act of 1929 in view of the interpretation put upon the clause in Subba Rao v. Shri Balusa Buchi(3) where a Full Bench of the Madras High Court held that even after a valid tender, a mortgagee in possession was entitled to take credit for amounts which he paid after the tender to meet the Government revenue, the necessary repairs and the collection charges. Wallis, C.J., thus observed :

"Another question which arises in these appeals is as to the extent of the liability of a mortgagee remaining in possession after a lawful tender of deposit to account for the gross receipts of the mortgaged property under S. 76(1). On this clause the subordinate Judge has held that the mortgagees are not entitled to credit for amounts which they paid after the tender to meet the revenue demands on the mortgaged property, and for necessary repairs and collection charges, and the commentaries and one or two cases bear out this view, but in none of them has the clause been very fully considered. Such a rule would involve a great hardship to a mortgagee who refused to accept the tender under a bona fide claim of right. It is often exceedingly difficult under the existing law to say whether a transaction amounts to a mortgage or a sale, and where it is ultimately found to be a mortgage, it would be very hard to refuse the mortgagee credit for all the necessary expenses incurred by him whilst contesting the right to redeem. As observed in argument it would put him in a worse position than a trespasser, and there seems no need for so stringent a rule."

The amendment now leaves no room for such an interpretation of the clause and makes it clear that the expenses cannot be allowed to be deducted from the receipts.(4) The expenses will include even public taxes.(5) It has been held that expenses will include cost of cultivation also.(6)

It has been held, that the filing of a suit for redemption amounts to an offer to redeem and, therefore, a mortgagee who contests the redemption suit unsuccessfully is liable to account for what he receives after the institution of the suit.(7) It has, however, been held in the undermentioned case(8) that institution of suit for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage is not tantamount to tender of the mortgage money and that, therefore, where the mortgagor has deposited the amount of the mortgage money in Court only after preliminary decree has been passed, a decree for mesne profits cannot be granted from the date of institution of suit but can be granted only from the date of deposit of the mortgage money till the date of delivery of possession.

The words "deposits in manner hereinafter provided" have reference to a deposit made in Court under S. 83, and the words "the amount for the time being due on the mortgage" under this clause have got a similar meaning as the words "the amount remaining due on the mortgage" in S. 83.(9)

The word "receipts" under this clause has the same meaning as the word "receipts" under Cl (h), namely actual and gross realisations. The word "gross" occurring before the word "receipts" under the old clause has been omitted by the Amending Act of 1929. The reason for the omission has been stated by the Special Committee as follows :

"In Cl (i), the words "gross receipts" are used. This phrase was quite appropriate with regard to the fact that no provision was made in Cl (h) for deducting expenses incurred for the management of the property or the collection of the rents and profits. Now that this provision has been made in Cl (h), it is unnecessary to retain the word "gross" in Cl (i). The same has been accordingly omitted."

Even after a tender or deposit, the mortgagee does not cease to be a mortgagee and become a trespasser. He still continues to be a mortgagee but with a heavier liability to account. The claim by the mortgagor for the receipts from the mortgagee under the clause is therefore one arising from and connected with his right to redeem or recover possession of the property (10) Where, therefore, after a refusal of a valid tender or deposit by the mortgagee, the mortgagor brings a suit for redemption, a second suit for the recovery of the receipts alone is barred under O. 2, R. 2 and S. 11, Explanation IV of the Civil Procedure Code. (11)

22. Last paragraph.

The last paragraph of the section lays down that if the mortgagee in possession fails to perform any of the duties imposed on him by the various clauses and consequent loss is caused to the mortgagor the mortgagee may be debited with such loss at the time when accounts are taken in pursuance of a decree in a redemption suit or in a suit on the mortgage. The word "may" indicates that the section provides a cumulative remedy and does not bar any other remedy which the mortgagor may have under the law. (1) Thus, if loss is caused to the mortgagor, he need not wait till the institution of the redemption suit, but can recover it by filing a separate suit for it immediately (2) All matters between mortgagor and mortgagee regarding accounts, equities etc. have to be worked out in a single suit. (3)

The mortgagor, however, cannot be compelled to file a separate suit. In the undermentioned case (4) decided before the Transfer of Property Act, the High Court of Allahabad disallowed, in a suit by the mortgagee for recovery of mortgage money, the claim of the mortgagor to set off the amount of loss against mortgage money on the ground that the amount of the loss was not an ascertained sum of money under S. 111 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1877 (now Civil Procedure Code, 1908, O 8, R 6) This case was not followed in Shiva Devi v Jaru Heggade(5) where it was held that under S 76 the estimate of loss caused to the mortgagor by the failure of the mortgagee, was an item which must be considered in determining the accounts in settlement of the mortgage.

Where a mortgagor fails to get the matter of the loss settled at the time of the preparation of the decree for redemption, he cannot file a separate suit for the recovery of such loss after the passing of the decree which fixes the amount of the redemption money.(6)

Where the mortgagor makes a deposit in Court under S. 83 and the deposit is accepted by the mortgagee, a suit for redemption on the mortgage does not become necessary. In such a case the mortgagor need not claim the compensation for the loss in the proceeding under S 83, as the object of those proceedings is to make an offer irrespective of all controversy or to obtain summary redemption leaving any dispute about the excess to be settled by a regular suit. The mortgagor can bring a suit for the recovery of the loss within three years from the mortgagor's re-entry on the property under Art 105 of the Limitation Act (1908). (Now see Art. 61(c) of the Limitation Act of 1963).(7)

Where on a deposit made by the mortgagee in Court in respect of a mortgage with possession the mortgagor withdrew the deposit on refusal of the mortgagee to accept it, the mortgagor is entitled to mesne profits from the date of original deposit.(8)

It should be noted that a mere failure of the mortgagee to perform any of the duties under the section is not sufficient but a loss must have been caused to the mortgagor by such failure.(9)

In Gopala Menon v. Narayana Kurup, (10) where part of the mortgaged security, while in the possession of the mortgagee, was acquired under the Land Acquisition Act, and the mortgagee could not put the mortgagor in possession of the whole of the mortgaged property, it was held that the proper course was to debit the mortgagee with the value of the land in taking the mortgage accounts under this section, if the property could not be identified.

It has been held that where the mortgagee in possession wrongfully withholds the collections,

77. RECEIPTS IN LIEU OF INTEREST.— Nothing in S. 76, Cls. (b), (d), (g) and (h), applies to cases where there is a contract between the mortgagee and the mortgagor that the receipts from the mortgaged property shall, so long as the mortgagee is in possession of the property, be taken in lieu of interest on the principal money, or in lieu of such interest and defined portions of the principal.

Synopsis

1. Scope of the section.
2. "Defined portions of the principal."
3. Mortgagor may make himself liable to account though mortgagee is not liable to do so.

1. Scope of the section.

Under S. 76 the liability of the mortgagee in possession is, under some of the clauses thereof absolute, while the liability under other clauses is subject to a contract to the contrary. In the former case, the parties are not at liberty to contract themselves out of the liability so imposed (1)

This section provides that the absolute liability under Cls. (b), (d), (g) and (h) of S. 76 does not apply where the parties have contracted that the receipts from the mortgaged property shall be taken in lieu of interest on the principal money, or in lieu of interest and defined portions of the principal (2)

Where there is no such special contract, the general provisions of S. 76 will apply.(3) This section, which embodies a limited exception to S. 76, omits any reference of Cl. (c) of S. 76.(4) That clause has no reference to any accounting. It merely casts upon the mortgagee in possession the liability to pay all charges of a public nature and all rent accruing due in respect of the property during his possession.(5)

In the cases referred to in this section it is no concern of the mortgagor whether the mortgagee collects the rents and profits under S. 76, Cl. (b), or keeps an accurate account under Cl. (g), or applies the receipts properly under Cl. (h). If the usufruct exceeds the interest or the interest and the portion of the principal as the case may be, towards which the usufruct is to be appropriated, the mortgagee will be benefited thereby. If there is a loss, it is the mortgagee who must bear it.(6)

The exemption under this section from the liability to account arises only when there is a contract to take the usufruct for the whole interest or for the whole interest and the defined portions of the principal. The section does not apply where the mortgagee has to hand over a fixed portion of the rents and profits to the mortgagor, or where the mortgagee is to appropriate the rents and profits in lieu of a portion of the interest.(7) In Muhammad Sadiq v. Harakh Narain.(8) Courtney-Terrell, C.J., observed as follows :

"Now the liability to account of a mortgagee in possession depends entirely upon whether under the contract he has to hand over from time to time anything of the rents and profits to the mortgagor, for, of such money he is a trustee for the plaintiff until it is paid over. In cases where only a portion, fixed or proportionate of such rents and profits, is to be retained by way of interest, the liability to account is clear. Similarly, where the whole of the rents and profits are to be retained in reduction of a fixed rate of interest and the mortgagor must pay the balance of the fixed rate from some other source it is clearly necessary to account because the mortgagee is in possession and the mortgagor cannot otherwise know how much excess he may have from time to time to pay.

"Where, however, he is entitled to retain the whole of the rents and profits and where as in this case his liability to make the stipulated payments to or on behalf of the mortgagor is independent of the amount of such rents and profits as he may in fact receive from the property, there can be no reason to call upon him to account. The failure to pay over the stipulated amounts to the mortgagor is the failure of a debtor and not the failure of a trustee to account satisfactorily for the property of another, and there is no reason to hold him liable to account with yearly rests or to apply the sums which he annually fails to pay in reduction of the capital of the loan."

The question whether the mortgagee is or is not liable to account has to be decided with reference to facts of each case upon a consideration of the mortgage deed (9)

The section postulates the existence of a stipulation of interest for its application. Where there is no stipulation of interest at all or a determined rate of interest, the provisions of S. 77 cannot be applicable. The benefits of provisions of S. 77 which are limited by the specific provisions of that section cannot be extended by analogy. Where there was in fact no stipulation of interest such a stipulation cannot be presumed. (10)

Where it was not stipulated in the mortgage deed that mortgagee was placed in possession over the mortgaged property in lieu of interest only and was not accountable, S. 76(g) and (h) would apply and not S. 77. The mortgagee was therefore bound to account at the time of redemption. (11)

Generally, if the parties agree that the rents and profits are to be taken in lieu of interest it is wholly unnecessary to mention the rate of interest. But it does not necessarily follow that simply because the rate of interest is mentioned, the parties must have intended that there is to be accounting between them. (12)

Illustrations.

- (1) Where the mortgage deed provided : "The mortgagee shall appropriate the surplus profits towards interest, we, the mortgagors having no claim for profits and the mortgagee having no claim for interest," the Privy Council held that the mortgage deed was "a contract" within the meaning of S 77 and that the mortgagees were not liable to account (13)
- (2) A usufructuary mortgage deed of an occupancy holding provided that the mortgagee was to take the profits in lieu of interest after payment of rent to the Zamindar. The mortgagor was to redeem on payment of the mortgage money in a lump sum. During the subsistence of the mortgage the mortgagee escaped the payment of the rent to the Zamindar for some years. The question arose as to who was to get the benefit of those sums, which should have been paid to Zamindar, but which, as a matter of fact, were not paid. It was held that the mortgagee was entitled to the benefit of such non-payment. (14)
- (3) Where a mortgage deed provided that after payment of Government revenue and malikana to a third person, all the profits should go to the mortgagee, the mortgagors having no concern with them, it was held that the mortgagee's failure to pay the malikana did not render him liable to account, as the mortgagor suffered no specific loss and that the utmost that the mortgagors could be allowed to claim was that they should be indemnified against the contingency of a valid claim for arrears of malikana being made against them after their recovery or possession (15)
- (4) The principal terms of a mortgage deed were that the mortgagees were to take possession and to receive the profits in lieu of interest. They were, however, to pay malikana to the mortgagors. The malikana was not paid. It was held that the mortgagees were liable to account and that the mortgagors were entitled to redeem on payment of the principal after deducting the malikana for the years of which it was not paid. (16)
- (5) A sub-mortgage deed recited that the sub-mortgagor would repay the mortgage money with interest at a certain rate, that the sub-mortgagee was to be in possession, and that after paying the annual Government revenue the balance was to be appropriated towards the interest. It was held that the sub-mortgagor was not entitled to ask for an account. (17)
- (6) A usufructuary mortgage deed set out the annual profits according to the rent roll and allowed the remission of establishment charges, rent, cess, etc. That left a net profit of Rs. 110, out of which Rs. 80 was to be set off against interest, and the balance against the principal. The area and the income of the property were liable to variation. It was held that the parties did not intend to have their rights and liabilities adjusted on the basis of the actual figures mentioned in the document and that, therefore, the mortgagee was not exonerated from his liability to account. (18)
- (7) The terms of a usufructuary mortgage provided that out of the annual profits the revenue should be paid by the mortgagee and the balance should be appropriated as the interest. The mortgagee failed to pay the revenue for some years, and the mortgagor was compelled to pay it. The mortgagor was held entitled to charge against the mortgagee the amount of revenue he had been compelled to pay by reason of the mortgagee's default. (19)

deed (21) This was followed by the High Court of Orissa in case arising under the Orissa Money-Lenders Act (3 of 1939). (22)

A mortgagee permitted by the deed to appropriate the usufructs for the interest on the principal is exempted from liability to account for such usufruct, but reading S. 77 with S. 9 of the Orissa Money-Lenders Act it is clear that the latter provision overrides S. 77 and exemption is no longer available. The mortgagee will have to render accounts for allowing the interest accruing from the usufructs. (23)

It was held in undermentioned case (24) that S. 77 of TP Act and S. 11 of Bihar Money-Lenders Act, 1975 are not at all repugnant to each other. They are independently applicable in their spirit and tenor to the facts of each case.

Where the mortgagee had advanced only a sum of Rs. 283/- out of the sum of Rs. 3000/- which he had undertaken to pay, he could not plead that, in view of the recitals in the deed that the rent of the property should be adjusted against the interest payable on the mortgage amount, he was not liable to render account. In such circumstances, Section 77 would not be attracted at all. (25)

2. "Defined portions of the principal."

Suppose, a mortgage deed after providing for the interest, provides that the mortgagee should be in possession, and should appropriate a fixed sum out of the rents and profits towards the principal debt. Can this be said to be a contract that the receipts of the property should be taken in lieu of interest and defined portions of the principal" within the meaning of this section? In Sheshayya v Lakshminarasimha Rao. (1) Justice Venkatasubba Rao doubted if the section applied to such a case. The reason given was that the ratio between the principal debt and the fixed sum to be appropriated does not remain constant throughout the period of the mortgage.

3. Mortgagor may make himself liable to account though mortgagee is not liable to do so.

The fact that the mortgagee is not liable to account by virtue of S. 77 does not mean that there is to be no accountability on either side. It is not inconsistent with the provisions of S. 77 that the mortgagor should impose upon himself a liability to make good certain possible deficiencies in profits, although the mortgagee is not liable to account. Priority

78. POSTPONEMENT OF PRIOR MORTGAGEE.—Where, through the fraud, misrepresentation or gross neglect of a prior mortgagee, another person has been induced to advance money on the security of the mortgaged property, the prior mortgagee shall be postponed to the subsequent mortgagee.

Synopsis

1. Scope of the section.

This section provides an exception to the general rule laid down in S. 48, (1) and provides that a prior mortgagee forfeits his priority to which he is entitled under the general rule and is postponed to a subsequent mortgagee, if, through the fraud, misrepresentation or gross neglect of the prior mortgagee, the subsequent mortgagee is induced to advance money on the security of the mortgaged property (2) The section is based on the law of estoppel (3) The principle is that a subsequent mortgagee who is, in fact, misled by the mortgagor taking advantage of the conduct of the prior mortgagee can, as against the prior mortgagee, take advantage of his conduct (4)

Mortgagor covenanting to make good loss arising from reduction of profits — Profits reduced by remission of rent — Mortgagor liable to make good deficiency)

To succeed in the plea based on S. 78 of the Act, it is necessary that it is proved and found that the subsequent mortgagee was directly, and not, remotely, induced by reason of gross neglect on part of prior mortgagee to advance money on the security of the mortgaged property (5)

The words "fraud, misrepresentation or gross neglect" in the section point to three different kinds of conduct and are disjunctive. Nor being co-extensive in their meaning one cannot be defined in terms of the other.(6)

2. "Fraud."

The Act does not contain any definition of fraud. It is, however, defined in S. 17 of the Contract Act, 1872, and this definition would be applicable for the purposes of this Act in view of S. 4

Where a subsequent mortgagee takes his mortgage at the instance of the prior mortgagee who fraudulently conceals the fact that he has a prior mortgage, the prior mortgagee will be postponed to the subsequent mortgagee.(1)

A subsequent mortgagee claiming relief against the prior mortgagee on the ground of fraud must plead fraud and must specifically set out the particulars of the fraud alleged.(2)

3. "Misrepresentation."

The definition of the word "misrepresentation" as given in S. 18 of the Contract Act, 1872, is as follows :

"Misrepresentation means and includes—

- (1) the positive assertion, in a manner not warranted by the information of the person making it, of that which is not true, though he believes it to be true;
- (2) any breach of duty which, without an intent to deceive, gains an advantage to the person committing it, or any one claiming under him, by misleading another to his prejudice or to the prejudice of any one claiming under him;
- (3) causing, however, innocently, a party to an agreement to make a mistake as to the substance of the thing which is the subject of the agreement."

It is in the above sense, that the word "misrepresentation" must be taken to have been used in this section.(1) It will cover cases which are called cases of "constructive fraud" in the Courts of Equity in England, in which there is no intention to deceive, but where the circumstances are such as to make the party, who derives a benefit from the transaction, equally answerable in effect as if he had been actuated by motives of fraud or deceit (2) In the undermentioned case.(3) a prior mortgagee endorsed an acknowledgment of full satisfaction on the back of the mortgage deed and handed over the deed to the mortgagor. The amounts paid by the mortgagor were, in fact, paid not towards the satisfaction of the mortgage in question, but towards the satisfaction of a different mortgage and this fact ought to have been within the knowledge of the prior mortgagee. It was held that the prior mortgagee had made a "misrepresentation" within the meaning of S. 18, Cl. (1) of the Contract Act; and that he must be postponed to the subsequent mortgagee, who advanced money on the security of the mortgaged property under the belief that the prior mortgage was discharged.

A prior mortgagee, on hearing that the mortgagor is again mortgaging the property for the second time, is not under a duty to inform the intending mortgagee that he has a previous mortgage. The mere circumstance, that the mortgagee, on knowing that the mortgagor was dealing with the property, kept silent is, therefore, not sufficient to postpone him to the subsequent mortgagee (4). But if with full knowledge of his own title, he stands by and allows the mortgagor to deal with the property as if it was unencumbered and misleads the subsequent mortgagee into the belief that he was taking a security which is otherwise unencumbered, he is postponed to the subsequent mortgagee (5). Thus, in the undermentioned cases, (6) a prior mortgagee attested the subsequent mortgage deed which made no mention to the prior mortgage but which on the contrary stated that the property was unencumbered. It was held that the prior mortgagee was not guilty of any intentional fraud but by his conduct lost his priority as with full knowledge of his own title he stood by and allowed the mortgagor to deal with the property as if it was unencumbered while the subsequent mortgagee acting under the belief that there was no prior encumbrance advanced money on the security of the property.

4. "Gross neglect."

The term "gross neglect" is not defined anywhere in the Transfer of Property Act. The term, as used in this section, may be said to mean a failure on the part of the prior mortgagee to take such reasonable precautions against the risk of a subsequent mortgagee being deceived as in the circumstances renders it unjust that the prior mortgagee should retain his priority (1). A definition of the term in any precise words is not practicable, nor desirable, and each case must depend upon its gross or wilful negligence, which is equivalent to an act. But it must be something which raises a possible equity against him, operating upon the principle of that which, in equity, as distinct from law, is conveniently designated by the term "estoppel," that is, the man who has conducted himself in such a manner is not entitled to deny the truth of his own representations. If it be a case of express representation, he is not entitled to deny being bound by the natural consequences of his own acts. If it be a case of positive acts, he is not entitled to refuse to abide by the consequences of his own wilful and unjustifiable neglect, if that is the nature of the case. By one or other of those means he may have armed a third person with the power of going into the world under false colours, and if it be really and truly that owing to his act, or to his improper omission, such an apparent authority and power has been vested in his neighbour, he must be bound upon equitable principles by the use made of that authority and power."

In Monindra Chandra Nandy v. Troyluckho Nath Burat (6) Jenkins, J., held that the "gross neglect," must amount to evidence of fraud. The learned Judge based his judgment in that case on English decisions. In England the question has, however, become complicated by the importance given to the legal estate as opposed to the equitable estate, and the legal mortgage always prevails against the equitable, unless the holder of the legal mortgage has done or omitted to do something which prevents him in equity from asserting his paramount rights (7). As held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Imperial Bank of India v. Rati Gyawthu and Co. (8) "the question in England is not so much one of priority in time, as of the possibility of an equitable mortgage being allowed to prevail over a legal one." (9) In England it has, therefore, been held in some of the cases that in order to deprive the legal mortgagee of his superior right he must be guilty of fraud or gross neglect amounting to an evidence of fraud (10). In later decisions, (11) however, this rule is not followed and gross negligence not amounting to an evidence of fraud is also made the ground of depriving the legal mortgagee of the protection given to him by the legal estate. But as between two equitable estates the English Courts have uniformly applied the general principle that when one of two innocent persons must suffer, it shall be he who by his own acts and conduct has caused the other to be therefore, a slight negligence on the part of the prior mortgagee is not sufficient to postpone him (16) Where the mortgagor had mortgaged the property in favour of Bank and deposited necessary documents, registration extract of sale deed and a letter informing Bank that original sale deed was lost, held, failure on part of Bank to have enquired from the contractors of mill who alleged to have lost original sale deed does not, therefore constitute gross neglect against the Bank (17)

As to what "gross negligence" generally is, see Note 30 on S 3

5. Prior mortgagee failing to obtain or parting with title deeds, whether guilty of gross neglect.

A mortgagee does not owe any duty to persons who may become puisne mortgagees of the same property, to take care that the mortgagor does not commit a fraud on them by remaining in possession of the title deeds (1) So also, having once obtained possession of the title deeds he is not under an absolute obligation to retain them at all events (2) In Northern Counties of England Fire Insurance Co. v. Whipp, (3) Fry, L.J., observed :

'The case was argued as if the legal owner of land owed a duty to all other of Her Majesty's subjects to keep his title deeds secure, as if title deeds were in the eye of the law analogous to fierce dogs of destructive elements, where from the nature of the thing, the Courts have implied a general duty of safe custody on the part of the person having their possession or control this view is, in our opinion, impliedly negatived by the whole course of decisions, and it is expressly repelled by the observations of the present Lord Chancellor in Agra Bank v. Barry (4) where he said: "It has been said in argument that investigation of title and inquiry after deeds is the duty of a purchaser or a mortgagee, and, no doubt, there are authorities (not involving any question of registry) which do use that language. But this, if it can properly be called a duty, is not a duty owing to the possessor of a latent title or security. It is merely the course which a man dealing bona fide in the proper and usual manner for his own interest, ought, by himself or his solicitor, to follow, with a view to his own title and his own security. If he does not follow that course, the omission of it may be a thing requiring to be accounted for or explained. It may be evidence, if it is not explained, of a design inconsistent with bona fide dealing, to avoid knowledge of the true state of the title. What is sufficient explanation must always be a question to be decided with reference to the nature and circumstances of each particular case. These observations appear to us conclusive on the point, and they at the same time, suggest the conclusion, that if in any case, it shall appear that a prior legal mortgagee has undertaken any duty as to the custody of the deeds towards any given person, and has neglected to perform that duty with due care, and has thereby injured the person to whom the duty was owed, there the legal estate might be postponed by reason of the negligence

with, (6) the title deeds by the prior mortgagee is not necessarily such a "gross neglect" as would postpone him to the subsequent mortgagee under this section. If the circumstances show that the prior mortgagee had made an enquiry about the title deeds at the time of taking his mortgage, that an explanation was given by the mortgagor and that the explanation was a reasonable one, the prior mortgagee cannot be charged with "gross neglect," for the failure to obtain possession of the title deeds. part with the title-deeds upon such grounds and under such circumstances as to exonerate him from any serious imputation of negligence, he cannot lose his priority, only because the mortgagor afterwards dishonestly hands them over to a second mortgagee.(9) Thus, where the mortgagee is induced by the mortgagor to part with the deeds of the specific purpose of effecting of the mutation of names in the Land Revenue Registers he cannot be charged with gross neglect under this section.(10) But a mortgagee handing over the deeds to the mortgagor for the purpose of raising money by another mortgage is guilty of gross neglect unless he takes precautions that the person advancing money on the security of the deeds knows of his mortgage (11)

Much greater care is necessary on the part of the prior mortgagee as regards the custody of the title-deeds in the case of a mortgage by deposit of title deeds than in the case of any other mortgage. The principle on which one should proceed in such a case is that if the possession of the title-deeds is an essential part of the prior mortgagee's security then if, he having got them, allows them to pass again into the possession of the mortgagor without any sufficient reason he would be postponed to the subsequent mortgagee to whom they are delivered (12)

Under S. 3, a person is deemed to have notice of a prior registered instrument from the date of its registration. Before the amendment of S. 3 in 1929 there was a conflict of opinion in the High Courts as to whether the registration of a document was of itself a notice (See Note 34 on S. 3) (It was however held, even before the amendment, that the universal system of registration existing in this country was one of the circumstances to be taken into consideration in deciding whether the prior mortgagee was guilty of gross neglect under S. 78 and that a subsequent mortgagee wilfully abstaining from the obvious course of searching in the registration office could not obtain priority over a prior registered mortgage merely because the prior mortgagee did not call for the title deeds and retain them in his control (13) A prior mortgagee registering his mortgage within the period of four months allowed to him under S 23 of the Registration Act, cannot be said to be guilty of gross neglect on the ground of delay in registration (14)

6. Prior mortgagee by deposit of title deeds not obtaining all the title deeds, whether guilty of gross neglect.

It has been seen in Note 39 on S 58, that for the creation of a mortgage by deposit of title deeds it is not necessary that all the deeds relating to the property should be deposited with the creditor, or that the documents deposited should disclose a complete title of the depositor's interest in the property, but that it is sufficient if some of the material documents of title are deposited with the creditor with the intention of creating a security. It follows that if some of the material documents of title are deposited with one creditor and some with another, valid mortgages by deposit of title deed will be created in favour of both the creditors (1). The question, in such cases, arises whether the prior mortgagee is guilty of gross neglect in not demanding all the title deeds from the mortgagor. In the undermentioned case (2) the mortgagor deposited with the creditor, the original probate of the Will by which his grandfather bequeathed his property to him. Along with the probate he also deposited a certified copy of the redemption certificate relating to the property standing in the name of his grandfather. The mortgagor told the creditor that the original had been lost. As a matter of fact the original was deposited with another creditor. It was held that the deposit of the certified copy of the redemption certificate, taken along with the probate, clearly indicated an intention to create a security on the property and a valid mortgage by deposit of title deeds was created, and that the creditor was not guilty of gross neglect within the meaning of S 78 in relying on the word of the mortgagor as to the loss of the original redemption certificate and in not taking an affidavit from him. In another case, (3) the documents relating to the sale of the property in favour of the mortgagor were deposited by him with the creditor but the sanads granted by Bombay Government to his predecessors in-interest were not deposited. It was held that the mortgagee was not guilty of gross neglect in not demanding the sanads. In a third case (4) one S held two plots of land under a registered sale deed. He also had with him the two original lease deeds under which the plots were held by his vendor. There was an endorsement on each of the lease deeds that the property was sold to S. S deposited the sale deed and the lease deed with regard to one of the plots with A and subsequently deposited the lease deed with regard to the other plot with B. It was held that a mortgage by deposit of title deeds on the whole of the property was created in favour of A and the mere fact that he did not insist on obtaining the lease deed subsequently deposited with B did not amount to gross neglect under this section so as to postpone him to B as the lease deed on the face of it must clearly have shown the existence of the sale deed.

7. Laches on the part of the prior mortgagee in instituting his suit, whether amounts to gross neglect.

A delay in filing a suit on the mortgage cannot be a gross neglect within the meaning of this section, inasmuch as a person is entitled under the law to file a suit at any time within limitation. In the undermentioned case(1) the Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court observed as follows

"In matters in which the Courts have a discretion either as regards the granting of relief or as regards the form of relief to be granted, any laches on the part of the plaintiff may and should be taken into account. But in matters which are excluded from the discretion of the Courts the statutory rights of the plaintiff can only be defeated on proof of acquiescence or other conduct which would amount to an estoppel. In the present case no such conduct is even alleged, much less is there any proof of such gross neglect on the part of the plaintiff as would justify his mortgage being postponed to the mortgages held by the defendant-respondents."

8. "Fraud, misrepresentation or gross neglect" must be the proximate cause of the inducement.

In order to invite the application of this section, the fraud, misrepresentation or gross neglect on the part of the prior mortgagee must be the proximate cause of the inducement for the advancement of money by the subsequent mortgagee. If it is not the proximate cause of the inducement but is only one of the various contributory factors that led the subsequent mortgagee to advance the money, the section has no application (1). Thus, where the prior mortgagee is guilty of gross neglect, but the subsequent mortgagee is also guilty of contributory negligence, the prior mortgagee cannot be postponed to the subsequent mortgagee under this section (2).

9. Subsequent mortgagee having notice of the prior mortgage cannot obtain priority over the prior mortgagee.

The section does not apply if the subsequent mortgagee has notice of the prior mortgage at the time of taking his mortgage(1), for if he has such notice, it cannot be said that he was induced to advance money on the security of the mortgaged property through fraud, misrepresentation or gross neglect of the prior mortgagee. In places where one knows that mortgages by deposit of title deeds are legal and usual, abstention from injury as to whether the title deeds were already pledged amounts to constructive notice, under S. 3, of the prior mortgage (2) It is however in favour of a person in possession of the title deeds that the doctrine of constructive notice can be invoked on the ground of the omission of the other party to call for them and not in favour of a person who has not got been them. (3)

It has been held in a Bombay case, (4) that where the prior mortgagee induces the subsequent mortgagee to advance money by false representations, he cannot avoid the consequences resulting from his conduct on the ground of constructive notice on the part of the subsequent mortgagee; because in such a case it is not a sufficient answer for him to say: "If you had used due diligence you would have found out that my statement was untrue. You had the means afforded you of discovering the falsity and did not choose to avail yourself of them." See also the undermentioned case (5) to a similar effect.

10. The section applies to mortgagees.

The section refers to a "prior mortgagee" and a "subsequent mortgagee." It is, therefore, clear that the section will not apply where both the prior and the subsequent transferees are not mortgagees. (1) However, the rule of estoppel on which the section is based is of a wider application and a prior transferee inducing another person to take the transfer of the property will be precluded from setting up his rights under the prior transfer to the prejudice of the subsequent transferee (2) Thus where through the gross neglect of a prior mortgagee, a person is induced to purchase the mortgaged property as unencumbered, the prior mortgagee is precluded from setting up his rights under the mortgage as against the purchaser and the purchaser obtains absolute title to the property (3)

The principle underlying S 78 also applies to sales and a prior mortgagee guilty of fraud will be postponed after subsequent vendee.(4)

If the fraud vitiates a prior mortgage same principle will apply if the subsequent sale is effected.(5)

10-A. Prior mortgagee losing priority — Mortgagor's liability to him is not affected.

A question of priority can only arise as between successive mortgages. The fact that a mortgagee loses, for some reason, his priority as against a subsequent mortgagee cannot affect him prejudicially as against the mortgagor.

Illustration

A mortgages X and Y to B and then X alone to C. C brings a suit on his mortgage impleading B as a party to the suit. B fails to plead his priority and the property X is held by the Court to be subject to a prior claim in favour of C. B's failure to raise the point will preclude him, on the principle of constructive res judicata, from raising the question of his priority in respect of X in a subsequent suit. But this will not affect his position in regard to Y vis-a-vis the mortgagor. As regards the mortgagor and all persons standing in his shoes, B will be entitled to enforce his debt and have it paid to the full term y.(1)

One A deposited title-deeds of certain lands with Bank B in 1910 as security for advances made to him by Bank B from time to time, but no maximum was expressed to be secured by the mortgage by deposit of title deeds. In 1914 A executed a registered mortgage on the same property in favour of C. C, however, did not inquire about the title deeds when he took his mortgage. After the mortgage in favour of C, B made further advances to A, but did not make any search in the registration office to see whether the property was mortgaged in the interval to anybody else. The question for determination was whether Bank B could claim priority in respect of the advances made to A after the execution of the registered mortgage in favour of C. It was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council,(1) that S 78 had no application to the case, as the further advances

1. English and Indian law of tacking compared.

Before the passing of the English Law of Property Act in the year 1925 the English law as to tacking was as follows :(1)

(1) The mortgagee of a legal estate could tack on to his mortgage any further advances made by him provided he had no notice of the other mortgages when he made the advance.

(2) A subsequent equitable mortgagee could acquire the legal estate of the prior mortgagee and tack on his equitable mortgage to the legal mortgage provided that, at the time of advancing money on his equitable mortgage, he had no notice of the other mortgages.

Under the English Law of Property Act, 1925 (15 Geo v Ch 20 S 94) a prior mortgagee whether legal or equitable, can, by tacking, gain priority over subsequent mortgages in respect of further advances only—

- (1) if an arrangement has been made to that effect with the subsequent mortgages; or
- (2) if he had no notice of the subsequent mortgages at the time when he made the further advance; or
- (3) if he is bound under the terms of the mortgage to make further advances whether he has notice or not of the subsequent mortgages.

The right of a subsequent encumbrancer to tack on his own mortgage to a prior mortgage by acquiring the legal estate of the prior mortgagee and thus to gain priority over the intermediate incumbrances, has been abolished.⁽²⁾

In this country, it was held as early as the year 1869, that the principle of the English law of mortgage enabling a mortgagee to tack on to his mortgage any further liability of the mortgagor to him was not recognised in India.⁽³⁾ When the Transfer of Property Act was passed in the year 1882 S 80 (now S 93) expressly provided that there shall be no tacking by a subsequent mortgagee paying off a prior mortgage. As to the tacking of further advances made by a prior mortgagee the same section also provided that there shall be no such tacking except in the case specified in this section, namely, where the prior mortgage fixes a maximum to be specified thereby and the subsequent mortgagee advances money with notice of the prior mortgage.

It will thus be seen that while under the English law a further advance by a prior mortgagee can, in certain circumstances, be tacked on to the mortgage independently of any question whether the prior mortgage expresses a maximum to be advanced or whether the subsequent mortgagee has notice of the terms of the prior mortgage, a further advance by a prior mortgagee cannot under this Act, be tacked on to the mortgage, unless the mortgage expresses a maximum to be advanced and unless the subsequent mortgagee had, at the time of his mortgage notice of the prior mortgage.

2. Scope of the section.

It is a general principle of law that where the equities are equal the first in time shall prevail qui prior est tempore, potior est jure (1) This rule has been enacted in S 48 with reference to transfer of property in general terms. It provides that where a person purports to create by transfer, at different times, rights in or over the same immovable property and such rights cannot all exist or be exercised to their full extent together, each later created right shall in the absence of a special contract or reservation binding the earlier transferee, be subject to the rights previously created. The same general rule is recognised by S 93 which provides negatively that a mortgagee making a subsequent advance to the mortgagor whether with or without notice of an intermediate mortgage shall not thereby acquire any priority in respect of his security for such subsequent advance. But this is made subject to the rule laid down in this section (2) This section is thus an exception to the general rule stated above⁽³⁾ and enables a prior mortgagee to tack on to his mortgage a further advance made by him and thus gain priority over an intermediate incumbrance —

- (1) if the prior mortgage is one made to secure future advance, the performance of an engagement or the balance of a running account and expresses the maximum to be secured thereby, and
- (2) if the subsequent incumbrancer has notice of the prior mortgage.(4)

The section has been based on the dissenting judgment of Lord Cranworth in Hopkinson v Rolt,(5) where his Lordship observed as follows :

"Mortgages are but contracts, and when once the rights of parties under them are defined and understood, it is impossible to say that any rule regulating their priority is unjust. If the law is once laid down and understood, that a person advancing money on a second mortgage, with notice of a prior mortgage covering future as well as present debts, will be postponed to the first mortgagee, to the whole extent covered or capable of being covered by the prior security, he has nothing to complain of. He is aware, when he advances his money, of the imperfect nature of his security and acts at his peril."

3. "To secure future advances."

Section 58, Cl (a) provides that a mortgage may be made to secure a loan advanced or to be advanced or an existing or future debt. Where a future advance is made it attaches itself, as it were, to the mortgage so as to put it in the same position as if it had been made when the mortgage was originally created.(1)

In a mortgage made to secure future advances, the consideration is expressly agreed to be paid, either in whole or in part in future. Such a mortgage is essentially different from the one where the consideration though payable immediately is in fact paid in future. The words "future advances" are general and will include all advances made in pursuance of the mortgage contract at any time. It is not necessary that the parties should specify the time when the advances are to be made at the time of the mortgage.

4. "The performance of an engagement."

Section 58, Cl. (a) provides that a mortgage can be made for the purpose of securing the "performance of an engagement which may give rise to a pecuniary liability"

A partition deed provided that the common family debts should be discharged by the respective sharers to whom they fell as per schedule of the deed, and that if any sharer failed to discharge the debts falling to his share, his properties should be liable for such debts and for the losses that might happen to the family. It was held that the provision was a mortgage for securing the performance of an engagement within the meaning of this section.(1)

4-A. Balance of a running account.

It will be noticed that the section applies also to a mortgage to secure the balance of a running account. It will depend on the construction of the mortgage bond and the circumstances in each case whether the mortgage is to secure the balance due on the date of the mortgage or the balance that may be found due from time to time up to a certain limit. In the undermentioned case,(1) a mortgage was executed in respect of an overdraft account with a bank and the amount secured was expressed to be Rs. 15,000. At the date of the mortgage, the amount due from the mortgagor was about Rs. 7,500. The question arose in the case whether the mortgage security would enure in respect of sums overdrawn after the date on which the balance due from the mortgagor exceeded Rs. 15,000. The contention on behalf of the mortgagor was that the security would not apply to such sums and that the payments made by him after the above date must be adjusted towards the balance due on that date, and if such balance was found to have been entirely discharged in this manner, the bank would not be entitled to a mortgage decree in regard to the surplus amount but only to a personal decree. On construing the mortgage deed and taking into consideration the conduct of the parties and the circumstances of the case, it was held that this contention was not tenable and that the mortgage would be good in respect of a balance of Rs. 15,000 whenever the balance might be struck, that the mortgage was intended to be a continuing security for such balance and not merely for the amount that was due from the mortgagor at the date of the mortgage but that the bank was not entitled to a mortgage decree for any amount in excess of Rs. 15,000.

5. "Expresses the maximum to be secured thereby."

The section has no application unless the prior mortgage expresses a maximum amount up to which the advances are to be made. (1) In The Imperial Bank v U Rai Gyaaw Thu and Co., (2) it was observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council :

"The words of S. 79 mean that the mortgage there referred to must express a maximum. The words 'to secure further advances,' etc. denominate the different classes of mortgages, but to bring them under S. 79 they must have the common feature of a maximum expressed."

It is not, however, necessary that a definite figure should be expressly mentioned as the maximum to be secured by the mortgage. It is sufficient if the maximum is expressed in such terms that the definite figure can be determined when required. A took a lease from B for a period of nine years on 14th June, 1900 for a certain annual rental. As security for the payment of the annual rent and interest on defaulted instalments A mortgaged his immovable property to B on the same date. Subsequently, A mortgaged the same property to C on 12th October, 1900. In a suit brought by B on his mortgage the question for determination was whether the mortgage to him expressed the maximum to be secured thereby within the meaning of this section. It was held that the aggregate rent payable under the lease could be determined by a simple arithmetical calculation and that on the principle that "that is certain which can be made certain" the mortgage did express the maximum to be secured by it. (3) Where the bank extends overdraft facility to a party up to Rs. 2,50,000/- on security of present and future goods and informs the Tax Authorities that the maximum limit applicable will be Rs. 3,50,000/- the Bank is not liable for damages for not honouring the cheques drawn in excess of Rs. 2,50,000/- because the security was only in respect of future advances which might or might not be made by the Bank. (4) In the undermentioned case (5) a partition deed between brothers, A and B, provided as follows :

"The common family debts should be discharged by the respective sharers to whom they fell as per schedule of the document, and that, if any sharer failed to discharge accordingly, such sharer's properties should be liable for such debts and for the losses that might happen to the family."

It was held that the document read with the schedule specified the maximum secured by the

6. "In respect of all advances."

Section 93 provides that "except in the case provided for by S. 79, no mortgagee making a subsequent advance to the mortgagor . . . shall thereby acquire any priority in respect of his security for such subsequent advance." In The Imperial Bank of India v U Rai Gyan Thu and Co., (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the word "subsequent" in that section, must, from the context, be taken to mean subsequent to the intermediate mortgage and that an advance when made after another mortgage is granted becomes a "subsequent advance." The words "in respect of all advances" in this section must be construed in view of S. 93 and the word "advance" must be understood as meaning a "subsequent advance" as explained above. It has accordingly been held that this section has been enacted with a view to protect a prior mortgage by giving him priority over a subsequent mortgage with respect to advances made by him after the subsequent mortgage and that it has no application where no advances are made by the prior mortgagee after the creation of the subsequent mortgage (2) Where, therefore, a mortgagee under a mortgage to secure future advances, sues merely in respect of advances made previous to a subsequent mortgage, this section will have no application to the case; (3) the matter would be governed by the general rule of priority enacted in S. 48 and the plaintiff would be entitled to recover the amount so advanced in priority to the subsequent mortgagee. A made on 27-3-1925 a mortgage, by deposit of title deeds, with B to secure advances "up to the limit of Rs. 1,25,000 together with interest." On 20-12-1926, A made a subsequent mortgage in favour of C. B sued on his mortgage for the advances made by him before 20-12-1926 amounting to Rupees 1,25,000 and interest thereon. It was held that S. 79 had no application as no advances were made after the subsequent mortgage and that B was entitled to recover as claimed not only the principal but also the interest (4)

See also the undermentioned case. (5)

7. "Not exceeding the maximum."

Under this section, the subsequent mortgage will be postponed to the prior mortgage only in respect of advances or debits not exceeding the maximum expressed by the prior mortgage (1) If the advances made by the prior mortgagee after the subsequent mortgage exceed the maximum expressed by the prior mortgage the advances exceeding the maximum will not have priority over the subsequent mortgage.

8. Notice.

Unlike the English law, the question whether the prior mortgagee has or has not notice of the subsequent mortgage when he makes the further advance is immaterial under this section. The material question is whether the subsequent mortgagee has notice of the prior mortgage at the date of the subsequent mortgage.

Section 3 provides that "a person is said to have notice of a fact when he actually knows that fact or when, but for wilful abstention from an inquiry or search which he ought to have made or gross negligence, he would have known it." It was held by the Privy Council in the undermentioned case(1) that if a mortgagee taking a mortgage in a place where he knows that mortgages by deposit of title deeds are legal and usual, does not ascertain whether the title deeds were already pledged, his failure to so ascertain is such abstention from an inquiry which he ought to have made or such negligence as to infer notice in terms of S. 3.

Where a mortgage for future advances was executed on 28-9-1930 and registered on 11-10-1930, and a subsequent mortgage was executed on 12-10-1930 and registered the same day it was held that it could not be said except from evidence aliunde, that the subsequent mortgagee could have, when the mortgagor negotiated for the loan, discovered by the most diligent search in the Registrar's office, the fact of the prior mortgage and cannot, therefore, be said to have had notice(2). The decision was before the amendment of S. 3 by the addition of the Explanation thereto which provides that a person acquiring any interest in property will be deemed to have notice of any prior transaction with reference to that property which is required by law to be registered from the date of the registration. It is conceived that the decision would be different under the present law.

9. Charge.

In Sesha Iyer v. Srinivasa(1) the High Court of Madras applied this section to the case of a charge created by a partition deed executed between brothers. See Notes on S. 100.

10. Further advance made after sale of equity of redemption.

This section deals only with the postponement of the rights of a subsequent mortgagee in respect of advances made after the subsequent mortgage but in pursuance of a maximum fixed in the prior mortgage. It has no application of any kind where a mortgagee advances amounts to the mortgagor after the equity of redemption has passed into the hands of a purchaser of the mortgagor's right. Thus, if A is the mortgagee and B the mortgagor and B himself sells away his equity of redemption, or his equity of redemption if sold in Court auction to C and then A makes a further advance to B, he cannot get any priority or other right in respect of advance as against C.(1) unless the conduct of C were such as to operate as an estoppel(2).

Marshalling and Contribution

[81. MARSHALLING SECURITIES.— If the owner of two or more properties mortgages them to one person and then mortgages one or more of the properties to another person, the subsequent mortgagee is, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, entitled to have the prior mortgage debt satisfied out of the property or properties not mortgaged to him, so far as the same will extend, but not so as to prejudice the rights of the prior mortgagee or of any other person who has for consideration acquired an interest in any of the properties.]

[A] Section 81 was substituted for the original section by Section 42 of the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, 1929 (20 of 1929).

1. Doctrine of marshalling.

See Notes 1 and 2 on S. 56. See also the case noted below(1).

2. Against whom right of marshalling is available.

As has been seen in Note 1 on S. 56, a right of marshalling is a right which a person who has one fund out of which to satisfy his demands has to compel the person who has that fund and

1. AIR 1949 Mad 384 (385) (Maintenance decree charging items 1 to 42 belonging to D — P purchasing some of these items from D — Indemnity clause in sale deed charging certain other items viz. 30, 31, 32 and 34 for amount of loss that might accrue to P if the items sold to him were sold in execution of maintenance decree — P paying a certain amount to avert such sale and then suing for contribution from owners of other items — The owners of other items are entitled, 'on the principle of marshalling contained in S. 81 to insist' that he must first proceed against items 30, 31, 32 and 34 which are given as security and then only proceed against the other items for the balance.)

another out of which to satisfy his demands, to resort to the other fund first. In other words, a right of marshalling by a subsequent incumbrancer is enforceable not only against the mortgagor but also against the prior incumbrancer. In the undermentioned case(1) it was observed by Sreenivasa Iyengar, J., that the right of the subsequent mortgagee under this section is enforceable only against the mortgagor and not against the mortgagee. It is submitted that this view is against the very principle underlying the doctrine of marshalling and is not correct.

But the right is not enforceable against any person other than the mortgagor and the prior mortgagee(2). Suppose x and y are mortgaged to A and x is subsequently mortgaged to B and y is mortgaged or sold to C for valuable consideration. B has no equity to throw the whole of A's mortgage on C's estate and so destroy C's security(3). If B were to compel A to proceed against y first, it would prejudice C, and this cannot be allowed under this section: for the right of marshalling cannot be exercised so as to prejudice the rights of any person who has for consideration acquired any interest in any of the properties. It has consequently been held in the undermentioned case(4) that as between the transferees of the different items of the mortgaged properties there is no right of marshalling. A contrary view has been expressed, however, by the Rangoon High Court in the case noted below(5), that where M mortgages first, properties x and y to R, then sells x to K and subsequently mortgages y to L, L can exercise the right of marshalling so as to compel R to proceed against K's property first. It is submitted that this view is not correct. Their Lordships observed that this course would not prejudice the mortgagee, but they have failed to note that such a course would prejudice a person (K) who has for consideration acquired an interest in the properties, and could not be allowed under the terms of the section.

See also Note 14 on S. 56.

2A. Time for making application for marshalling of assets.

A puisne mortgagee who has not made an application for marshalling of assets at the time of preliminary decree in the suit by the first mortgagee can make such an application at the time when the first mortgagee proceeds to apply for final decree(1).

3. Marshalling distinguished from equitable rule of apportionment.

It has been seen in Note 2 that the right of marshalling cannot be exercised by any person other than the mortgagor and the prior mortgagee. It is not available against another mortgagee of the other property. In such a case, however, the debt is to be apportioned according to the value of the two properties(1). It has been held in the undermentioned case(2) that this is in accordance with the equitable rule of rateable apportionment, which prevails in England, and which is applicable in the country as being in accordance with justice, equity and good conscience. The right given by that rule is to have the equity of redemption of two mortgaged properties jointly mortgaged to A, rateably apportioned as between pusine mortgagees. This right according to the said decision, is not strictly one of contribution, inasmuch as a right of contribution is a right given to a mortgagor and the right of rateable apportionment is a right of one subsequent mortgagee of one item of certain mortgaged properties against a subsequent mortgagee of another item of such properties.

4. "Two or more properties."

See Note 5 on section 56.

5. "Mortgages them to one person."

A "mortgage" is the transfer of an interest in specific immovable property(1). This section, therefore, applies only to mortgages of immovable property and not to hypothecation of movable property(2). The section cannot also apply to case where the prior mortgage is of both immovable and movable properties(3). The reason is that the doctrine of marshalling can be applied only to "two funds standing upon an equal footing"(4) and it cannot be said that a security of movable property is on the same footing as a security of immovable property, inasmuch as the rights and liabilities of a mortgagee of immovable property are not the same as those of a person to whom movable properties have been hypothecated(5).

See also Note 6 on section 56.

6. "Then mortgages one or more of the properties to another person."

The doctrine of marshalling applies only when the contending creditors are creditors of the same person. When A and B execute a mortgage of properties X and Y in favour of C and then A alone executes a mortgage of property Y in favour of D, the doctrine of marshalling cannot be applied and D cannot compel C to proceed first against property X(1). As observed by the Special Committee in their Report "It is well established that in order that the doctrine of "marshalling" can be applied there must be two funds or securities both originally the property of the same owner and the debts must be the debts of the same person."

Again, the person claiming the right under this section must be a subsequent mortgagee(2). An attaching creditor(3) or a lessee(4) of the property cannot claim any right of marshalling. See also S. 56, Note 7.

7. "Subsequent mortgagee."

The old section gave a right of marshalling only to a second mortgagee and not to mortgagees subsequent to the second mortgagee. The present section is wider in that it applies to all subsequent mortgagees.

A subsequent mortgagee does not cease to be so, for the purposes of this section by reason merely of the fact that he purchases the equity of redemption in the property mortgaged to him(1). In the undermentioned case(2), a second mortgagee of properties A and B which were included along with properties C and D in a prior mortgage purchased A and B, in execution of the decree obtained by him on his mortgage. Later on he obtained, by purchase, the interest of the first mortgagee and obtained a decree on the first mortgage. He then claimed to sell the items C and D first for the realisation of the mortgage-money. It was held that he was entitled to do so. The learned Judge observed :

"The plaintiff, as a subsequent mortgagee before his purchase of the prior mortgage bond, was entitled to compel the sale of the properties not included in the subsequent mortgage before the sale of the mortgaged properties included in the second mortgage and when he purchase the rights of the prior mortgagee, he does not lose his rights to have the properties which he purchased in execution of the second mortgage decree excluded from the sale in execution of the first mortgage in the first instance. This is in accordance with the terms of S. 81 of the Transfer of Property Act. It must be so since the plaintiff has acquired the rights of prior mortgagee."

8. Right is available to purchaser in execution of decree on second mortgage.

In Inderdewan Pershad v. Govind Lall Chawdhry (1) it was held by the Calcutta High Court that a purchaser at a sale in execution of the second mortgage, purchases not only the right of the mortgagor, but all the rights of the mortgagee acquired up to the sale, including the right of marshalling which the second mortgagee might have had, and that such purchaser could exercise the right of marshalling under this section. This view has been followed in the undermentioned cases(2), the Patna High Court observing(3) that the right of marshalling continues so long as the properties mortgaged to the second mortgagee are available to be sold in execution of a prior mortgage 10. "So far as the same will extend".

X had a mortgage over properties a, b and c. The mortgagor subsequently executed a second mortgage over property a. X sued on his mortgage, obtained a decree and in satisfaction of the decree sold properties b and c and for balance still remaining due claimed to proceed against property a. It was held that the second mortgagee had no defence to the claim based on the doctrine of marshalling(1). The mortgagee X had recovered his debt in the first instance from properties b and c so far as the same extended, and property a was clearly liable for the balance due. See also the undermentioned case(2).

11. "But not so as to prejudice the rights of the prior mortgagee".

For a full discussion, see Note 10 on Section 56.

Where the prior mortgagee of items a, b and c could not include in his suit on the mortgage, item c owing to the conduct of the subsequent mortgagee of a and b, and, therefore, proceeded to enforce his mortgage only against a and b, it was held that the puisne mortgagee could not be allowed to claim as against the prior mortgagee that the latter should first proceed against c(1).

Where the mortgaged properties consisted of over two hundred items almost all of which were subject to incumbrances or alienations and many of which were complicated by the existence of rights of compensation for improvements in the alienees, it was held in the undermentioned case(2) that it would almost be impossible to try and work out the equities of all the incumbrancers and alienees in such circumstances by arranging the order of sale without prejudice to the first mortgagee and that, therefore, the puisne incumbrancers should be directed to work out their own rights by way of suits for contribution.

Where a puisne incumbrancer has taken the mortgage expressly on condition of discharging a prior mortgage and has failed to do so, it has been held, he cannot invoke S. 81, as to do so would be to the manifest prejudice of the prior mortgagee(3).

claim the right of marshalling given by that section.(1) This condition as to notice was based on the observations of Lord Hardwicke, in Lanov v. Athol (Duke and Duchess of Athol) (2) decided in the year 1742 to the following effect :

"Suppose a person, who has two real estates mortgages both to one person, and afterwards only one estate to a second mortgagee, who had no notice of the first: the Court, in order to relieve the second mortgagee, have directed the first to take his satisfaction out of that estate only which is not in mortgage to the second mortgagee, etc."

Latter English decisions, however, held that his condition was unnecessary(3). In cases not governed by this Act it was also held in this country, following the English law that the application of the doctrine did not depend upon any question of notice(4).

The section has now been amended by omitting the condition as to notice and bringing it in line with the English law.

82. CONTRIBUTION TO MORTGAGE-DEBT.— "[Where property subject to a mortgage belongs to two or more persons having distinct and separate rights of ownership therein, the different shares in or parts of such property owned by such persons are, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, liable to contribute rateably to the debt secured by the mortgage, and, for the purpose of determining the rate at which each such share or part shall contribute, the value thereof shall be deemed to be its value at the date of the mortgage after deduction of the amount of any other mortgage or charge to which it may have been subject on that date]

Where, of two properties belonging to the same owner, one is mortgaged to secure one debt and then both are mortgaged to secure another debt, and the former debt is paid out of the former property, each property is, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, liable to contribute rateably to the latter debt after deducting the amount of the former debt from the value of the property out of which it has been paid.

Nothing in this section applies to a property liable under section 81 to the claim of the "[subsequent] mortgage.

1. Legislative changes.

The following changes were made in the section by S. 43 of the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, 20 of 1929.

(1) The present first paragraph was substituted for the old first paragraph which ran as follows :

"Where several properties, whether of one or several owners, are mortgaged to secure one debt, such properties are in the absence of a contract to the contrary, liable to contribute rateably to the debt secured by the mortgage, after deducting from the value of each property the amount of any other incumbrance to which it is subject at the date of the mortgage."

(2) In the last paragraph of the section the word "subsequent" was substituted for the word "second" before the word "mortgagee." See Note 7 on S. 81.

The amendment is not, however, retrospective in its effect and, therefore, does not govern the cases arising before the amendment(1)

2. Scope of the section.

The section is based upon what is known as the doctrine of contribution in English law. As stated in Fisher on Mortgages, that doctrine and the doctrine of marshalling rest upon the principle that a fund which is equally liable with another to pay the debt, shall not escape because the creditor has been paid out of that other fund alone(1). The doctrine of contribution has been stated by Mr Justice Story as resting upon the principle enunciated by the maxim qui sentit commodum, sentire debet et onus (he who receives the advantage ought to suffer the burden). He observes

"The claim certainly has its foundation in the clearest principles of natural justice: for as all are equally bound and are equally relieved, it seems but just that in such a case all should contribute in proportion towards a benefit obtained by all upon the maxim 'qui sentit commodum, sentire debet et onus'. And the doctrine has an equal foundation in mora—since no one ought to profit by another man's loss where he himself has incurred a like responsibility. Any other rule would put it in the power of the creditor to select his victim and, upon motives or mere caprice or favouritism, to make, a common burden a most gross personal oppression. It would be against equity for the creditor to exact or receive payment from one and to permit, or by his conduct to cause, the other debtors to be exempt from payment. And the creditor is always bound in conscience, although he is seldom bound by contract, as far as he is able, to put the party paying the debt upon the same footing with those who are equally bound. It can be no matter of surprise, therefore, to find, that Courts of Equity at a very early period adopted and acted upon this salutary doctrine, as equally well founded in equity and morality. The ground of relief does not, therefore, stand upon any notion of mutual contract, express or implied, between the sureties to indemnify each other in proportion (as has sometimes been argued), but it arises from principles of equity, independent of contract (2).

This principle of law applies in many situations as between co-tenants and shares in common properties like partners, co-owners and coparceners. The basis of contribution in all such cases is not only the common ownership of property but also a common liability which was discharged by one(3).

Where part of the consideration of a sale was left with the vendee for redemption of mortgage but payment of the whole mortgage money was made by one of the co-vendees an equitable charge accrued against the property in favour of the vendee who discharged the mortgage(4).

Thus, where there are several joint debtors in respect of a common liability and one of them alone has discharged that liability the person who has discharged it has a right, on this principle, to recover, from his co-obligors the excess he has paid over his share of the liability(5). The other coobligors also are, under the same principle, liable to contribute only in proportion to their shares of the common debt or obligation, from which follows a necessary corollary that no contribution can be claimed against a person who has paid more than his share of the liability(6). The rule of contribution thus works out the equities between the persons or the properties which are subject to a common obligation by making each person or property contribute rateably towards the liability(7). The rule is not peculiar to the law of mortgages. Whenever estates are subject to a common demand and that demand has been satisfied by the person interested in one of them, he has, under this rule, a right to call upon the other owners to contribute(8).

The liability for rateable contribution of the alienees of the properties mortgaged in the first instance and sold subsequently to different persons could be resisted only under Section 82, T P Act. In absence of a contract between the contributories it is not open to the Court on any equitable ground to rateably distribute the obligation for the mortgage debt amongst the parties without reference to Section 82(9).

Thus, the rule has been applied where one of the several co-sharers satisfies a demand for Government assessment on their land(10) or, where the property belonging to several owners is subject to a common charge for maintenance and that charge is satisfied by one of them(11).

Section 82 is only a codification of the general law of contribution in regard to mortgage debts. Principles can be applied when cases of contribution under general law are considered(12).

This section deals with the rule of contribution in relation to mortgages. Even before the enactment of the section, the rule of contribution applied by Courts of Equity in England, was applied by the Courts in India as a rule of justice, equity and good conscience (13) In this sense the section lays down no new principle of law(14) but only gives a statutory effect to the well-known principles referred to above(15).

The first part of the section deals with the case of a mortgage over the property owned by two or more persons in distinct and separate rights. The second part deals with a case where, out of two separate properties belonging to the same owner, one is mortgaged to secure one debt and subsequently both are mortgaged to secure another debt. The property which is subject to both the debts is held liable to contribute rateably to the second debt only after deducting the amount of the former debt from the value of the property out of which it has been paid. In both cases the right of contribution is available only against persons who stand in the position of co-mortgagors or their successors-in-interest or against the same property subject to two different mortgages (16). The last paragraph saves the right of marshalling secured to subsequent mortgagees by S 81, from the operation of this rule.

In order that the rule of contribution enacted by the first paragraph of this section may apply it is essential that—

(1) there is property in which two or more persons had distinct and specific rights of ownership (see Note 3),

(2) such property is subject to a mortgage (see Note 4), and

(3) there is no contract to the contrary (see Note 7).

When all these three circumstances are present, the section lays down that all the different shares in, or the parts of the property mortgaged, are liable to contribute rateably to the debt secured by the mortgage. These are the statutory conditions which give rise to a claim for contribution and when a case is fully covered by these conditions, the Courts cannot introduce any extraneous equitable principles to modify the liability to contribute imposed by this section (17). Similarly, the fact that the mortgage-debt has passed into a decree does not prevent the application of the rule in the section and, therefore, where a mortgagee sells a portion of the mortgaged property in execution of a decree for sale obtained on his mortgage and the owner thereof sets aside the sale by depositing the decretal amount together with the amount of necessary compensation to the auction-purchaser under O 21, R 89, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, such owner can claim contribution under this section in respect of the mortgage amount he has paid though not for the amount of compensation to be paid to the auction-purchaser (18).

The joint and several liability of each of the co-judgment-debtors is quite different from their liability inter se (i.e. mutual liability). Where consequent on the mortgage decree being passed against two judgment-debtors one of them was held to be 'debtor' within the meaning of the Bombay Debtors' Relief Act and his liability was scaled down and the decree holder recovered entire decretal dues from the other judgment-debtor the joint and several liability of the judgment-debtors would be discharged by the payment of the amount as scaled down, but his liability for contribution could not be affected merely by the discharge of the joint and several liability (19).

Both S 43, Contract Act and this section deal with the question of contribution. But S 43 of the Contract Act deals with contract generally while this section applies to mortgages. Where the right to contribution arises out of a mortgage this section must exclude S 43, Contract Act(20).

Though the Act is not extended to the Punjab, the general principles underlying the section are applied to cases arising in that State(21).

It has been held that the principle underlying this section can be applied in cases under the U.P. Encumbered Estates Act (XXV of 1934), as there is no specific provision in that Act(22)

In a suit for recovery of the contribution on the charge of the mortgaged properties it was held that the limitation period started on the date of payment of money(23)

3. "Property belongs to two or more persons having distinct and separate rights of ownership therein."

The rule of contribution as enunciated in this section before it was amended in 1929, referred only to cases where "several properties, whether of one or several owners" were mortgaged to secure one debt. In Rajah of Vizianagaram v Rajah Setrucherla(1) the question was raised but not decided, whether this wording referred to cases of mortgages of separate plots respectively owned by separate owners in severalty or included also cases of mortgages of distinct shares in one property, severally owned by two or more co-owners as tenants-in-common with unity of possession. It was, however, observed that though the wording could not directly apply to the case of co-owners of undivided several shares with unity of possession, the principle of the section would govern the case. Similarly, some cases applied this section as it stood before the amendment, to cases where one property originally was subsequently held by several owners in distinct and separate shares either by reason of the death of the mortgagor(2), or by reason of partition(3) or by transfer of shares in the mortgaged property(4). The Special Committee was, therefore, of the opinion that this section ought to cover a case, not only where several properties were mortgaged but also where the mortgaged property was subsequently sub-divided into distinct and separate portions, and the liability of the co-sharers was distinct and several, and not joint(5). The first paragraph of the section was, therefore, redrafted accordingly. The section now covers all cases, whether of a mortgage of several properties owned by several owners or of one property the title to which becomes severed after the mortgage(6).

Where the property which is the subject-matter of the mortgage belongs exclusively to one of the joint debtors, his property alone is liable for the payment of the entire debt and until a personal decree under O 34, R. 6, Civil P.C. is obtained by the mortgagee the question of the liability of the other joint debtor for the payment of the debt will not arise(7).

4. Claim for contribution presupposes a common and equal liability.

As seen in Note 2, the doctrine of contribution rests on the principle that a fund which is equally liable with another to pay the debt shall not escape because the creditor has been paid out of that other fund alone. The doctrine, therefore, assumes that two estates A and B comprised in the same security are both equally liable to pay the debt. Thus, there are two conditions to be satisfied before a claim for contribution can be sustained—

(A) There must be a common liability to pay on all the properties, and

(B) Such liability must be equal in degree in respect of each property.

(A) There must be a common liability.

The old section spoke of contribution where "several properties" were mortgaged to secure "one" debt. Under the present section contribution arises where "property subject to a mortgage" belongs to two or more persons having distinct and separate rights of ownership therein. Such portions or shares are, under this section, liable to contribute rateably towards "the debt secured by the mortgage." Thus, the present section also presupposes the existence of a common liability in the form of the mortgage-debt equally secured by all the properties(1). It is, therefore, necessary to prove that such a common liability exists in respect of the property from which contribution is claimed(2) and consequently, if no such common liability exists, there can be no contribution(3).

(B) The liability must be equal.

Even if there exists a common liability to pay, contribution cannot be claimed unless each of the properties is liable in equal degree to pay the common liability(4). Thus where a mortgagor of properties X and Y transfers, by way of a lease or a mortgage, property X and retains property Y, the latter is primarily liable to discharge mortgage-debt on both X and Y. Hence, if the mortgagor himself or his personal representative pays the entire debt, there can be no contribution from X(5). On the other hand, if the mortgagee enforces his debt against the property X, the transferee is entitled to be exonerated at the expense of property Y(6). In some decisions(7), however, it has been held that a subsequent mortgagee of X will be entitled to contribution from Y in such cases.

4A. Puisne mortgage's right to contribution.

A mortgages x and y to B. A then mortgages x alone to C. The property x is sold under B's mortgage and the mortgage is completely discharged. Can C claim contribution from y in order to realise the mortgage-money due to him?

This case is not strictly covered by the wording of the section. Because, the first paragraph of the section in terms refers to owners of the mortgaged property. The paragraph does not refer to persons whose right in respect of the property does not amount to ownership. As regards the second paragraph, it refers to contribution in respect of a puisne mortgage and not of a prior mortgage as in the above illustration. The third paragraph does not touch the point. However, though the case is not covered by the terms of the section, it has been held that C will be entitled to contribution in such cases(1). It is doubtful how far this view can be sustained in view of the dicta of the Privy Council in Ganeshilal v. Charan Singh(2) that as the Act prescribes the conditions in which contribution is payable it is not proper to introduce into the matter any extrinsic principle to modify the statutory provisions.

The following illustrations are based on the hypothesis that a pursue mortgagee of one of the items subject to a prior mortgage can claim contribution in respect of the prior mortgage Illustrations.

- (1) A mortgages x and y to B and then x and z to C. The property x is sold under B's mortgage and the mortgage is fully satisfied out of the sale proceeds. C then sues for the sale of property z in enforcement of his mortgage. He can claim in such a suit a decree to the effect that in case the sale proceeds of z are not sufficient to cover the mortgage-money due to him, he must have contribution from y. Such a claim would not be premature nor would its inclusion make the suit bad for misjoinder of causes of action(3).
- (2) Suppose in the above illustration, properties x, z and p constitute the subject-matter of the subsequent mortgage in favour of C. The property x is sold under B's mortgage and p is sold for arrears of revenue, so that C is only left with z as security for his money. In this suit for sale of z, he claims contribution from y. It is contended that as he did not avoid the revenue sale of p, he cannot claim contribution from y. The contention is not tenable and where C was not bound to pay the revenue in respect of p, his failure to pay such revenue will not affect his right of contribution from y(4).
- (3) If two estates are mortgaged to a person and both are subject to separate second mortgages the Court will apportion the first mortgage between the subsequent mortgagees(5).

5. Valuation should be as on the date of the mortgage.

Before the amendment of the section in 1929 there was a conflict of opinions on the question whether for the purposes of contribution, the value of the different properties (where some have been transferred subsequent to the mortgage) should be calculated as at the date of the original mortgage or as at the date of the subsequent transfer. Some cases held that the valuation should be as at the date of the mortgage, irrespective of the price paid by a subsequent transferee of the mortgaged property(1), while other cases held, that it should be as at the date of the subsequent transfer(2). The section was silent on the point. The amendment of the section has now set at rest the said conflict by providing that the valuation should be as at the date of mortgage. Under the present section, therefore, the material date for assessing the value of the property is the date of the mortgage and not the date of the subsequent transfer(3).

In the undermentioned case(4) the purchaser of one of the mortgaged properties claimed contribution and adduced evidence of the value of the property as at the date of the sale. It was held that though the valuation ought to be, as at the date of the mortgage, where the person claiming contribution adduces to show the value of the property at the time he purchased it, it lay on the other side to prove that the value of the property at the date of the mortgage was different.

6. Rate of contribution — How determined.

The method of computation under the section is a matter of law. The matter has been dealt with by statute and the Court cannot, in the face of the statutory provision, have recourse to equitable principles, however, fair they may appear to be at first sight(1). In the absence of a contract to the contrary the several properties or portions of property mortgaged are liable to contribute rateably to the debt secured by the mortgage according to the value of the properties on the date of mortgage(2). The value referred to in the section is the actual market-value of the property(3) and not the price paid for it by any subsequent purchaser, whether in a private or in an execution sale(4). Where the mortgaged property is land, the Government revenue may be taken as a measure of profits yielded every year and may thus afford a measure for calculating the value of the property(5), but this is not always a correct criterion of actual value(6) and, therefore, cannot be accepted, without more, as the only method for ascertaining the market-value of the property(7).

The rate of contribution is determined by first ascertaining the actual market-value of the property and then distributing the total amount of mortgage-money over the several properties in the proportion of their values. Thus, if two properties x and y of the market-value of Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 1,500, respectively, are mortgaged for a debt of Rs. 1,000, the rateable share to be borne by the properties would be in the proportion of 1,000 : 1,500, i.e., in the proportion of 2 : 3 and the amounts for which x and y would be liable would be Rs. 400 and Rs. 600 respectively.

Where any of the properties mortgaged is already subject to a prior mortgage or charge, the mode of ascertaining its share of liability is to deduct the amount of such mortgage or charge from the market-value of that particular property and to treat the remaining sum as the market-value of that item for the purpose of finding out the rate of contribution(8).

Illustration

Properties x and y are mortgaged to secure a debt of Rs. 1,000. The market-values of x and y are Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 1,500 respectively, y is already mortgaged for Rs. 500. According to the rule stated above the amount of Rs. 500 will be deducted from Rs. 1,500, the value of y, and Rs. 1,000 will be taken as its value for determining its share of liability. Thus, the proportion would be 1000 : 1000 i.e., equal, and the respective liability will therefore be Rs. 500.

It is supposed in the above illustration that the prior mortgage is on property y alone. But it may happen that the prior mortgage is not only on y but also on some other properties which are not included in the second mortgage. Prior to the amendment in 1929 there was some doubt in such a case, as to whether the amount to be deducted from the market-value of such property was the total amount of the prior debt or only a rateable portion of it. The expression used in the section before the amendment was "the amount of any other encumbrance" and it was held that this expression had a wider connotation than the term "mortgage" (9) and that the amount to be deducted should be the total amount due on the prior mortgage (10). In Faqir Chand v. Aziz Ahmad (11) their Lordships of the Privy Council declared the above mode of calculation to be erroneous and held that the correct mode was first, to assess, according to the rule of contribution, the rateable share of liability attributed to the property concerned and then deduct such amount from the value of the property. The substitution, in the present section of the words, "mortgage or charge" for the word "encumbrance" which occurred before has also made the position clear. Where, therefore, any of the properties mortgaged is already subject to a prior mortgage along with some other properties, not included in the second mortgage, the amount of the prior mortgage to be deducted from the value of the property is the proportionate mortgage money payable by that property according to the rule of contribution under the prior mortgage and not the total amount of debt due under it.

Illustration

Properties x and y of the market value of Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 1,500 respectively, are mortgaged to secure a debt of Rs. 1,000. Property y is already subject to a prior mortgage for Rs. 600 along with another property z of the market value of Rs. 300. To find out the value of y for the purpose of contribution under the mortgage of Rs. 1,000, its share of liability under the prior mortgage will have to be determined first. Properties y and z are liable to pay Rs. 600 under the prior mortgage in the proportion of 1,500 : 300, i.e., 5 : 1, and the rateable liability on each according to such proportion is Rs. 500 and Rs. 100 respectively. Thus, the value of y for the purpose of contribution towards the second mortgage will be Rs. 1,500 less Rs. 500 (not Rs. 600, the total amount of the prior mortgage). The rate of contribution of x and y, therefore, will be in the proportion of 1,000 : 1,000, i.e., equal. Each property will have to contribute Rs. 500. The fact that the prior mortgage has been recovered from the owner of property z any particular amount in respect of his mortgage, does not affect the mode of valuation as stated above for the purposes of the second mortgage (12).

Where, however, the amount payable by the property under the prior mortgage or charge exceeds its market-value, it is obvious that the value of such property for the purpose of contribution under the second mortgage is nil and the entire burden of the latter debt rests on the remaining properties (13).

In a suit for contribution, the owner of a property can claim as contribution only the amount he had paid in excess of his own proportionate share of liability and nothing more. Thus, if the proportionate liabilities of two properties x and y of market-value of Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 1,500 respectively are Rs. 400 and Rs. 600 respectively and property x is sold in execution of the mortgage decree for Rs. 1,000 the owner of property x can claim, as contribution from property y only the amount of Rs. 600 (i.e. Rs. 1,000 less his liability Rs. 400). A property which is subject to a mortgage rarely fetches in auction sale of its real value. It is usually sold for much less than its fair value. But even if for certain reasons the property fetches more than its market value, it is the market-value that must be considered in determining the amount which the owner is entitled to claim as contribution. He is not entitled to treat the market-value as the value for the purpose of determining the amount of his liability and at the same time, adopt some other value which is much higher than the market-value for the purpose of determining the amount which he ought to be considered as having paid in discharge of the mortgage and on the basis of which he is entitled to claim contribution. The owner cannot make a profit out of the auction sale and claim the difference between the sale price and his liability to pay, as contribution from the owner of the other property. Such a claim was made and properly disallowed in Magniram v Mehdi Hussain(14) the facts of which were as follows : Properties x and y of the admitted market-value of Rs. 20,000 and Rs. 6,000 respectively were mortgaged for Rs. 8,000. The properties were subsequently sold to A and B respectively. The mortgagee obtained a decree on his mortgage and sold property y in execution for Rs. 21,000 for which it was purchased by A. This amount completely satisfied the mortgage. B sued A for contribution alleging that out of the mortgage-debt his property y was rateably liable to pay only Rs. 5,000 and property x was liable for Rs. 16,000 and that, by the auction sale, his property having paid Rs. 21,000 he was entitled to claim Rupees 16,000, the difference between the auction price and his liability, as contribution from A. It was held that this method of calculation was wrong as it assumed two different values of property, one for assessing the liability and another for calculating the amount of contribution. The correct way was to take the market value as the only value for both the purposes and to deduct the proportionate share of the liability from its value. Thus, in this case, Rs. 6,000 was the value of the property y, the liability assessed rateably on this basis on y was Rs. 5,000 and therefore the real excess paid by y was only Rs. 1,000. This was the amount which B could claim from A and was decreed to him. It was found as a fact, that A the purchaser, in order to save his property x, had paid not only the fair market-value of y but also much more in order to satisfy the debt completely. This fact was also taken into consideration and in so doing the Court observed as follows :

See also the undermentioned cases(15).

"A claim like the present for contribution is an equitable claim and in determining the amount of it we must take an equitable view of all the circumstances attending the case and must not give effect to what is only an apparent and not the real state of things."

7. "In the absence of a contract to the contrary".

In England parties are entitled to contract themselves out of the right of contribution(1). The same principle is enacted in this section. It is, therefore, open to the parties to contract that there shall be no contribution in the particular case or that they should contribute in a particular manner(2).

There is a difference of opinion as to whether the "contract to the contrary" must be a contract to which the mortgagee is a party or whether it may be a contract between the owners of the mortgaged properties themselves. It was held in some cases(3) before the decision of the Privy Council in Ganesh Lal v Charan Singh(4) that a "contract to the contrary" within the meaning of this section must mean a contract to which the mortgagee is a party. In Ganesh Lal's case(5) A mortgaged properties x and y to B. He then sold x to C, directing him to pay off the mortgage from out of the sale consideration. Subsequently, y was sold in Court auction in execution of a money decree against A and was purchased by D. Thereafter, C paid off the mortgage and sued D for contribution. The High Court of Allahabad held that a contract to the "contrary" within S. 82 should be a contract between the mortgagor and the mortgagee, that the agreement between the vendor and the vendee to pay off the mortgage was not such a contract and that D, not being a party to the contract between A and C, could not take advantage of it and therefore, could not escape the liability to contribute under the section. The decision was affirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council, but not on the ground that the contract set up was not a contract to the contrary. Their Lordships proceeded on the view that the benefit of the contract between the vendor and the vendee could not be claimed by a person not a party to the contract unless such benefit had been assigned to him, in law or equity.

Ganesh Lal's case(6) has been regarded in the undermentioned case(7) as negating the view that a "contract to the contrary" within the meaning of this section must be one to which the mortgagee is a party. In Khalesan-fisabit v Narendra Nath(8) it was observed as follows:

"From the terms in which S. 82, Transfer of Property Act, is expressed, their Lordships have concluded that a "contract to the contrary" mentioned therein is a contract between the mortgagor and the mortgagee. The term is very general and may refer to any contract. In the various cases it would appear that the mortgagee has no interest at all in the question of contribution between the various parts of the property. Insofar as he is concerned, he is entitled to proceed against the whole of the property or any part of it to realise the amount due to him. If he is concerned with the whole, he acquires the equity of redemption in part of property but in his capacity as mortgagee, he is not interested and therefore there seems to be no reason why he should be a necessary party to any contract which involves the right of contribution between various portions of the property mortgaged."

But in the undermentioned cases(9) (even after Ganesh Lal's case) it has been held that the "contract to the contrary" must be one between the mortgagor and the mortgagee. But even according to this view a contract excluding the right of contribution will be pro tanto but not on the actual parties to the contract even though the mortgagee is not a party to the contract(10). (See for further discussion Note 8.)

A contract excluding the right of contribution may be express or implied. Thus, there will be an implied contract to the contrary in the following cases:

- (a) A contract between the mortgagor and his transferee of a portion of the property that the latter should pay off the entire mortgage implies contract that the vendor's property is not liable to contribute towards the mortgage(11).
- (b) An undertaking by the transferor-mortgagor that he will himself discharge the mortgage, implies a contract that the property transferred is not liable to contribute to the mortgage-debt(12).
- (c) Where, of two mortgagors A and B, B takes the whole of the mortgage money, there is an implied contract that A's property is not liable to contribute towards the debt(13).
- (d) Where one of the mortgagors is merely a surety for the others, there is an implied contract that the former is not liable to contribute towards the debt(14).
- (e) Where the mortgagor sells a part of the mortgaged property free of incumbrances, there is an implied contract that that part is not liable to contribute(15).

See also the undermentioned cases(16).

It has been held that from the mere fact that properties were purchased in Court auction subject to subsisting mortgage, the Court cannot infer a contract to the contrary so as to disentitle the purchaser who pays off the common charge from claiming contribution from the other co-mortgagors(17).

8. "Contract to the contrary", if enforceable by or against assignees of the property.

The right of contribution exists only when there is no contract to the contrary. Where there is such a contract, there is no right of contribution as provided by this section, and the parties to the contract are governed by the contract itself(1). There is a conflict of decisions on the question whether a contract excluding the right of contribution under this section is enforceable against the transferees of the mortgaged property. In a Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court(2) it has been held that where the mortgagee is a party to such a contract, it will be a "contract to the contrary" within the meaning of this section and will run with the land, so that it will be binding on the transferee of the property irrespective of any question of notice. But according to the above decision, if the mortgagee is not a party to the contract, it will not be covered by this section and will not run with the land. Such a contract will, it has been held in the above decision, bind only the actual parties to the contract and will not affect a transferee of the property unless he agrees to be bound by the contract.

2. AIR 1943 Mad 429 (436) : 11LR (1943) Mad 531 (FB).

But the trend of earlier case-law on this point was to a different effect. The view taken was that a contract between the owners of different portions of the mortgaged property, to which the mortgagee was not a party, and under which the whole burden of the mortgage was to fall on one of the portions, would amount to an obligation annexed to the ownership of the property within the meaning of S 40 and would be binding on the transferee of the property with notice of the contract(3).

This view may be illustrated by the following illustrations

Illustrations

- (1) D mortgaged three items of property to P. Subsequently D sold item 1 to A in consideration of his undertaking to discharge the whole of the mortgage. A thereafter sold item 1 to P for a sum which did not suffice to discharge the mortgage. P sued to recover the balance from items 2 and 3 in the hands of D. D claimed that there was a contract to the contrary between himself and A that D's properties were not liable to contribute. It was held that there was a contract to the contrary as pleaded and that the burden thereof was enforceable by D (who was a party to the contract) against the assignee from A with notice(4). See also the undermentioned cases to the same effect(5).
- (2) A mortgagor of two items sells one item to X free of the incumbrance. He subsequently sells the other to Y who undertakes to discharge the whole of the debt. Y discharges the debt and claims contribution from X. He cannot do so. The contract by the mortgagor with X is a contract to the contrary, the burden of which is annexed to the ownership of the other item(6). But if the prior sale was not free of incumbrances the vendee cannot resist contribution even though the subsequent vendee had undertaken to pay the whole of the mortgage-debt(7).

So far as Madras is concerned, the Full Bench decision above referred to must be deemed to have superseded the earlier view.

The benefit of a contract (to which the mortgagee is not a party) cannot be enforced by a mere transferee of the property unless there is an assignment of such contract in his favour in law or in equity.

A mortgaged properties k and m to V. Subsequently A sold k to S who undertook to discharge the mortgage. In execution of a money decree against Z, property m was thereafter sold and was purchased by G subject to the mortgage. S then paid off the mortgage and sued G for contribution. G pleaded that there was a contract to the contrary between A and S which freed property m from the right of contribution. It was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that though there was a contract to the contrary between A and S, G could not, as assignee of the property from A, claim the benefit of the contract as he was not a party to the contract and as the benefit of the contract was not assigned to him in law or in equity(8). The above illustration presupposes that if the benefit of the contract is assigned expressly or in equity by A to C, C could claim such benefit. Thus, where A the mortgagor sells item 1 of the mortgaged property to B who undertakes to discharge the whole mortgage, and thereafter A sells item 2 of the mortgaged property to C free of the incumbrance, the benefit of the contract will, in equity, be deemed to be assigned to him, and he can therefore claim the benefit of such a contract(10)

8A. Second paragraph.

Under this paragraph it is not necessary that the two mortgages must have been executed by the same person(1).

9. Court selling property in particular order — Right of contribution not affected.

Where in execution of a mortgage-decree against several items of the mortgaged property, the Court in the exercise of its discretion under O 34 of the Civil Procedure Code, orders that the items should be sold in a particular order, such order does not affect the right of contribution between the various items(1). But where the order of sale is in pursuance of an arrangement between the parties that some of the items are primarily liable for the entire debt, the arrangement will be a "contract to the contrary" and consequently there may be no right to contribution(2).

10. Marshalling, an exception to the rule of contribution.

The last paragraph of this section provides that nothing in this section applies to a property liable under S 81 to the claim of a subsequent mortgagee. In other words, where the right of contribution comes in conflict with the right of marshalling, the right of marshalling will prevail. Suppose A the owner of properties x and y mortgages them both to B, and then mortgages y alone to C. In such a case, C is entitled, by virtue of the last paragraph to have the mortgage-debt to B satisfied out of property x so far as it will extend. In the absence of such a provision, properties x and y would be both liable to pay rateably to the mortgage-debt under this section and thus prejudice the rights of the subsequent mortgagee C, whose security comprises only of property A(1)

The fact that a party to a suit cannot invoke the doctrine of marshalling does not mean that he loses his right of contribution. This right can be worked out in a separate suit between the parties(2).

11. Contribution distinguished from equitable rule of apportionment.

See Note 3 on Section 81.

12. Right of contribution is not a right to obtain apportionment in a mortgage suit.

The section merely determines the liability of the mortgagors inter se(1). It does not operate so as to split up the mortgage security(2). The mortgage security is entire and indivisible and except in exceptional circumstances the mortgagee cannot be compelled to break up the security. In a suit on the mortgage, the owners of the different portions of the mortgaged properties are not entitled to claim as a matter of right, on the strength of the liability to contribute under this section that the mortgage-debt should be apportioned between the various mortgaged properties and each of them should be allowed to redeem on payment of his rateable share thereon(3). reason, the owner of the part of the equity of redemption cannot sue for partial redemption(4). In Debendra Nath v. Mirza Abdul Samed Seroji(5) their Lordships of the High Court of Calcutta observed :

"The general rule unquestionably is that the mortgagee cannot be required at the instance of a purchaser of part of the premises to apportion his mortgage-debt among the several parts into which the property has been divided, and to look to each only for its proportionate share, unless circumstances have happened, the effect of which, in fact or in law, is to create a severance of the security"

The mortgagee is entitled to execute his mortgage decree against any of the mortgaged properties he pleases, and, if any question of equity arises between the different owners of the mortgaged properties, that equity can only be enforced in an independent suit for contribution and not in proceedings for execution(6).

13. A claim for contribution is a charge on the property.

The liability under this section to contribute is attached to the different shares or parts of the property mortgaged. Section 100 of the Act lays down that where immovable property of one party is, by act of parties or by operation of law, made security for the payment of money to another, the latter person is said to have a charge on the property. It is thus clear that the provisions of S. 82 read with S. 100 clearly give rise to a charge against such portions of the mortgaged property as have not discharged their proportionate share of the liability(1). A suit for contribution under this section is, therefore, a suit to enforce a charge and the limitation applicable to such a suit will be as provided by Art. 132, Limitation Act of 1908(2) (See now Art. 62 of the 1963 Act.)

14. Liability to contribute, whether personal.

The liability to contribute is, as has been seen in Note 13, a charge upon the property(1) But can the owner of the part or share who pays in excess of his share, towards the mortgage-debt, claim apart from the provisions of this section, a personal relief under Ss. 69 and 70 of the Contract Act, 1872, against those who have escaped payment. One view is that no personal relief can be granted in such a case(2) Another view is that S. 69 of the Contract Act, 1872, does not apply to a suit for contribution(3) The reason given is that that section contemplates only those cases where payment is made by a person under no legal liability to make it, and as the plaintiff claiming contribution, is bound under law to make the payment, S. 69 does not apply(4) Some decisions have however, taken a contrary view, namely, that this section (S. 69, Contract Act) applies to suits for contribution, where both the plaintiff and the defendant are liable for the money paid by the plaintiff(5) Whether S. 59 of the Contract Act applies or not, it has been held, a suit for contribution would fall within the scope of S. 70 of the Contract Act(6) In the undermentioned case(7) where the mortgagee threatened to sell the land mortgaged to him and one of the co-sharers paid up the mortgage-debt to prevent the property from being sold, it was held that his suit for contribution fell within the scope of S. 70 of the Contract Act and that he was entitled to a personal relief against the owner of the property liable to contribute. In Kedar Lal v. Hari Lal(8) it has been held by their Lordships of the Supreme Court that when the right to contribution arises out of a mortgage, S. 82 will exclude the applicability of S. 43 of the Contract Act unless there is a contract to the contrary

The decisions abovementioned holding that the mortgagor paying in excess of his share can claim personal relief against others, therefore, require re-consideration.

Though a personal decree for contribution may be passed against any of the persons who are themselves mortgagors, it was held in the undermentioned cases(9) that it could not be passed against an auction-purchaser of the title of one of the mortgagors.

15. Mortgage-debt not fully discharged — Claim for contribution.

It has been seen already that where properties X, Y and Z are mortgaged for a debt, and the owner of X has paid towards the mortgage more than the amount attributable to it, the liability to Y and Z to contribute towards the excess so paid, in proportion to their value, is a charge upon Y and Z to contribute towards the excess so paid, in proportion to their value, is a charge upon Y and Z. This charge will obviously arise the moment such excess is paid(1), and the right to enforce such charge must ordinarily arise at the same time. There has, however, been a difference of opinion on the point. According to one view, the right to contribution and the right to enforce such charge does not arise until the whole mortgage is discharged(2). The contrary view is that the right to enforce the contribution will arise whether the whole mortgage is discharged or not(3). Some of the cases holding the first view rest upon the provisions of S. 95 as it stood prior to the amendment of 1929, it being assumed that the doctrine of contribution under this section is the same as the doctrine of subrogation underlying S. 95. Other cases rest their view on Art. 99 of the Limitation Act of 1877. The old S. 95 provided that where one co-mortgagor redeemed the mortgage, he had a charge on the shares of the other co-mortgagors for their proportion of the expenses of redemption. And it was held under that section, that the word "redeemed" showed that the section did not apply unless the whole mortgage-debt was discharged. Again Art. 99 of the Limitation Act of 1877 provided, in the first column thereof, the limitation for a suit for contribution by a party who had paid the whole amount due under a joint decree, while in the third column it provided that time ran from the date of the plaintiff's payment in excess of his share. There was naturally a conflict of opinions under that article whether a suit for contribution was barred if a portion of the common debt was paid more than three years before suit and the balance within three years after the suit(4). The old Art. 99 has been remodelled under the Limitation Act (Act 9 of 1908) (now Art. 48 of the Act 36 of 1963) by the substitution of the words "the whole or more than his share of the amount due" for the words "the whole amount due", thus showing that a suit for contribution (not being the enforcement of a charge therefor) will lie even if the whole amount due has not been discharged. Section 95 of this Act read with S. 92, on the other hand, has made it clear that a right of subrogation does not arise until the mortgage is redeemed in full. There is no such provision in S. 82 corresponding to the last paragraph of S. 95. It is, therefore, clear that a suit for contribution by enforcing the charge is maintainable even if the whole mortgage is not discharged in full(5), though a right of subrogation cannot be claimed until it is fully redeemed.

16. Contribution arises both on voluntary and involuntary payments.

A distinction is sometimes sought to be made between involuntary and voluntary payment of the common liability and it has been held that a right of contribution arises only where the claimant has voluntarily paid the debt(1) But on principle no such distinction can be made. The right of contribution arises, with equal force and validity, both in the case where the claimant has himself paid the amount to avert a legal process, and in the case where such payment has been enforced by the execution sale of the claimant's property. The reason is that the right of contribution does not depend upon is based on the ground that the claimant's property has paid more than what it was liable for and then the defendant has been benefited by the payment(2)

17. Right of redeeming co-mortgagor to claim contribution.

The old S. 95 provided that where one of the several mortgagors redeemed the mortgaged property and obtained possession thereof, he had a charge on the share of each of the other co-mortgagors in the property for his proportion of the expenses properly incurred in so redeeming and obtaining possession. Though the section spoke of redemption and obtaining possession, which suggested that its application was confined only to usufructuary mortgages, it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ahmad Wali Khan v Shamsul Jahan Begum(1) that the section should be construed as being applicable to all kinds of mortgages. Relying upon this interpretation of the section by the Judicial Committee, one set of cases held that a co-mortgagor redeeming the mortgaged property obtained, in all kinds of mortgages, a charge under S. 95 over the shares of other mortgagors for the expenses of redemption(2) A contrary view was held in other cases namely that the section did not apply except in cases of the redemption of usufructuary mortgages and that, in cases of other kinds of mortgages, the redeeming co-mortgagor had a charge by the joint operation of Ss. 82 and 100 of the Act, which was independent of S. 95(3) According to a third class of cases, the doctrine of subrogation applied to the case of a redeeming co-mortgagor who, on such redemption, stepped into the shoes of the mortgagee whom he redeemed, having all the latter's rights against the other co-mortgagors(4). Yet another group of cases held that the doctrine of subrogation had nothing to do in this case and that a redeeming co-mortgagor was at the most only a charge-holder(5). This conflict of opinions as regards the rights of the redeeming co-mortgagor gave rise to a difference of opinion, among other things, as regards the starting point of limitation for the suit by the mortgagor to enforce his right under Art 132, Limitation Act (1908) (see now Art 62 of the 1963 Act). Those cases which held that he was merely a charge-holder held that limitation started from the date of payment or redemption of the mortgage(6), while those cases which held that he was a subrogee, held that the limitation started from the date when the mortgage-debt redeemed by him became due(7).

7. AIR 1921 Cal 166 (169) (DB) (Note — This case even though overruled in AIR 1931 Cal 251 (FB), is still good law after the amendment in 1929.)

The Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act of 1929 removed this conflict of opinion by adding a new S. 92 and by suitably amending S. 95 of the Act. By these amendments, the Legislature gave statutory recognition to the view that a redeeming co-mortgagor was subrogated to the position of the mortgagee redeemed by him. Thus, under the present S. 92, a redeeming co-mortgagor has the same rights as regards the redemption, foreclosure or sale of the mortgaged property, as the mortgagee whose mortgage he redeems(8), and hence, now, a suit by the redeeming mortgagor to enforce his rights as subrogee must be brought by him under Art. 132 Limitation Act, 1908 (now Art. 62 of the 1963 Act) within 12 years from the due date of the mortgage redeemed by him and not from the date of payment(9). In the Punjab, where the Act is not applicable, the equitable doctrine of subrogation has all along been applied to the case of the redeeming co-mortgagor(10).

The effect of the enactment of the new section is that a co-mortgagor who redeems the mortgage gets all the rights as regards foreclosure, redemption or sale of the mortgaged property as were enjoyed by the mortgagee himself. He is substituted in the place of the mortgagee, which is legally a better position than that of a mere charge-holder, which he may get under the joint operation of Ss. 82 and 100.

A and B were co-owners of certain property. B sold his share to C leaving a portion of the consideration in the hands of C with direction to pay it to a mortgagee in possession. C converted the possessory mortgage into simple mortgage and entered into possession and thus redeemed it. It was held that the payment made by C to the mortgagee was merely as the agent of his vendor B and therefore, he could not claim any contribution under S. 82 in his own right from A(11).

Section 95 and this section are not mutually exclusive. There seems to be nothing to prevent a redeeming co-mortgagor, from claiming at his option rights given to him under S. 95 or those given to him by this section(12). Even if his rights to sue on the original mortgage by virtue of his right of subrogation may be barred by limitation, there appears to be nothing to prevent his enforcing his charge for contribution under this section within 12 years of the date of payment in excess of his share(13).

property purchased by him may be enforced in the very suit brought by the mortgagee to recover his mortgage-debt. The rateable liability on the remaining portion should be determined under this section and decree for that amount alone should be passed(5). In the undermentioned cases(6) where the mortgagee acquired a portion of equity of redemption and sued for sale of the remaining property for the balance of the debt, it was held that the decree ordering the sale of the property without fixing the proportionate liability on the property under this section was improper. In case a mortgagee purchases a portion of equity of redemption after the passing of decree on his mortgage, it has been held that he cannot execute his decree for the recovery of the entire debt. As the mortgagee is entitled to recover only a proportionate share of the debt, all that the executing Court can do is to proceed against the remaining property for the amount remaining due after the proportionate abatement of the debt(7). In the undermentioned case(8) A executed a first mortgage of properties x, y and z in favour of B and also a second mortgage of property x. B obtained a decree on his second mortgage and in execution purchased property x during the pendency of his suit on the first mortgage. B obtained a decree on the first mortgage and sought to execute the decree by sale of properties y and z. It was held that B could execute the entire decree against the remaining properties not purchased by him and that it was not open to A to contend that B could only recover the proportionate amount of the debt on the first mortgage. Any question as to equity for contribution as between A and B could not be gone in execution proceedings.

19. Effect of release by mortgagee of a portion of equity of redemption.

As has been seen in the Notes on S. 60, a mortgagee is entitled to release from his mortgage security any part of the mortgaged property without abating any portion of his mortgage-debt(1). But the owners of parts of the equity of redemption cannot be deprived of their right of contribution by such release on the part of the mortgagee(2).

It has been held in the undermentioned cases(1) that a mortgagee or charge-holder who has got a charge on two properties but who allows by his negligence or laches his remedy against one of the properties to be barred, cannot claim to recover the whole amount from the other property. This view, it is submitted, is not correct. If, as has been seen in Note 43 on S. 60, a mortgagee is entitled to release any part of the mortgaged property from his security and enforce the whole claim against the other properties, there does not seem to be any reason why the same principle should not apply where the mortgagee chooses to allow his remedy against a particular property to be barred by limitation.

On the assumption, therefore, that the mortgagee in such a case has recovered the whole of the debt from some of the properties only, it will be clear that the owners of those properties can recover contribution from the properties, even though the mortgagee may have lost his remedy against them by reason of limitation(2). In the case noted below(3), a prior mortgagee, A, of properties x and y sued on his mortgage without impleading a subsequent mortgagee, B, as a party to the suit and obtained a decree. B thereafter obtained a decree on his mortgage and in execution of the decree got y sold, and C became the purchaser thereof. The owner of property x paid off the prior mortgage-decree and at that time, A's remedy against B was barred by limitation. He then claimed contribution against C. It was held that he was not entitled to do so, on the ground that A's remedy having been barred against B, he and C, the purchaser in execution of his decree, were no longer liable to pay A's debt or decree. The decision, it is submitted, does not appear to be correct. The fact that A's remedy is barred against B does not extinguish B's liability. The sale in execution of B's decree can only be subject to the liability of A's mortgage. When this liability which is common to the properties x and y is paid off from x, there appears to be no reason why x should become free from the liability to contribute.

effect that mortgagee's failure to implead the purchaser might prejudice the other defendants by rendering the suit for contribution less likely to succeed, submitted not correct.)

21. Contribution between life-tenant and reversioner.

See the undermentioned case(1).

22. Parties to suit for contribution.

The right to claim compensation may be successfully asserted even as against a person who ought to have been but was not joined as a party defendant by the mortgagee in his action to enforce the security(1). But in a suit for contribution, all the persons liable to contribute should be made parties(2). It is only when such persons are properly before the Court that the value of the different items of property can be ascertained and a decree finally settling all disputes can be made(3). In James v. Achiabar Singh(4), where the plaintiff deliberately left out one of the contributors, the suit was dismissed.

But in such a suit the liability of each party must be determined in proportion to his interest and provided for separately(5).

23. Properties liable to contribute.

Where properties A, B, C and D are mortgaged to secure a debt, and properties A and B are sold for the realisation of the debt, the owner of a A can claim contribution only from the properties C and D; he cannot claim any contribution from the property B, inasmuch as a right of contribution obviously can be only against properties which have not contributed to the debt, and not against properties which have contributed to it(1).

Again, where some of the properties mortgaged to secure the common debt, are already subject to a prior mortgage, and such properties are sold in execution of the decree obtained on that mortgage, the sale is free of the second mortgage, and such properties are not liable for contribution as far as the claim arising under the second mortgage is concerned, the burden of satisfying the whole mortgage-debt falls entirely on the remaining mortgage properties(2). The burden of proof that some of the mortgaged properties have been completely absorbed in satisfaction of the prior mortgages is upon the plaintiff suing for contribution. If the plaintiff fails to prove that some of the properties are so absorbed, he is bound to bring each and every item of the property into the hotchpot in order to enable the liability of each of the properties to be determined(3). If the plaintiff voluntarily relinquishes his claim for contribution from some of the properties, he cannot thereby seek to enhance the burden on the other properties(4). Though a claim for contribution is lost against those properties which are absorbed in satisfaction of prior mortgage, it is not lost against those portions of the properties which are sold in execution of a decree obtained on a subsequent mortgage(5) or in execution of a simple money decree against mortgagors(6). The reason is that in such cases the sale is not free of the incumbrance, but only subject to it.

24. Failure to claim contribution in redemption suit, whether bars subsequent suit for contribution.

The failure to claim contribution in a suit for redemption will not bar a subsequent suit for contribution on the principle of res judicata(1). In Raghavachari v Venkatanarayana Reddi(2) the Court in execution of the mortgage-decree, directed the properties to be sold in a particular order. The plaintiff, a co-mortgagor, in order to avert the sale of his properties, paid the entire amount of the mortgage-decree and instituted a suit for contribution. The defence was that if contribution was allowed the order of the Court would be nullified. It was held that the plaintiff's right to contribution was not barred by res judicata as it was not necessary for the Court in the previous litigation to determine the question of contribution. See also the undermentioned case(3) to the same effect.

Nor is a suit for contribution on the failure to claim contribution in a redemption suit barred by the provisions of O. 2, R. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That rule bars a subsequent suit only when the claim in the subsequent suit is based on the cause of action on which the earlier suit is based. As will be clear from the discussion above, the causes for action for a suit for redemption and a suit for contribution are entirely different(4).

25. Plea that the plaintiff has no interest left in the property is no defence to the claim for contribution.

The fact that the plaintiff in a suit for contribution has no interest in the property at the time of the suit is not a valid defence to the claim. The reason is obvious. The claim for contribution rests on the fact that the plaintiff has made a payment or an amount is realised from his property which exceeds his share of liability and that the persons against whom such claim is made have either not paid their share of liability or if paid, have paid less than what was their due share. The question of liability does not thus depend upon whether the person claiming contribution still continues to be the owner of the property or not. Thus, where the properties of both A and B were subject to one mortgage-debt and A paid Rs. 3,700 towards the discharge of that common liability, the fact that A had subsequently, i.e., after the payment was made, sold his property was held not to be a bar to A's claiming contribution from B in respect of the amount paid by him(1).

26. Interest on contribution amount.

In Kambala Venkanna v. Goren Veeraraju(1), it has been held that interest on the contribution amount can be awarded on equitable considerations. Madhavan Nair, J., in that case observed :

"Even if the payment of interest does not come under any specific provision of law, still if general equitable considerations justify award of the same, it is quite open to the Courts to award it, is a principle which cannot be disputed. In my opinion equitable consideration require in a case like the present that interest should be awarded to the plaintiff on the contribution amount. The claim being founded in equity, it is left to the Court to decide the rate of interest that should be awarded and the time from which it should be awarded."

See also the undermentioned case(2), where the funds which had escaped contribution were charged with interest upon the principal sums which they were bound to contribute.

27. Contribution suit is not cognizable by Small Cause Court.

Article 42 of the second schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, provides that a suit by one of several joint mortgagors of immovable property for contribution in respect of money paid by him for the redemption of the mortgaged property is not cognizable by the Court of Small Causes.

It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad in the undermentioned case(1) dissenting from a previous case of the same Court(2) that a suit by mortgagor who has paid more than his share of the mortgage amount, for personal reimbursement from the other mortgagors is not a "suit for contribution" within the meaning of Article 42 of the said Act and is, therefore, cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. 1. Legislative changes.

The words "payable in respect of any mortgage has become due" were substituted for the words "has become payable" occurring after the words "at any time after the principal money", by S 44 of the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, XX of 1929. This was in conformity with the similar changes introduced in Ss 60 and 67 (See Note 5).

In the second paragraph, the words "and all documents in his possession or power relating to the mortgaged property" were substituted for the words "if then in his possession or power" and the words "and all such other documents" were added after the word "mortgage-deed" occurring for the second time in the paragraph, by the same S 44 of the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, XX of 1929. This was also in conformity with the similar amendment made in S 60 (See Note 21).

The whole of the third paragraph was newly added, by the above section of the amending Act (See Note 22).

2. Scope of the section.

This section is a survival of the repealed Bengal Regulations I of 1798 and 17 of 1806(1). The former allowed the mortgagor, in order to save the property which had been mortgaged by way of conditional sale, to make a deposit in Court within the time fixed in the deed of mortgage for the repayment of the mortgage-debt(2). The latter extended this period of one year from the date of the application by the mortgagee to the Court under S 8 of the Regulation(3).

Under the present Act there are three remedies open to a mortgagor in respect of the redemption of the mortgaged property—

- (a) he may tender the mortgage-money privately to the mortgagee under S 60;
- (b) he may deposit the money in Court under this section, or
- (c) he may institute a suit for redemption under S 91.

He can avail himself of any of these remedies and cannot be compelled to resort to any one remedy in particular(4). But remedies indicated by (a) and (b) have to be availed by the mortgagor before mortgagee has filed a suit for enforcement of mortgage(5).

The provision for making a deposit in Court is intended to remove the inconveniences that may result from a tender out of Court. If a mortgagor makes a tender out of Court and the mortgagee denies the tender, the mortgagor may be defeated by false evidence. But if he makes a deposit in Court the matter is proved for him by the record. Thus, the deposit makes available to the mortgagor a sure mode of proof that he had made a tender(6).

The section confers a special privilege on a mortgagor, which other debtors do not enjoy. The mortgagor must, therefore, strictly comply with the provisions of the section in order to claim benefit under it(7).

There was a stipulation in the mortgage deed that if the mortgaged amount is not repaid within stipulated period then mortgagee will be within his rights to get sale deed executed and mortgage deed would be treated as an assessment to sell. Mortgagor applied under S. 83 but the mortgagee refused to accept the amount. He raised the further plea that as per condition in the mortgage deed he was entitled to purchase the property. The proper course for the mortgagor in the facts of the present case would be to initiate regular civil proceedings(8).

In order that a deposit may be valid under this section, it is essential(9) that—

- (a) it should be made after the principal money payable in respect of the mortgage has become due, and before a suit for redemption is barred (See Notes 5 and 6),
- (b) it must be made by the mortgagor or by a person entitled to institute a suit for redemption of the mortgaged property (See Note 7);
- (c) it should be made in the Court in which the suit for redemption might have been instituted (See Note 14);
- (d) it must be made to the account of the mortgagee (See Note 15), and
- (e) the full amount due under the mortgage must be deposited (See Note 17)

Where the suit for redemption is barred by limitation, the application under S. 83 filed thereafter cannot be granted(10).

If on deposit of mortgage money in Court the mortgagee instead of accepting it raises a dispute, S. 83 would not entitle the Court to resolve the dispute and no further proceedings would be taken. The dispute has to be necessarily resolved in regular suit for redemption of mortgaged property. The intendment of S. 83 is to ensure that the mortgaged properties are released to the mortgagor without driving him to institute a suit for redemption(11).

It has been held in the undermentioned case(12) that the provisions of the Act as to tender and deposit are not intended to apply to cases where there are disputes between the parties as to the extent of the subsisting interest of the mortgagor in the equity of redemption, so as to compel the mortgagee to take upon himself the task of deciding such disputes rightly for himself at the risk of losing interest on the money due to him.

The section is wide enough to cover both types of mortgages simple and usufructuary(13).

13. AIR 1953 All 33 (35) (DB).

If a tenant is already in possession and he becomes a mortgagee of that property and if that mortgage is redeemed then, he would re-acquire the status of tenant. Putting an end to the tenancy rights by resorting to the contract that on redemption of mortgage tenancy shall cease, would be in breach of the provisions of Rent Control Laws, such contract cannot be enforced. Same would be the position vis-a-vis S. 83 of the T. P. Act. Section 83 cannot have overriding effect on Rent Control Act (14).

See also the undermentioned case(15).

3. Nature or procedure under the section.

The procedure provided by the section is a summary one(1). The functions of the Court under the section, like those under the repealed Bengal Regulations(2) are merely ministerial and not judicial(3). Thus, it was held in the undermentioned case(4) that O. 23, R. 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure did not apply to a compromise entered into pending proceedings under this section.

Where money is deposited in Court for payment to the mortgagee who does not express his willingness to discharge the mortgage but files objections it is not open to the court to make any order on the points in dispute(5).

It is not within the scope of S. 83 for the Court to make an enquiry and ascertain the amount of mortgage. For availing the facility provided by the statute, the mortgagor can avail the same when he voluntarily deposits the mortgage money which has become due. Therefore, the application by the mortgagor making a request to the Court to ask mortgagee to furnish correct account cannot be considered(6).

As soon as the mortgagee refuses to accept the amount deposited by the mortgagor he should institute a suit for redemption with the plea that the entire mortgage dues have been deposited and the mortgage is redeemed(7).

In the case noted below(8) it was held that it was not competent for a District Munsif dealing with proceedings under this section to make a reference to the High Court. The decision proceeded, however, on the view that S. 141 did not apply so as to give a substantive right of reference to a party in any proceeding other than a suit.

4. Section applies to charges.

The section provides for the making of a deposit in the case of mortgages. It has been held in the undermentioned cases(1) that the section would apply also to a charge created on immovable property. This is also clear from S. 100, as amended in 1929, which provides that all the provisions which apply to a simple mortgage shall, so far as may be, apply to a charge.

5. "At any time after the principal money payable in respect of any mortgage has become due."

The right to make a deposit under the section can be exercised only after the principal money has become due and not before. Under S. 60, similarly, the mortgagor has a right to make a payment or tender of the mortgage-money, at any time after the principal money has become due. Before the section was amended the words used were "after the principal money has become payable". The word "payable" gave rise to a diversity of opinion. In some cases it was held that when a day was appointed for the payment of a mortgage-debt and nothing more was stated, the presumption was that the day was appointed for the convenience of the mortgagor and that it was open to the mortgagor, if he liked, to pay the mortgage-debt at an earlier date. A contrary view was taken in other cases and the general principle that the rights of redemption and foreclosure are co-extensive, was strictly followed. In order to remove the doubt caused by the use of the word "payable" the word "due" has been substituted and it is now clear that the persons mentioned in the section cannot proceed under this section as long as time fixed for payment of the mortgage debt has not expired. A deposit made before the expiry of such time will be considered premature(1).

The section presupposes that a person who proposes to take action under the section has a valid right to redeem and is not attempting to exercise his right of redemption in a manner contrary to the provisions of the contract between himself and the mortgagee(2). Thus, in the undermentioned case(3), a consent decree passed between the parties provided that if the mortgagor made default in payment of the amount fixed by the decree on a certain date, the mortgagee would be entitled to take possession of the mortgaged property. The mortgagor made default but the mortgagee was not given possession. Before the mortgagee could recover possession the mortgagor deposited the mortgage-money in Court. It was held that according to the consent decree the right to redeem could accrue, when default was made, only after the mortgagor had given possession to the mortgagee and as he did not give such possession, the deposit was premature.

In the undermentioned case(4) a mortgage deed provided that it should be a simple mortgage for five years, that after the period the mortgagee was to have the option of retaining the deed as a simple mortgage deed or of obtaining possession of the mortgaged property, and that if he entered into possession there was to be no redemption for ten years after he had obtained possession. The mortgagor did not redeem within five years but as soon as the mortgagee sued for possession soon after five years had expired, the mortgagor made a deposit under this section. It was held that he could do so on the ground, firstly, that until the mortgagee had indicated his intention, he was not in a position to know whether the mortgagee intended to retain his rights as a mortgagee under the simple mortgage or to utilize the advantage of the possession clause and, secondly, that although the deed distinctly stated that no redemption should take place for ten years after the mortgagee had taken possession, yet there was nothing to prevent the mortgagor from redeeming at any time when the mortgagee was not in actual possession.

In the case noted below(5) there was a stipulation in the mortgage deed that the mortgage could be discharged only by payment beyond the fruit season. The mortgagor deposited the amount while the fruit season was on. It was held that the deposit was not invalid and it was open to the mortgagee to wait till the fruit season was over before he withdrew the amount.

6. "Before a suit for redemption of the mortgaged property is barred."

Suit for redemption of mortgages are governed by Art. 61(a) of the Limitation Act, which provides a period of 30 years from the date when the right to redeem accrues. As to when a right to redeem accrues, see Note 18 on Article 61 of AIR Commentaries on the Limitation Act, 7th (1997) Edn.

7. "The mortgagor, or any other person entitled to institute such suit."

The term "mortgagor" includes persons deriving title from him(1). Such persons will, therefore, be entitled to make a deposit under the section.

The persons, other than the mortgagor, who are entitled to institute a suit for redemption of the mortgaged property are enumerated in S. 91(2). Such persons also will be entitled to make the deposit under this section(3).

A person in whose favour there is a mere agreement to sell the mortgaged property has no interest in such property and does not come under any of the categories of persons enumerated in S. 91 and is not, therefore, entitled to make a deposit under this section(4).

A mortgagee accepting and taking out the money deposited without any objection cannot subsequently dispute the right of the person, making such deposit, to redeem the property mortgaged and must, by such acceptance, be taken to have admitted the right of the person to redeem the property(5).

8. Deposit must be unconditional.

As has been seen in Note 2 the deposit under this section is only a special kind of tender, i.e. a tender through Court(1) designed to make available to the mortgagor a sure mode of proof of the fact that he has made a tender(2).

A tender must be unconditional(3). It follows that a valid deposit must also be unconditional(4). A deposit is conditional if the person depositing money under this section denies the right of the person claiming the money to withdraw it(5). Where, however, a mortgagor deposits money in Court but states in his petition that some money on a different transaction is due to him from the mortgagee and that he reserves his right to recover that money by a suit after the proceedings under this section are over, the deposit is not conditional(6). section, before he takes out the money deposited, is not conditional(7). But it will be conditional if the mortgagee is required to return documents which he is not bound to deposit under the section(8). A deposit will not be considered conditional when the person making the deposit, in his petition, prays for an issue of notice to the mortgagee, for cancellation of the mortgage deed and for a direction that the mortgagee should take the money deposited out of Court, inasmuch as, under the section itself, it is the duty of the Court to issue such notice and the duty of the mortgagee to do the rest of the things mentioned in the second paragraph(9).

The objection about deposit being conditional can be raised only by mortgagee(10).

Under the section actual deposit is necessary(11). A mere application in the Court for making a deposit will not have the effect of a deposit. Thus, where an application for making a deposit was made on 3-8-1910 but the actual deposit was made on 10-8-1910 and interest on the principal money was calculated up to 3-8-1910 only, it was held that the deposit was not valid, on the ground that it was insufficient and that interest ought to have been calculated up to 10-8-1910 when the actual deposit was made(12). But where an application for making deposit was made on 24-8-1946 but the mortgagor was unable to deposit the money in the Treasury till 27-8-1946 due to delay in issuing the challan by the Court it was held that the maxim Actus curiae neminem gravabit (an act of the Court shall prejudice no man) governed the case and the deposit on 27-8-1946 should be regarded as having been made on 24-8-1946 by applying to rule of nunc pro tunc(13).

9. Deposit after suit.

This section applies only to deposits made before a suit has been instituted on the mortgage, the general principle being that a tender of money must be made before the creditor institutes a suit for such money(1). Deposits into Court after the institution of a suit by the creditor to recover a debt are governed by the provisions of O 24 of the Code of Civil Procedure(2). The distinction between this section and O. 24 of the Code is that unless the entire amount due on the mortgage is deposited interest does not, under this section, cease to run on the mortgage amount, whereas, under the provisions of O. 24 interest will cease to run on the amount deposited whether such sum is in full discharge of the claim or falls short thereof

Where a suit has been instituted on the mortgage in one Court the fact that a deposit of the amount is thereafter made in another Court having jurisdiction over the mortgaged property will not be a valid deposit under this section(3).

The fact that the mortgagor had no notice of the institution of the suit will not affect the right of the mortgagee to proceed with the suit as instituted(4).

In Sahib Chandra v. Lachmi Narain(5) a mortgagee filed a suit for recovery of the interest due on a mortgage document and pending the final decision of that suit, the mortgagor made a deposit of the principal money which was due according to him, under this section. Their Lordships of the Privy Council assumed that this section applied to the deposit, but came to the conclusion that the amount deposited was insufficient and that, therefore, interest did not cease to run. Order 24 cannot obviously apply to such a deposit inasmuch as it was not made after the institution of any suit for the recovery of the principal amount of the mortgage

10. Deposit in redemption suit.

Where a mortgagor or other person mentioned in S. 91 institutes a suit for redemption and then deposits the mortgage-money in Court the provisions of this section will not apply to such a deposit(1) nor will the provisions of O. 24, Civil Procedure Code 1908 (S. 376 of 1882 Code) apply as the suit is not one to recover any debt or damages(2).

11. Suit for redemption without previous deposit.

A deposit under this section is not a condition precedent to a suit for redemption of the mortgaged property(1); and the Court cannot dismiss the suit on the ground that there was no previous deposit or that the deposit was insufficient(2). See also section 60, Note 4

Mortgagor is not bound to tender the amount before filing a suit for redemption(3).

Depositing mortgage money in the Court is one of the three ways the other two being tender under Section 60 or filing a suit under Section 91 available to the mortgagor before filing a redemption suit and he may choose any one(4).

12. Mortgagee's suit after deposit but before receipt of notice.

Section 67 provides for the right of a mortgagee to obtain a decree for foreclosure or sale. As to the right of the mortgagee to carry on a suit for foreclosure or sale instituted after a deposit by the mortgagor in Court but before the receipt of notice of the deposit by the mortgagee, see Note 9 on Section 67.

13. Title to money deposited until withdrawal by mortgagee.

The money deposited under this section remains the property of the person making the deposit until it has been accepted by the mortgagee under the provisions of this section(1). The mere fact that such person has, after the deposit, sued for redemption, or even the fact that a decree has been passed in such suit will not affect this principle(2). But the position would be different where there is a direction in the decree that the mortgagee should withdraw the money deposited. In such a case, the withdrawal will be in execution of the decree and not under S. 83. The distinction between a withdrawal of the deposit under S. 83 and one in execution of the decree is that in the former case the mortgage is extinguished while in the latter case it is not.

In Dalsingh v. Pitam Singh(3) a mortgagor deposited the mortgage amount under S. 83 of this Act. The mortgagee refused to accept it and the mortgagor thereupon brought a suit for redemption. The suit was decreed, but there was no direction in the decree that the mortgagee should withdraw the amount. The mortgagee appealed from the decree and pending the appeal, he applied to withdraw the amount deposited. It was held by the Allahabad High Court that the withdrawal having been made under S. 83 and not in execution of the decree, the mortgage was extinguished and that the appeal by him became thereby incompetent. Dalsingh's case(4) was distinguished in Subba Rao v. Balusu Buchi(5). In that case also, the mortgagor had sued for redemption, after a deposit under this section, and had obtained a decree. But the decree contained a direction that the mortgagee may withdraw the amount. The mortgagee withdrew the amount subsequent to his filing an appeal against that decree. It was held by the High Court of Madras that the withdrawal was in execution of the decree and did not affect the right of appeal from the decree.

Where the mortgagor has paid into Court the sum ascertained by the first Court pending an appeal by the mortgagee as to the amount due, the mortgagor is entitled to credit for the amount paid though it lapsed to the Government through the failure of the mortgagee to take the money out of Court(6).

14. "In any Court in which he might have instituted such suit."

A deposit under this section must be made in the Court in which a suit for redemption of the mortgaged property might be instituted.

As to the question in what Court a suit for redemption may be instituted, see Ss. 15, 16 and 17 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

15. "To the account of the mortgagee."

The deposit must be made "to the account of the mortgagee". If the person making the deposit, associates with the real mortgagee a third person who is not entitled to any share in the mortgage-money the deposit is invalid, as such association would make it impossible for the real mortgagee to take the money out of Court without the consent of such third person(1). Thus in Debendra Mohan v Sona Kunwar(2) the Allahabad High Court observed "Payment under S. 83 must be a payment to the account of the mortgagee alone, so that the mortgagee may, on receipt of the notice of deposit, apply to the Court by petition and forthwith obtain payment without the concurrence or sanction of any other person. The section confers on mortgagors an exceptional privilege, which other debtors do not enjoy of paying the amount of their debt into Court and so relieving themselves of any further liability. An exceptional privilege of the kind, however, must not be abused, and a mortgagor who does not strictly observe the provisions of the section, but makes a payment which involves the necessity of a decision of the Court as to the rights of parties other than the mortgagee, cannot be regarded as having made the payment within the meaning of the section."

The fact that the depositor acted in good faith in assuming that the third person was entitled to a share in the mortgage-money does not affect the question(3).

According to the provisions of S. 59-A the word "mortgagee" includes person who derive title from a mortgagee viz., his legal representatives and assign(4). Thus, a deposit made, where the mortgagee is dead to the account of his legal representatives, or where the mortgage has been transferred to the account of the transferee, will be a deposit made "to the account of the mortgagee". The mere fact that the legal representatives(5) of the mortgagee and his assignee(6) dispute each other's title does not render the deposit invalid. In many instances, however, owing to disputes among the legal representatives or the assignees the person desiring to make the deposit is not in a position to find out the real person entitled to the mortgage-money. In such cases, he may deposit the money in Court to the account of the estate of the original mortgagee with a request that the Court should pay it to the person who is entitled to recover it. If he had done this he has complied with the provisions of the section(7). If there is a dispute between the rival claimants it will be the business of the person properly entitled, to take steps to satisfy the Court that he is the person to mentioned cases(7) where the mortgagor paid into Court the amount determined by the Court to be due, it was held that it was a good tender although it was ultimately found on appeal that the mortgagee was entitled to a larger amount.

The deposit of a larger sum than that due does not render the deposit invalid. It cannot be said in such a case that "the amount remaining due on the mortgage" has not been deposited within the meaning of the section, for the principle is omne majus continet in se minus (the greater includes the less).(8)

The amount remaining due includes not only the principal sum but also the whole of interest which has become due (9) Section 84 provides that when the full amount remaining due on the mortgage is deposited in Court, interest on the principal money ceases to run "as soon as the mortgagor or such other person as aforesaid has done all that has to be done by him to enable the mortgagee to take such amount out of Court and the notice required by S 83 has been served on the mortgagee". The words "and the notice required by S 83 has been served on the mortgagee" were inserted by S 45 of the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act XX of 1929. Before this amendment in that section it was held that the sufficiency of the deposit was to be determined on the date of the deposit and that if interest was calculated up to the date of the deposit and included in it, the deposit was sufficient and valid (10) See also the undermentioned case (11)

The addition of the words "and the notice required by S 83 has been served on the mortgagee" shows that the mortgagee is now entitled to interest up to the date of service of the notice of deposit on him. The question, however, arises whether it is necessary that interest up to the date of service of notice of the deposit should be calculated before hand and paid into Court along with the principal sum, or, whether it is a sufficient compliance with the section if interest is paid first up to the date of the deposit and then, after service of notice, further interest from the date of the deposit up to the date of service of notice. The question came up for decision before the Allahabad High Court in Kushal Singh v. Ram Kishun, (12) and the Court observed as follows

"By the amending Act XX of 1929 the words "and the notice required by S 83 has been served on the mortgagee" have been added to para 1 of S 84 and the contention is that a deposit to be a valid and legal deposit has got to calculate the interest not only up till the date of the deposit but up till the date that the notice required by S 83 has been served on the mortgagee. The submission on behalf of the plaintiff is that it is impossible to anticipate when notice would be served. For it is conceivable that the notice may sometimes be served even after a year from the date of the deposit and from the time that process is issued to the defendant, and if the law contemplated that a deposit would become an invalid deposit under S 83 if interest up till the date of the service of the notice was not included in the deposit, it would throw an almost impossible burden on the applicant mortgagor and this is not what was contemplated. I feel the money advanced with the court loan advanced on behalf of the plaintiff respondent and I hold the view that if the deposit is a valid deposit on the date on which it was made, namely that if interest has been calculated up till the date of the deposit, then all that the defendant can say when notice is served on him is that some more interest should be allowed to him and that that amount should also be paid to him. The Court on such a plea will find out the amount of the interest and will direct the applicant mortgagor to pay that amount. If the applicant mortgagor refuses to pay that amount, the mortgagee opposite party might be entitled to refuse to accept the amount but he, the mortgagee, cannot refuse to keep the deposit on the ground that the initial deposit was short."

Thus he had done all necessary to enable the mortgagee to that amount out of Court.)

12. AIR 1937 All 706 (707, 708)

In the absence of any local custom or usage, a mortgagee is not entitled to interest both for the day on which the money was advanced and the day on which the deposit is made. He can claim interest for one of the two days (13) In the calculation of interest a fraction of day will be treated as a whole day.(14)

Where a mortgage deed contains a penal clause in case of default of payment of the mortgage-debt within the prescribed period, the mortgagee is entitled to claim only a reasonable compensation in case of such default. In such a case it cannot be said that the whole of the amount calculated according to the penal clause is the amount remaining due on the mortgage. The amount remaining due, in such a case, would be the amount which the Court ultimately considers as reasonable. Therefore, the person, making a deposit in such cases, and the mortgagee in refusing a deposit as being insufficient always act in peril and one or the other may suffer by an adverse decision of the Court.(15) As observed by Varadachariar, J. in Muthiah Chettiar v. Ramani Chetti (16)

"The fact that for one reason or another there may be uncertainty or difference between the parties as to what the amount so due is, cannot be held to preclude the operation of Ss 83 and 84. The difference between the parties may arise either on a question of fact or for a soundly arguable dispute as to part payment, or on a question of law. Like the effect of a penal provision in the document."

It is no doubt true that how much the mortgagee is entitled to receive as reasonable compensation under S 74, Contract Act, will depend upon the discretion of the Court, and either party to the proceedings under S 83 may run a certain amount of risk. It should turn out that the Court in which a suit is subsequently brought takes one view or another as to the correctness of the amount deposited or the amount legally payable under the document. This is an element of risk which many suitors run in various proceedings and does not seem to us to be a justification for denying to the party who is ultimately found to have been right in his mode of taking up the deposit proceeding, the benefit of Section 84, Transfer of Property Act."

As to whether a mortgagee who in order to save the mortgaged property from sale for arrears of Government revenue payable by the mortgagor pays such arrears is entitled to add the amount so paid to the principal money for the purpose of ascertaining the total amount due, see section 12.

Money paid by a mortgagee under S 171, Bengal Tenancy Act, to protect the mortgaged property from a sale which is advertised to take place at the instance of the landlord in execution of a decree for rent, does not become part of the mortgage-money so as to entitle the mortgagee to treat it as included in the amount remaining due on his mortgage. The reason is that the section itself creates a statutory mortgage for such amount in favour of the mortgagee, which gives him priority even over his own mortgage.(17)

A mortgagee who is entitled to possession under the terms of his mortgage is entitled to include in the amount remaining due costs of the suit to obtain possession (18) In the undermentioned case(19) a prior mortgagee obtained a decree on his mortgage without impleading the subsequent mortgagee. The subsequent mortgagee deposited money under this section and claimed redemption. The prior mortgagee claimed the costs of his suit, the costs of the final decree proceedings and the costs of execution. It was held that since the subsequent mortgagee was not added as a party by the mortgagee to his suit, he could not be made liable for costs and that the deposit without the costs was sufficient.

Under S. 76 Cl. (g) there is a statutory liability on a mortgagee in possession to keep accounts of all sums received and spent by him as such mortgagee and to give the mortgagor, at his request, a true copy of it. In the undermentioned case(20) a mortgagor made a deposit but the mortgagee in possession refused to accept the deposit as being insufficient but without making any statement as to the realisations from the property. It was held that the mortgagee could not keep the mortgagor guessing as to the income he derived from the mortgaged property and that the deposit was therefore valid for the purpose of stopping the running of interest. In another case(21) a usufructuary mortgage deed provided that the mortgagee should take the income of the land in lieu of interest but that, if he was prevented from getting possession, interest would be charged at a certain rate. The mortgagee got possession only of a portion of the land. The mortgagor subsequently sold the property to a third person and the purchaser deposited only the principal amount. The mortgagee claimed proportionate interest for the portion of the land of which he did not get possession. It was held that when the stipulation about delivery of possession was broken the mortgagee's right was to claim the whole of the interest agreed upon. The mortgagee was bound to give an account of the income he received from the mortgaged property. Till this was done it was impossible for the purchaser to know whether any interest was due. The deposit was, therefore, under the circumstances, held valid.

As to the question whether a mortgagee is entitled to claim the value of improvements made by him on the mortgaged property along with the principal money as the amount remaining due on his mortgage, see S. 63-A and S. 72.

It may be noted that the Court in which proceedings under this section are taken cannot decide the question of the sufficiency or insufficiency of the deposit, its functions under the section being only ministerial and not judicial (22). That question can be decided in the subsequent suit instituted by the mortgagor or the mortgagee as the case may be.

(Distinction must be drawn between a deposit of the mortgage money under S. 83 of the Transfer of Property Act, without any decree of the Court, and a deposit of the amount declared due under O. 34, R. 7 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In the case of a deposit under S. 83 there is no adjudication by the Court of the amount of mortgage money due. The account has still to be taken. If the mortgagee refuses to accept the money, whether properly or improperly, the mortgagor comes into Court under O. 34, R. 7.

Where a deposit is made under this section, all that the Court has to do is to pay the amount tendered to the mortgagee after completion of the prescribed formalities. It has no power to divert either the whole or part of the deposit to any other use (23).

18. "The Court shall thereupon cause written notice of the deposit to be served on the mortgagee."

When a deposit is made under this section, it is the duty of the Court to cause a written notice of the deposit to be served on the mortgagee. It is no part of the duty of the person making the deposit to get the service effected. That duty is cast by the section on the Court (1). The duty of the person is over when, after making the deposit, he applies for issue of notice, giving the correct address of the mortgagee, (2) and paying process fees (3). The question is now, however, only academic. Under S. 84 as amended by the Act of 1929, interest ceases to run only on service of notice (see S. 84, Note 11).

Although this section provides for a notice of the deposit of the money to the mortgagee, it does not either by implication or expressly provide that such a notice must be served on the mortgagee within the time stipulated in the mortgage deed for the deposit of the mortgage money in order to make the deposit valid. (4)

In the undermentioned case (5) a mortgage deed provided that the redemption thereat should take place in the fallow season. The mortgagor deposited money in Court in the fallow season, but when notice of the deposit was served on the mortgagee crops had been raised on the land. It was held that the deposit was valid and that the time taken in the service of notice would not affect its validity unless the mortgagor himself was responsible for the delay caused in the service of the notice.

Where the serving peon gives the notice under S. 83 to the mortgagee who refuses to grant a receipt therefor, the notice must be taken to have been duly served even if the peon fails to suspend a copy of the notice as required by O. 5, R. 17, C. P. C. (6).

Where the mortgagee is a minor person, there cannot be any valid service of notice so long as a guardian ad litem is not appointed. (7)

19. "Verified in manner prescribed by law for the verification of plaints."

As to verification of plaints, see O. 6, R. 15 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The provision that the petition should be verified in the manner prescribed for verification of plaints, does not, however, warrant the inference that the proceedings under the section are pro-asking to have an account taken and the amount due declared. When a petition is made, it may be expected to include in his claim anything which will be due to him up to the date of his application for redemption.)

ceedings in a regular suit or that the order made upon the petition has the force of a decree in a suit.(1) (See Note 3).

20. Mortgagee must accept deposit in full discharge of amount due.

The words "stating the amount then due on the mortgage and his willingness to accept the money so deposited in full discharge of such amount" make it clear that whatever may be the amount of the debt due according to the calculations of the mortgagee, he will have to accept the amount deposited (if he wishes to accept it at all) in full and not in partial discharge of the liability (1) The mere fact that the mortgagee has stated in his petition for withdrawal of the amount, that he reserves his right to recover further amounts due on the mortgage will not have the effect of preventing the mortgage-debt from being discharged in full (2) The Court, in fact, has no jurisdiction to allow the mortgagee to withdraw the amount upon any other condition unless the mortgagor's consent is obtained thereto (3) As was observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ramachandra Marwari v. Ranee Keshobati Kumari : (4)

"It was not contended, it could not be contended with any show of reason, that either the High Court or the Subordinate Judge had, save with the consent of the mortgagor or his representatives, any jurisdiction to permit the money deposited to be drawn out of Court on any terms other than those imposed by the statute."

As has been seen in Note 3, the object of the section is to enable a mortgage being discharged without any litigation(5) and though it may cause some disadvantage to the mortgagee it confers some benefit also on him inasmuch as he gets the money without any litigation (6)

Where the person making the deposit consents to the mortgagee drawing out the money deposited in part satisfaction of the amount due under the mortgage the withdrawal by the mortgagee will not operate as an extinguishment of the mortgage (7) as would be the case in the absence of such consent.

A mere deposit by itself does not extinguish the mortgage (8) It will be extinguished only in two cases, namely —

- (1) by the mortgagee accepting the deposit in full satisfaction of the claim (9)
- (2) by redemption of the mortgage by the mortgagor or other persons mentioned in S. 91 in a suit for redemption. (10)

But, if the mortgagee does not accept the amount deposited and does not signify his willingness to accept the same in full discharge it is not obligatory on the Court to enquire as to whether the amount deposited by the mortgagor represents the correct amount due under the mortgage (11)

As was observed by their Lordships of the Allahabad High Court in Amadulai v. Abdul Rahim : (12)

The question is whether the making by a mortgagor of a deposit under S. 83 of the Transfer of Property Act ipso facto extinguishes the mortgage in spite of the fact that the mortgagee has refused to accept the deposit. In our opinion that question can only be answered as it was answered by the lower appellate Court that the mortgage is not extinguished. The parties remain in the relationship to one another of mortgagor and mortgagee. It is for the mortgagee to be satisfied with the action of the mortgagor in refusing to accept the money deposited in full satisfaction of the mortgage, to bring a suit for the enforcement of his legal rights. Unless and until he does so successfully the mortgage still subsists."

It follows that the refusal by the mortgagee to accept the deposit in full discharge of the mortgage will not make him where the mortgage is one with possession a trespasser from the date of such refusal (13) The only effect of the refusal is to render him liable to the consequences referred to in Ss 76(i) and 84 (14) The parties continue to have relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee (15) Nor is the mortgagor estopped from applying for relief under the Bengal Money-Lenders Act (1940) merely by reason of his deposit under this section (16) The relation of mortgagor and mortgagee ceases as soon as the mortgagor deposits the money in Court in pursuance of the Court's order in a redemption suit, and the possession of the mortgagee thereafter becomes wrongful possession.(17)

But, in case of mortgagee governed by Travancore Cochin Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act, relation would cease only after compensation for improvements made by mortgagee is also deposited.(18)

The refusal by the mortgagee to accept the deposit puts an end to the proceedings under this section. The Court has no jurisdiction to pay the money to the mortgagee subsequently unless there is a fresh tender by the mortgagor (19) So also where the mortgagee refuses to accept the deposit in full satisfaction of his mortgage, the mere withdrawal of the deposit under different circumstances by him will not operate to discharge the mortgage (20) Also on refusal by mortgagee to accept the amount, the Court does not get jurisdiction to direct delivery of mortgaged property to mortgagor (21) But, in the undermentioned case(22) the High Court declined to interfere with the order of the subordinate Court directing delivery of mortgaged property, in exercise of revisional jurisdiction under S 115, C. P. C. when the mortgagee did not make the petition contemplated by paragraph 2 of S 83 in view of injustice and hardship that would be caused to the mortgagor.

Where the mortgagor sells the equity of redemption to a third person and the latter makes a deposit of the full amount in Court under this section, the mortgagee cannot refuse the deposit and continue in possession on the ground that his mortgagee has not been paid the entire purchase money by the purchaser. In such a case the latter will be liable for mesne profits from the date of the deposit.(23)

Since the mortgagor's depositing the mortgage money into Court operates as a continuous tender, the mortgagee is at liberty to accept it any time before the mortgagor rescinds the tender by withdrawing the amount from court deposit (24)

Even if refusal to take notice of deposit by the husband of the mortgagee is treated as refusal by the mortgagee it would not amount to a refusal to accept the deposit. If the mortgagee files a verified statement accepting the deposit, offers to deliver up mortgage property and deposits the mortgage deed in Court he is entitled to withdraw money (25)

21. "On depositing in the same Court the mortgage-deed and all documents in his possession or power relating to the mortgaged property."

Before the mortgagee can take out the money deposited by the mortgagor, it is necessary for him to deposit in the same Court in which the money is deposited, the mortgage deed and all other documents in his possession or power, relating to the mortgaged property (1). Before the amendment of 1929 (See Note 1) the section provided merely for the deposit of the mortgage deed, but the rules framed by the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay with reference to the section provided also for the deposit of the other documents of title that were in the possession of the mortgagee. The validity of these rules was doubted (2) (See Note 22). The amendment now makes the position clear. (See also Notes on S. 60)

22. The third paragraph.

As seen in Note 1, the whole of the third paragraph was added by the amending Act of 1929. The reason for the amendment is as follows. According to rules framed by the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay with reference to this section, the mortgagee, before he could take out the money deposited under the section, was required to file all documents of title that were in his possession and also a draft reconveyance or an acknowledgment just as he was required to do under S. 60. The validity of these rules was doubted by the learned authors Shephard and Brown in their commentaries on this section on the ground that the functions of the Court under the section being ministerial the Court has no power to take such steps (1). The learned authors observed: "It seems doubtful whether these rules are not ultra vires." It may be suggested that the section was intended for the simplest cases only, and that a provision for the return of documents other than the mortgage deed, and for a reconveyance or acknowledgment was advisedly omitted. The amendment now makes the position clear (2) (See also Notes on S. 60). The paragraph provides that where the mortgagee is in possession of the mortgaged property, the Court shall before paying to him the amount deposited by the mortgagor direct him to deliver possession thereof to the mortgagor. The order directing delivery of possession is permitted to be made in summary proceedings under S 83 and therefore, the requirement of filing separate suit for recovery of possession is dispensed with by S 83 (3). Even though under S 83 of T P Act, on redemption of the mortgage, a mortgagee is bound to deliver possession back to the mortgagor, if lawful tenancy is created by him only symbolic possession could be handed over to the mortgagor and the tenancy would continue (4). The mortgagee is bound to surrender possession only on receipt of notice under the section and hence the mortgagor can claim mesne profits only from the date of service of the notice on the mortgagee (5).

1. Legislative changes.

Section 45 of the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act 1929 XX of 1929 has introduced the following changes in this section :

- (1) The words "in the case of a deposit where no previous tender of such amount has been made" have been added. See Note 9
- (2) The words "and the notice required by S. 83 has been served on the mortgagee" have been substituted for the words "as the case may be" (see Note 11)
- (3) Paragraph 2 is new. See Note 13.
- (4) The words "and such notice has not been given before the making of the tender or deposit as the case may be" have been added to the last paragraph. See Note 14

2. Scope of the Section.

After the mortgage money has become payable and before the right to redeem the mortgage is barred, the mortgagor has the following alternative remedies open to him :

- (1) he may pay or tender the mortgage money to the mortgagee at a proper time and place under S. 60.
- (2) he may deposit the amount in Court under S. 83 or
- (3) he may bring a suit for redemption under S. 91.(1)

When the mortgagee accepts the payment under the first alternative or the deposit in the second alternative, the mortgage debt is fully discharged. But where the mortgagee refuses to accept such tender or deposit this section comes into operation. It penalises the mortgagee for his refusal to accept the money when offered and the penalty is the cessation of interest on the principal amount(2)—

- (1) in the case of a tender, from the date of tender (See Note 8) and
- (2) in the case of a deposit in Court —

- (a) as soon as the mortgagor or such other person as is referred to in the section has done all that has to be done by him to enable the mortgagee to take such amount out of Court (see Note 10), and,

(b) the notice required by Section 83 has been served on the mortgagee (see Note 11)

The reason why there is a distinction made between a tender and a deposit, in respect of the date from which interest is to cease to run is that a tender to be valid must be made to the person who is entitled to it. The mortgagor chooses the person and makes the tender. There remains nothing more to be done in the case. If the person is the right person interest ceases from the date of the tender. But where a mortgagor deposits money in Court, he had something more to do than merely make a deposit. He must also enable the person entitled to the deposit to take it out of Court. Hence a duty is cast upon the mortgagor "to do all that has to be done to enable the mortgagee to take the amount out of Court,"(3) and, as added by the amendment to see further that the notice of deposit is served on the mortgagee, Interest ceases only from the time when he fulfils both these conditions.

A mere deposit by the mortgagor under S. 83 does not extinguish the mortgage where the mortgagee does not accept it (4). The only effect of the refusal is to render him liable to the consequences referred to in this section and S. 76(i). See S. 83, Note 20.

3. "Mortgagor or such other person as aforesaid"

This expression refers to S. 83 which provides that a deposit may be made by the mortgagor or any other person who is entitled to institute a suit for redemption.(1) A tender or deposit must, in order to have the effect of stopping the interest, be made only by these persons or their authorised agents (2) and not by a stranger (3). In a case before the Act, it was held by the Calcutta High Court that a tender by one or some of the mortgagors only is not valid unless made with the consent of all of them.(4)

A mortgagee is justified in not accepting the deposit made by a purchaser, of a portion of the hypotheca when the title of the latter is in dispute.(5)

Where the person making a tender or a deposit is a person incompetent to contract, such tender or deposit must be made by a legal curator of the property of such person, and when there is no such curator, by a guardian ad litem appointed by the Court on his behalf (6).

When a tender has been made by the mortgagor, the benefit of it can be taken by any person, other than the mortgagor, who has instituted a suit for redemption. Thus, in A.M.K.M. Chettiar v. A.K.M.L. Chettiar(7) a tender of the mortgage-money was made by the mortgagor and was refused by the mortgagee. A subsequent mortgagee thereafter sued to redeem the mortgage and it was held that the subsequent mortgagee could claim the benefit of the tender by the mortgagor and that he was not liable to pay interest after the date of the tender.

In L. Khushal Chand v Gauri Shankar,⁽⁸⁾ it has been held by the Lahore High Court that where an Official Assignee in insolvency of the mortgagor sells the mortgaged property and holds the purchase-money realised from the sale, he does so as an administrator of the estate of the mortgagor and not as an agent of the mortgagee. Interest on the mortgage not paid off by him runs therefore, until the date of payment.

4. "Mortgagee."

By virtue of S 59A the expressions "mortgagor" and "mortgagee" in this section will include persons deriving title from them respectively. Thus, the term "mortgagee" would include an assignee of the mortgage from the original mortgagee⁽¹⁾ or, where the original mortgagee dies, his heir or successor in interest, or the executor or administrator, or a person holding a succession certificate in respect of the debt.⁽²⁾ See also Section 59A, Note 3

5. "Has tendered."

A tender is an offer of performance of a promise by the promisor to the promisee. The rule regarding tender has been dealt with in S 38 of the Contract Act⁽¹⁾, the material portion of which runs as follows :

"Every such offer must fulfil the following conditions :

- (1) it must be unconditional;
- (2) it must be made at a proper time and place and under such circumstances that the person to whom it is made may have a reasonable opportunity of ascertaining that the person by whom it is made is able and willing there and then to do the whole of what he is bound by his promise to do;
- (3) if the offer is an offer to deliver anything to the promisee, the promisee must have a reasonable opportunity of seeing that the thing offered is the thing which the promisor is bound by his promise to deliver".⁽²⁾

(A) Tender must be unconditional

A tender must not be accompanied by any condition⁽³⁾ the principle being that a party shall not clog his offer with conditions to the prejudice of the other party (4) Thus, the following are not valid tenders :

- (1) Tender on condition of delivery of title deeds to which the party tendering is not entitled (5)
- (2) Tender on condition that the creditor should accept it as the whole of the balance due (6) The creditor should not be precluded by the acceptance from afterwards claiming that a larger amount is due. (7)
- (3) Tender of a larger amount than is due with a demand that the creditor should change and give back the balance. (8)
- (4) Tender of one entire sum for several debts of unequal amounts separately demanded by the creditor. It cannot be considered a valid tender in respect of one of such debts. The creditor must have the opportunity of having the amount due by a particular debtor, without taking what was offered in respect of the other debts also (9)
- (5) Tender of a part of an entire demand. (10)

In Prannath Roy Chowdhury v. Ram Rutton Rao (11) it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that a tender under protest will not defeat it where the words of protest may reasonably be regarded as idle words, but that a payment into Court of the mortgage-money accompanied by a petition disputing the mortgagee's title to foreclosure and expressing an intention to sue the mortgagee to recover back the very money tendered is not a valid tender. This view does not seem to be in conformity with the English cases which hold that a protest does not render the tender conditional but that it merely imports that the party tendering does not acquiesce in the demand of the creditors and does not preclude himself from recovering the money back, if he could (12) In the undermentioned cases (13) a tender under protest was held not bad in law. In another case (14) a tender reserving a right in the party to dispute the amount due was held not to be a conditional tender.

In Cole v. Black (15) it was held that a party tendering money could not in general demand a receipt for the money. But where money was sent by cheque with a letter asking for a receipt it was held in Jones v. Arthur (16) that the tender was not bad on the ground that it was conditional: the party tendering put the cheque out of his power by sending it in a letter and merely requested the creditor to send him a receipt which was not a condition. But a demand for a stamped receipt where the party tendering had himself to bear the cost of the stamp (17) or for a receipt for the full balance due (18) was held to be a conditional tender. In Jagat Sarini Dasi v. Naha Gopal Chaki (19) it was held by the High Court of Calcutta that the asking for a receipt did not vitiate the tender. Under S. 30 of the Stamp Act, 1899 a person receiving any money exceeding Rs. 20 in satisfaction or part satisfaction of a debt is bound on demand to give a duly stamped receipt. A tender therefore of more than Rs. 20 with a demand for a stamped receipt will, it is conceived, be a valid tender in this country.

(B) Tender must be made at the proper time and place.

A tender must be made at the proper time and place. The proper time for a tender of the mortgage-money is after the mortgage-money becomes due. A tender before that time is premature and does not stop the running of interest. (20)

A tender must be made at the proper time of the day. What is such time is a question on fact depending upon the facts and circumstances of the particular case (21). In an old case it was held that a notice of payment at 3 O'clock is not forfeited where there is an attendance for payment before 4 O'clock, the principle being that upon an appointment at a given hour, an attendance at any part of the hour is sufficient (22).

Where a mortgage executed on 1-3-66 was redeemable only in the Chaitra month and the usufructs thereof was to be appropriated for interest the deposit of the principal sum on 4th April 67 complied with all the legal requirements since the paddy for 66 would have been harvested by the year end and no interest was due on the date of deposit (23).

As regards the place, the English rule is that, in absence of any place fixed by the contract between the parties, the debtor must seek out the creditor (24) This rule has been followed in India in the undermentioned cases (25) Section 49 of the Contract Act, 1872, however, lays down a rule for the appointment of a place of performance where it has not been fixed by the contract and it has been held that that rule is intended to apply both to the delivery of goods and to the payment of money. (26)

(C) Money must be ready to be paid.

A mere readiness or willingness on the part of the mortgagor to pay, whether communicated (27) or not (28) to the mortgagee, is not a valid tender. It must be shown that the mortgagor was actually ready and willing to pay the money then and there if it could be received by the mortgagee (29) The money must be in sight and at hand and capable of immediate delivery (30) It should be actually produced (31) Where A offered B a sum of money mentioning the amount offered and held the money twisted up in bank notes in his hand, it was held that it was a sufficient tender but that it would not have been so if the amount had not been mentioned (32)

But the actual production of the money may be dispensed with by express declaration or equivalent act of the creditor (33) Actual production is not also necessary where the creditor has refused to receive it on the ground that more is due (34) or that it is too late (35) As was observed by Sir James Wigram, V. (F) Waiver of irregularity in tender.

A creditor can waive his objection to an irregularity of the tender in which case, the tender will be good A specific objection to a tender will amount to a waiver of other objections (47) As has been seen already, the actual production of the money may be dispensed with by the creditor in which case he cannot afterwards object to the tender on the ground of non-production of the amount An objection to the form of the tender may similarly be waived by the creditor Thus where he rejects the tender not on the ground of its nature or form, but on some other ground such as, that a larger sum is due, the objection as to form would be deemed to be waived (48) Where on the tender of a cheque or in country bank notes the creditor, without objecting to the nature of the tender, refuses it on the ground that more is due, the tender is good (49) Where A demanded the balance due and costs, 13s and 4d and the debtor, B, sent a Bank bill for the balance but not for the costs, and A wrote in answer that he would not receive the bank bill unless the costs also were paid, but did not return the bill, it was held that the objection as to the tender not being in money was waived (50) A tender of a larger amount than is due with a demand for a change will be a good tender if the creditor does not object to it on that account but only demands a larger sum (51)

(G) Plea of tender.

A plea of tender is, in practice, very seldom successful (52)

It is no objection to a tender that the creditor had previously put the matter into his attorney's hands. (53)

6. "Deposited in Court."

The deposit in this section is one which is made in Court under S. 83 and hence to be valid must comply with all the provisions laid down in that section (1) Thus, where a mortgagor presented a petition for deposit without paying actual money and after some days deposited the amount including interest only up to the date of the application, it was held that it was not a valid deposit under S. 83 and hence could not stop the running of interest (2)

7. "The amount remaining due on the mortgage."

As distinguished from the expression "mortgage-money" in S. 60, the expression "the amount remaining due on the mortgage" used in this section is very wide and covers any just allowances or costs which can be tacked on to the mortgage-money under the ordinary law of mortgage (1) A tender or deposit in Court must include the whole of the balance that is due on the mortgage (2) The reason is that the lender is entitled to claim the whole of the amount due to him at once and to decline to accept payment in instalments in the absence of a stipulation to the contrary (3) A tender of larger amount than what is actually due will be valid, on the principle that the greater includes the smaller; (4) but a tender or deposit of an amount which falls short of the balance due is invalid and will not stop the running of interest (5) The extent of insufficiency, whether it is Re. 1 or Rs.

100 or Rs. 1,000, does not make any difference.(6) The maxim de minimis non curat lex (the law cares not for small or trivial things) does not apply to tenders.(7) But where it is not possible to ascertain the exact amount due, the position may be different. In the undermentioned case(8) where the mortgage bond contained a penal clause and the mortgagee was consequently entitled only to a reasonable compensation, it was held that such a compensation could not be determined with great accuracy and hence a tender falling short by Rs. 2-3-0 of the amount was held valid for the purpose of stopping interest.

In Bhabani Charan v. Kadambini Dassee(9) A executed a usufructuary mortgage in favour of B on condition that B should take the income of the land in lieu of interest and should deliver possession on repayment of the principal. A certain amount was also fixed as the annual interest. In case A failed to deliver possession to B, B was, however, given possession of only half the land mortgaged and later on, the whole was sold to C, who obtained possession also from B after the latter had been in possession for two years. C tendered the principal to B who refused to accept it and, thereupon, C deposited the same in Court. The question was whether the deposit only of the principal was sufficient to prevent the interest running. It was held that it was sufficient inasmuch as the mortgagee was bound to account for the profits of the period of two years and as until he did so, it was not possible for C to know whether there was any interest due on the amount. The profits of the land were also found to be nearly sufficient to cover the interest at the stipulated rate in default of delivery of possession.

A tender or a deposit of a part of the amount due, even though under bona fide belief that it is the real amount due, or under an honest mistake in calculation, is not sufficient to stop interest running, even on the amount so tendered or deposited.(10) As remarked by Lindsay, J C, in Gouri Shankar v. Abu Jafar Khan(11) "there is no vid media in the matter, either a full tender is made in which case interest stops altogether, or an inadequate tender is made which the mortgagee is at liberty to ignore and which does not affect his right to recover interest at the contract rate up till the date of the suit."

8. When interest ceases in case of tender.

The general principle is that when a "valid tender" has been made, interest on the debt ceases to run (1) Under the English law, interest will cease to run on a debt only so long as the money is "kept dead" or unemployed by the tenderer and ready at all times to be paid to the creditor as soon as demanded by him (2) If the creditor files a suit for the recovery of the debt, the amount tendered must be deposited in Court. In other words, a plea of tender must be followed by a deposit in Court.(3)

In this country there has been a difference of opinion expressed on both these points, firstly in relation to debts other than mortgage debts, and secondly in relation to mortgage-debts

(A) Non-mortgage-debts.

According to one class of cases, the amount tendered must be kept unemployed(4) and further that such amount should be deposited in Court as soon as a suit is filed for the recovery of the debt (5) According to a second class of cases there must, no doubt, be continued readiness to pay the amount whenever demanded, but the deposit in Court is not necessary(6).

(B) Mortgage-debts.

According to one class of cases it is necessary even in the case of mortgage-debts that the tender should be kept good and that the mortgagor should not profit by the refusal of the tender by the mortgagee (7) In the undermentioned case(8) it was held by the Rangoon High Court following the decision of the Bombay High Court in Haji Abdul Rahman v. Haji Noor Mohammed(9) that a plea of tender must be accompanied by a deposit in Court in order to stop the running of interest. The decision of the Bombay High Court was, however, before this Act was made applicable to the Bombay Presidency, and was based upon the English law. The same view was held by Calcutta High Court in the undermentioned case.(10) On the other hand, in Velayuda Naicker v. Haider Hussain Khan(11) in which the mortgagor utilised for his own purposes the money tendered, after its refusal by the mortgagee, and it was contended on the strength of English authorities that the money must be kept ready for payment in order to stop the running of interest, the High Court of Madras observed :

"We are bound by the terms of S. 84 of the Transfer of Property Act, and, as already pointed out under that section, "interest shall cease from the date of tender." The word tender does not in itself imply that he must have been always ready to pay the money."

In Arunachalam Pillai v. Govindaswami(12) the same High Court observed : "It is clear from S. 84 that in mortgages, a tender alone has the effect of stopping interest from the date of the tender", suggesting thereby that such tender need not be accompanied by deposit in Court.

From the language of the first paragraph of the section itself it does not appear that continued readiness to pay or deposit in Court following the tender is essential in order to stop interest running. A mere tender of the amount appears to be sufficient to stop interest from the date of such tender. This, however, seems to be inconsistent with the principles underlying the doctrine of tender in English law. The rule that the creditor is not entitled to interest where a valid tender of the amount by the debtor has been refused by him rests upon the equitable consideration that the debtor who has lost the use of his money by reason of the conduct of the creditor, cannot at the same time be called upon to pay interest to the creditor. It follows from this that if the debtor does have the use of his money the equitable consideration does not apply and the mortgagee ought to be entitled to interest. The principle stated above has been expressly recognised by the Legislature with reference to deposit in Court (which is only another form of tender) in the first proviso to the section. It is difficult to see why the first paragraph has not also been amended in conformity with the above principles, and with the decisions on the subject.

In Pandurang v. Dadabhoy(13) the executors of a deceased mortgagee demanded by notice the payment of the mortgage-debt within three months. The mortgagors were ready with the money but could not pay the same to the executors as they had not obtained probate. Before the expiry of the period in the notice, the mortgagors intimated by notice that money was kept ready for payment. It was held that it was a valid tender and that interest ceased to run from the date of expiry of period stated in the notice of demand.

In the undermentioned case(14) the mortgagor sent a notice to the mortgagee offering to redeem the mortgaged properties but the mortgagee declined the offer characterising the notice as absurd. The mortgagor did not actually tender or deposit the amount. It was held that interest did not cease to run from the date of giving notice.

Even if it was due to the default of the mortgagee that the mortgagor was unaware as to what exactly was the amount due under the mortgage the consequence of a breach of this duty on the part of the mortgagee would not be the loss of interest.(15)

9. Deposit where no previous tender has been made.

Where a valid tender is refused by the mortgagee, interest ceases to run from the date of tender. Very often after a proper tender is refused, the party tendering deposits the amount in Court. It is not, however, this deposit that is dealt with by this section. The deposit in Court in such cases merely shows the continued readiness to pay on the part of the mortgagor, which is a necessary element in a valid tender.

The deposit dealt with in this section is one where there was no previous tender of the amount. The distinction between this deposit and the one referred to above is made clear by the introduction of the words "in case of a deposit where no previous tender of such amount has been made".

10. "Has done all that has to be done.....out of Court."

As has been seen in Note 2, the mere fact that the amount has been deposited is not sufficient by itself, to stop interest running. The mortgagor has to do something more. He has to do all that is necessary to enable the mortgagee to take the money out of Court. The nature of the duty on the part of the mortgagor varies according as the case falls within one or the other of the following categories:

(a) where the mortgagee is an adult person;

(b) where he is a person incompetent to contract;

(c) where the mortgagee is dead and is succeeded by rival claimants, out of whom the mortgagor is unable to find the rightful legal representative.

(A) Where the mortgagee is an adult person.

This case presents no difficulty. The mortgagor has simply to deposit the amount to the account of the mortgagee, give his correct address and pay batta for the issue of notice to him. When he has done this he has done all that is necessary to enable the mortgagee to take money out of Court.(1)

(B) Where the mortgagee is a person incompetent to contract.

In this case it is necessary that a guardian ad litem should be appointed for him to act on his behalf and to take the money out of Court. (2) Section 103 lays down the procedure to be followed in such a case. It provides that an application for the appointment of a guardian ad litem for the purpose of taking out the deposit should be made and that the provisions of O. 32 of the Civil Procedure Code apply to such an application. (3) It is obviously the duty of the mortgagor to comply with these requirements. Further, inasmuch as the mere fact of making an application for the appointment of a guardian will not enable a person to withdraw the money from Court, until he is actually appointed guardian, it is incumbent upon the mortgagor to see that a proper guardian has been appointed for the minor. It is only after the appointment of the guardian that the mortgagor can be said to have done all that is required of him to enable the mortgagee to take the money out of Court under this section.(4)

The deposit becomes effective only from the date of such appointment (5) In Sea Saran v Ram Lagan(6) the mortgagor made an application under Section 83 with the necessary deposit and notice was issued to the minor mortgagee "under the guardianship of" his father. There was no separate application for the appointment of a guardian and in fact no guardian was appointed. The notice was not served and the application was dismissed. In the subsequent suit for redemption it was held that the procedure was irregular and could not bind the minor mortgagee. Where there are major and minor mortgagees, interest will not cease to run simply because there was service of notice upon the major mortgagees when no guardian ad litem was appointed for the minor mortgagees and there was therefore no valid service of notice upon the minor mortgagees (7) See also S. 83 Note 16 and S. 103 Note 2.

(C) Where the mortgagor does not know who is the legal representative.

Where the original mortgagee is dead and the mortgagor is unable to find out who the real legal representative of the mortgagee is, owing to disputes between the rival claimants to the mortgagee's estate, he may deposit the money into Court with the request that the Court should pay it to the person who is entitled to recover it. If he does that he has done all that is required to him to enable that person to recover the money (8) In such a case it is the business of the person entitled to take steps to satisfy the Court that he is the person to whom the money should be paid (9) The fact that there is a dispute among the claimants to the estate of the deceased mortgagee does not affect the validity of the deposit, nor can the mortgagor be made to suffer for no fault of his (10) As observed by the Allahabad High Court in Ram Gopal v Lachman Das, (11)

"It would be most unfair to deprive the mortgagor of his right to redeem the mortgaged property merely because there was a dispute between a number of people about the right to succeed to the interests of the mortgagee. Those people might take a considerable time in having their disputes settled and it might be years before the mortgagor was able to know to whom the money should be paid. For all that time he would be deprived of the power which is expressly given to him by statute to redeem the property in a summary way by depositing the amount due in Court. Although he might be prepared to pay the money he would still be compelled to pay interest upon it" (12)

Where a mortgagor deposits money into Court to the account of certain named persons, the Court cannot pay the amount to one or some of them only, even though the others are found not entitled to it. By so naming the persons, the mortgagor really prevents the rightful claimants from recovering the money due to them, (13) and cannot, therefore, be said to have done all that was necessary to enable the mortgagee to take the amount out of Court. Thus, where a mortgagor had deposited money in Court to the account of A and B, two sons of the deceased mortgagee, and it was found out that by the custom of primogeniture in the mortgagee's family only A was entitled to the amount, it was held that the mortgagor himself had made it impossible for A to recover the money by associating with him B, a person not entitled to the money and hence the deposit was not valid so as to stop the running of interest (14). The deposit in such cases should be to the account of the deceased mortgagee's estate with the request that it should be paid to anyone who can establish his title to it. The deposit then is a valid one even if some of the persons named in the petition are found to have no title to the money as the mortgagor has done all he has to do to enable the rightful claimants to take the money out of Court (15). See also S. 83, Note 15.

11. Service of notice on mortgagee.

Prior to the amendment of the present section in 1929 it was not necessary that mortgagee should be served with notice of the deposit in order that interest may cease to run (1). It was sufficient, where the mortgagee was an adult person, if the mortgagor made a deposit of a sufficient amount and gave the correct address of the mortgagee and paid batta for the issue of a notice to him (2). Where the mortgagee was a minor, it was sufficient for the mortgagor making the deposit to have a guardian ad litem appointed for the mortgagee and interest ceased to run on such appointment being made (3). The mortgagor, in such cases, was allowed by the High Court of Allahabad to make an additional deposit of the further interest accruing up to the date of such appointment (4). The effect of the present amendment is that interest does not cease to run "as soon as the mortgagor has done all he had to do to enable the mortgagee to take such amount out of Court." It ceases to run only when, in addition, the mortgagee is served with the notice of deposit. It is on the date of service of such notice that the interest ceases to run under the amended section (5).

5. AIR 1952 Trav-Co 236 (236) (DB). (Under S. 83 deposit of mortgage amount in Court by the mortgagor will operate as a valid tender of mortgage money only when notice of deposit is given to the mortgagee.)

Notice must be served on the mortgagee when he is an adult person, and on his guardian ad litem when he is a minor or a person incompetent to contract.(6) Where the mortgagee does not reside in the district in which the mortgaged property or some part of it is situate notice on his agent holding a general power of attorney from the mortgagee will be deemed sufficient service under S. 102. (See also Notes on S. 102 for the service of notice where no person or agent on whom notice can be served is to be found or is known.)

Where the original mortgagee is dead, notice must be served on his legal representatives. If there is any dispute among the claimants of the estate of the deceased, the deposit may be made to the credit of the estate of the deceased and notice should be issued to all the known rival claimants. It is essential under this section that all the persons who are entitled to recover the money must be served with notice, although it may happen that those who are not so entitled may be served with the notice. Interest in such cases ceases from the date of service of notice on those who are entitled to the money.(7)

In Kushal Singh v. Ram Kishan Singh(8) a mortgagor deposited in Court an amount sufficient to cover the principal and interest up to the date of deposit. The mortgagee was served with notice after some time but refused to withdraw the amount. The mortgagor thereupon brought a suit for redemption and the mortgagee contended that as under the amended section interest did not cease to run until the service of notice on him, the deposit should have included interest up to that date and hence was insufficient. It was held by the High Court of Allahabad that it was not contemplated by this section that the deposit would become an invalid deposit under S. 83, if interest up to the date of the service of the notice was not included in the deposit. It was further observed as follows:

"If the deposit is a valid deposit on the date on which it was made namely that if interest has been calculated up till the date of deposit then all that the defendant can say when notice is served on him is that some more interest should be allowed to him and that that amount should also be paid to him. The Court on such a plea will find out the amount of the interest and will direct the applicant mortgagor to pay that amount. If the applicant-mortgagor refuses to pay that amount, the mortgagee opposite party might be entitled to refuse to accept the amount but he (the mortgagee) cannot refuse to accept the deposit on the ground that the initial deposit was short.

12. Deposit is only a kind of tender.

A deposit in Court under S. 83 is, as has been seen in Notes 2 and 8 on S. 83, only a special form of tender (1). It is a tender through Court and consists of two things, an actual deposit in Court and, notice to the person entitled to withdraw it from the Court (2). Hence, where there are both a deposit in Court and notice to the mortgagee and the mortgagee refuses to accept the same, the natural consequences of refusal of a valid tender follow and interest ceases to run on the principal if the deposit is kept in Court (3). Where a mortgagor deposits money in Court but withdraws the application before the notice of the deposit has been served on the person entitled to withdraw it, it is not a proper tender as there is no notice and hence interest will not cease to run even if the money is kept in Court.(4) 13. Withdrawal of deposit by the mortgagor.

Prior to the amendment of the section in 1929 there was a conflict of opinion as to the effect of the withdrawal by the mortgagor of the amount deposited. One view was that when once the mortgagor deposited the amount due and the mortgagee, on receipt of the notice of deposit, refused to accept it, the mortgagor had done all that he had to do, that consequently interest ceased to run from the date of the deposit and that the subsequent withdrawal of it by the mortgagor could not render him liable for interest from the date of withdrawal (1) The view rested on the principle that a deposit was only a special kind of tender and that a refusal by the mortgagee of the tender was sufficient to stop the running of interest. The mortgagor's willingness and continued readiness to pay was presumed and the onus of proving the contrary was cast on the mortgagee (2) According to the contrary view this section pre-supposed the continuance of the deposit in Court in order to stop the running of interest and the subsequent withdrawal of the amount by the mortgagor even after the refusal of the mortgagee, had the effect of rendering the mortgagor liable for interest from the date of such withdrawal (3) By the introduction of a new paragraph in the section the Legislature has given sanction to the latter view (4) and has thus set the conflict at rest. The amendment is not retrospective in its effect. (5)

Where the mortgagor who had deposited the amount under S. 83 filed a suit for redemption and withdrew the deposit and redeposited it in pursuance with the preliminary decree it must be held that it was a case of continuance of deposit till obtaining of possession and was proof of readiness and willingness to pay and the mortgagor will be entitled to mesne profits from the date of the original deposit. (6)

14. Notice before payment or tender.

Under the English law it is a settled rule of practice that after a default has been made by the mortgagor to pay the mortgage money in accordance with the stipulation for redemption, he must give the mortgagee either six calendar months' notice of his intention to pay off the mortgage money or six months' interest in lieu of the notice (1) 'It (i.e. the rule) rests entirely on custom, observes Shadwell, V C, in Browne v Lockhart, (2) "and the custom is founded on this namely, that it is but fair that the party who has lent his money upon the security should have a reasonable opportunity before the transaction is put an end to, of finding some other security on which he may lay out his money when it has been repaid to him." If after giving the notice of his intention to pay off the mortgage, the mortgagor does not do so within the time specified in the notice, the mortgagee is again entitled to a six months' notice or the interest for the period in lieu thereof (3) The rule of notice before payment is not, however, applicable to mortgages by deposit of title deeds as they are regarded as debts of a temporary nature. (4)

This Act does not require a mortgagor, as a matter of a law, to give the mortgagee notice of his intention to pay the mortgage money before he makes a tender or deposit in Court, but it recognises, as valid, a contract by the parties stipulating for such a notice (5) Where there is such a contract, this section and S 60 recognise the liability of the mortgagor to pay interest in lieu of notice in case he fails to give such notice before a tender or deposit in Court (6) This has been made clear by the addition of the words "and such notice has not been given before the making of the tender or deposit as the case may be" in the last paragraph of this section. In fact the provisions of this section do not apply to the case until the agreed notice has been given by the mortgagor (7)

Where in a usufructuary mortgage deed there is a provision that the mortgage money should be deposited whenever the mortgagor desires to deposit it only on the last day of Baisakh every year and there exists no contract in the deed for a notice, by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, before the making of the deposit as is contemplated by the last para of S 84, nor is there a provision in the deed as to when the notice of the deposit as contemplated by the second para of S 83, should be given and the notice of the deposit on the last day of Baisakh being impossible, that being the only date when the deposit has to be made in terms of the contract, a notice of deposit under S 83 served within Jeth of the year before the commencement of the agricultural season on the 1st of Asarh of the year is sufficient. (8)

15. Notice before payment is not necessary when mortgagee demands mortgage money.

The English rule of six months' notice by the mortgagor of his intention to pay off the mortgage is not applicable, even in England, where the mortgagee himself demands the payment of his mortgage debt or takes steps to compel the payment thereof. (1) In such a case the mortgagee is bound to accept the principal and the interest tendered by the mortgagor, even if there is some delay in complying with his notice, a mere failure to pay within the time prescribed in the notice does not render the mortgagor liable to pay an additional six months' interest (2) This view was followed in a Bombay case, Nadershaw Sheriarji v Shirinbai Bapuji (3) where the parties had agreed to give three months' notice before payment of the mortgage money. The mortgagee gave the mortgagor a notice demanding his money within three months but due to some pending suits no action was taken upon this notice by mutual consent of the parties. A tender was made two years after the expiry of the period fixed in the notice and it was held, that in the circumstances of the case, the delay was excusable and that, it did not render the mortgagor liable to pay three months' additional interest in lieu of notice.

16. Refusal of tender and costs.

A mortgagee is entitled to his general cost in a suit for redemption or foreclosure, unless he forfeits the right by some improper defence or other misconduct (1) The contract between the mortgagor and the mortgagee is understood to make the mortgage a security not only for the principal interest and such other ordinary charges and expenses as are usually provided for in the instrument but also for the costs properly incidental to a suit for redemption or foreclosure. Thus, the mortgagee's right to costs rests substantially on contract between the parties and can only be lost or curtailed by such inequitable conduct on the part of the mortgagee as may amount to a violation or neglect of his duty under the contract (2) An improper refusal of a valid tender which renders a suit for redemption necessary deprives a mortgagee of his costs, he may even be ordered to pay the costs of the mortgagor (3) So also a suit for foreclosure by a mortgagee who has refused a proper

The mere fact that a mortgagee claims more than what he is entitled to will not, however, deprive him of his costs.(5)

See also Notes on Civil Procedure Code. O 34, R. 10 in the Appendix.

17. Plea as to insufficiency of tender or deposit.

If a mortgagee denies the fact of a tender, he cannot subsequently raise a plea that the amount tendered was not sufficient or that it was not legally valid (1) So also where a mortgagee admits that the amount deposited was the amount due on the date of deposit but was refused by him on some other ground, he cannot, in a subsequent suit on the mortgage, allege that the amount deposited was insufficient.(2)

The question of sufficiency or insufficiency is a question of fact, which cannot be determined without going into evidence and, hence, cannot be raised for the first time in second appeal. Similarly, the question whether money was kept ready or not after tender is also a question of fact which cannot be raised for the first time in second appeal.(3)

The finding that there was a valid tender of money by the mortgagor is a finding of fact and cannot be attacked in second appeal.(4)

18. Section 14 of Bombay Regulation V of 1827 and Section 84.

As has been seen in Note 7 a tender or deposit must, under this section, be of the entire amount due on the mortgage, in order that interest may cease to run. But S. 14 of Bombay Regulation V of 1827 which is still in force in the Bombay Presidency lays down that "If a debtor can prove that he has tendered the whole or any portion of the amount due, all further interest shall cease on the amount tendered." As the said section is not expressly repealed by this Act, it is not affected by this section by virtue of S. 2, Cl. (a). It has, therefore, been held that in the Bombay Presidency a tender by a mortgagor even of a partial amount due will stop the running of interest under S. 14 of the abovementioned Regulation (1) The tender must, however, be valid. A conditional tender asking the mortgagee to accept the partial tender in full discharge of the mortgage debt is invalid and hence inoperative to stop interest even under S. 14 of the said Regulation (2)

19. Tender and deposit in possessory mortgages.

Where the mortgage is one with possession, and a valid tender or deposit is made of the mortgage amount, interest will of course cease to run on the mortgage amount, from the date of the tender or in the case of a deposit from the date of service of notice on the mortgagee. The consequence of this is that the mortgagee will be liable to the mortgagor from such date for mesne profits (1) On deposit of the principal amount interest ceases from the date of tender. If the mortgagor obtains possession of the property from a tenant the mortgagee's suit for injunction and possession cannot be decreed (2) Of course, the deposit must be kept good. If the mortgagor withdraws the money from Court, he will, from that date, be disentitled to mesne profits (3)

Where the principal amount had been deposited by mortgagor in full after serving notice under S. 83, the interest on principal money ceased from date of deposit by mortgagor, and notwithstanding the subsistence of mortgage, the mortgagee lost the right to get into possession of mortgaged house as usufructuary mortgagee, when mortgagor himself obtained possession of house from the tenant, father of mortgagee. 1. Legislative changes.

The present section has been substituted by S. 46 of the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act 20 of 1929 for the original section which ran as follows :

"Besides the mortgagor, any of the following persons may redeem, or institute a suit for redemption of, the mortgaged property :

- (a) any person (other than the mortgagee of the interest sought to be redeemed) having any interest in or charge upon the property;
- (b) any person having any interest in or charge upon the right to redeem the property.
- (c) any surety for the payment of the mortgage debt or any part thereof,
- (d) the guardian of the property of a minor mortgagor on behalf of such minor;
- (e) the committee or other legal curator of a lunatic or idiot mortgagor on behalf of such lunatic or idiot
- (f) the judgment-creditor of the mortgagor, when he has obtained execution by attachment of the mortgagor's interest in the property;

- (g) a creditor of the mortgagor who has, in a suit for the administration of his estate, obtained a decree for sale of the mortgaged property.”

The Special Committee in proposing the change observed as follows:

“Section 91 specifies persons who, in addition to a mortgagor, are entitled to redeem. Clauses (a) and (b) can be suitably combined in one clause. Clauses (d) and (e) are superfluous and, in our opinion, should be omitted. An attachment does not create any interest such as a charge or a loan in the property attached (ILR 29 Cal 428, 32 Mad 429) and there is no reason why an attaching creditor should have the right of redemption. We, therefore, propose to omit clause (1).”

2. Scope of the section.

Section 60 deals with the mortgagor's right to redeem the mortgaged property and this section enumerates the persons who, in addition to the mortgagor, are entitled to redeem or institute a suit for redemption of the mortgaged property (1). The right of redemption conferred by the section on other persons is, however, the same right which the mortgagor possesses under S. 60 and not a different kind of right (2). The persons who are given the right of redemption under the section may be broadly grouped under two heads, i.e. persons having an interest in or charge upon the mortgaged property or in or upon the right to redeem the same (Cl. (a)) and persons who have no interest or charge upon the mortgaged property or in or upon the right to redeem it but who are given a personal right to redeem on some special grounds (Cl. (b) and (c)) (3).

A co-mortgagor can redeem the entire mortgage without impleading other mortgagors as co-mortgagors are not necessary parties in a suit for redemption (4).

Where a person who has no interest in the equity of redemption or the property mortgaged pays off the mortgage and goes into possession a suit for possession against him by the owner of property without paying the mortgage money is maintainable. This is so on the basis that the person going into possession is a mere volunteer and not subordinated to the rights of mortgagee (5).

Though the rights redeemed under S. 91 are not made applicable to the State of Punjab and Haryana, but the right to redeem and principles of subrogation being principles of good conscience and equity they can be made applicable to cases arising in these States (6). A usufructuary mortgage can be redeemed only by operating another document and not by putting up a story that it was orally redeemed unless redemption by a subsequent deed and receipt for consideration of mortgage amount is executed (7).

3. “Besides the mortgagor.”

This section deals with the right of redemption of persons other than the mortgagor, though it recognises the mortgagor's right of redemption, as is shown by the words “besides the mortgagor” (1). The mortgagor himself has a right of redemption given to him by S. 60. Section 59 A provides that "unless otherwise expressly provided," the word "mortgagor" shall be deemed to include persons deriving title from him. It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that this section is one of such express provisions inasmuch as, in providing that "besides the mortgagor the following persons are entitled to redeem" and in including among those persons such persons as derive title from the mortgagor, it clearly distinguishes between the mortgagor and persons deriving title from him. Consequently, a purchaser from the mortgagor, for instance, is entitled to redeem, not by virtue of S. 60, but by a virtue of this section.(2)

The mortgagor must, in order to be entitled to redeem, have an existing right in the equity of redemption.

Even the smallest interest in the property is sufficient to entitle a person to redeem the mortgage. Interest in mortgaged property is not the same as interest in the mortgage security. Order 34, R. 1, C.P.C. is procedural and does not create a substantive right to redeem the mortgage which is given under S. 91.(3)

If he absolutely and entirely parts with it, his right to redeem comes to an end (4). But if, even after he has absolutely parted with his equity of redemption, he is sued by the mortgagee upon his covenant to pay the mortgage debt he acquires a new right to redeem and is entitled to a reconveyance to himself, subject of course to any equity of redemption that may have vested in any other person (5). In Dhana Koeri v. Ram Kewal(6) it has been held that this principle will apply not only when the mortgagee sues the mortgagor on the covenant but also on the mortgage debt. In that case, I mortgaged property to B by way of simple mortgage and then to C by way of usufructuary mortgage. B sued on his mortgage impleading only A obtained a decree for sale and, in execution, purchased the property himself. Being unable to obtain possession he again sued both C and A. A decree was passed that C should redeem B and that, if he failed to do so, B should redeem C redeemed B. It was held that the consequence of it was that B mortgage was satisfied, that therefore pro facto the decree and sale in favour of B were vacated, and that the equity of redemption came again into the hands of A. B could have got in the whole estate by redeeming C but if he did not take that course, then, he must be taken to have fallen back on his mortgage and thus revived the equity in A. A could, therefore, redeem C by payment of the amount due under C's mortgage plus the amount paid by C to B. Where, however, the decree in B's suit against C remained unsatisfied, it was held in the undermentioned case(7) that mere suit by B against C or passing of a decree therein had not the effect of reviving the right of redemption in A. In another case where the equity of redemption had passed to B in execution of a decree in his suit against A only, it was held by the Kerala High Court(8) that there could be no question of revival of right of redemption in A when later C redeemed or paid off B.

A subsequent mortgagee having been instrumental in bringing about the auction sale by the prior mortgagee cannot lose his character as a mortgagee and his purchase of the equity of redemption was only in trust for the mortgagor and there was no need to set aside the sale, the suit for redemption being maintainable.(9)

4. Clause (a) — General.

This clause refers to four classes of persons who are entitled to redeem

- (a) persons having an interest in the property mortgaged.
- (b) persons having a charge upon the property mortgaged.
- (c) persons having an interest in the right to redeem the property mortgaged, and
- (d) persons having a charge upon the right to redeem the property mortgaged (1)

The "property mortgaged" is not the same thing as "the right to redeem the same." The former has reference to a stage before the mortgage was executed and comprises the entire interest of the mortgagor which was offered as security under the mortgage. The latter has reference to a stage after the mortgage is executed and comprises the mortgagor's interest which remains after deducting the mortgagee interest (2). Again, the words "property mortgaged" and "right to redeem the same" cannot obviously comprise interests which the mortgagor did own and which could not be transferred by the mortgagor by way of mortgage. Thus suppose, A, the owner of property X, executes a mortgage first in favour of B and then in favour of C. B cannot be said to have any interest in the "property mortgaged" to C, inasmuch as what was mortgaged to C, was the equity of redemption remaining in A after the mortgage to B. The same view may be expressed by saying that the interest of any person which is not bound by the contract of mortgage is not an interest in the "property mortgaged" or in the right to redeem the same and the owner of such interest is not entitled to redeem the mortgage under this clause (3). A co-debtor who is not a mortgagor, having no property belonging to him, but who is personally liable for the mortgage debt under the terms of the mortgage is a person entitled to redeem the mortgage within the meaning of the section (4).

Any of the co-mortgagors can redeem the entire mortgage without impleading the other co-mortgagors as parties to the suit. (5)

But it is not necessary that in order that a person may have an interest in the "property mortgaged" he should have derived his title from, or should have claimed through the mortgagor, though it is necessary that such interest is bound by the mortgage (6).

Notwithstanding the insolvency of the mortgagor he is entitled to redeem under S. 91 (7).

A person claiming paramount title has no interest in the mortgage security or the right of redemption and, therefore, is not a person entitled to redeem (8). (See Civil PC, O. 34, R. 1, Note 5).

This clause gives a right of redemption not only to a person having an interest in the property mortgaged or in the right to redeem the same, but also to a person having a charge upon such property or right to redeem (9) As has been seen in Note 4 on S 58 a charge does not create any interest in the property though under certain circumstances the property may be made liable for the payment of the money charged.

- (1) A and his son B constitute a Mitakshara undivided Hindu family. A mortgages the family property to C for purposes binding on the family. B is a person having an interest in the property mortgaged and so can redeem C. B it may be noted does not claim through A (10)
- (2) A a Hindu widow mortgages her husband's property to B for purposes binding on the estate. After the death of A C the next reversioner is a person having an interest in the property mortgaged and so can redeem B. It may be noted here also that the reversioner C does not claim through the widow but only through the last male owner (11)
- (3) A is the owner of property X and B has a charge on that property for certain amounts due. A mortgages the property to C who takes it bona fide without notice of the charge. The mortgage is binding on B. B can, therefore, as a person having a charge upon the property mortgaged, redeem C
- (4) A mortgages property first to X and then to Y. Y has an interest in the right to redeem remaining in A after the prior mortgage to X. He is therefore entitled to redeem X (12)
- (5) A mortgages property X to B and then sells his equity of redemption to C for a consideration of Rs. 4,000, which however is not paid. Under S 55 sub s. 4) C (b) A has a charge on the equity of redemption transferred to C i.e. has a charge on the right to redeem and so can under this clause, redeem B (13)
- (6) Brother and son of deceased mortgagor being his co-sharers are entitled to redeem (14)
- (7) Where the mortgagee of a property obtained a decree for sale of the property without impleading the purchaser of a portion of that property from the mortgagor and purchaser, the decree passed in execution of his decree. Held that the sale in execution although it was valid and effective as against the mortgagors who were parties to the action did not affect the right of redemption of the purchaser from the mortgagor as he was not impleaded as a party (15) executed a document stating that the sale deed was fictitious, that he had not paid any amount towards purchase price, that the only amount due to him was the mortgage debt, the sale of property could not be said to have taken place. That being so the mortgage subsisted and so too the right of the son of the mortgagor to redeem so long as that right was not foreclosed (16)

The "interest" contemplated by the clause is obviously not confined to the right of ownership but may be any interest in the property, however small it may be (17). It may accrue by succession, conveyance or contract (18). It must, however, be a present interest and not a mere contingent or future interest, (19) i.e., it must be an interest actually in existence at the time when the right of redemption is claimed. (20) A reversionary interest under the Hindu law cannot be said to be a present interest as it is merely a spes successionis (21). But although it is necessary that the person should have a present interest in the property or in the right to redeem it, a present right to the possession and enjoyment of the property is not essential (22).

4. 1906 Pun WR 196 (197).

There is a difference of opinion on the question whether a puisne mortgagee who has allowed his remedy on the mortgage against the mortgagor to be barred by limitation can be said to have a subsisting interest in the right to redeem so as to entitle him to sue for redemption of the prior mortgage. On the one hand, it has been held that the right of the puisne mortgagee to redeem the prior mortgage is not an absolute right but has been conceded to him for the protection of the rights possessed by him under his own mortgage and that, therefore, if the puisne mortgagee has lost all the remedies available to him in respect of his own mortgage, he cannot be said to have a subsisting interest sufficient to entitle him to claim redemption(5) under this clause.

If a puisne mortgagee is not in possession his right to recover the mortgage money becomes barred under Art. 132 and he has no subsisting right to redeem the prior mortgage though suit for redemption may not be barred under Art. 146.(6)

Where the puisne mortgagee was not made a party in suit wherein a prior mortgagee purchased the equity of redemption, the decree and consequent purchase by the prior mortgagee do not affect puisne mortgagee's right to sue for sale subject to prior mortgage before putting property for sale to satisfy his own claim.(7)

The effect of this view is that though under Art. 148 of the Limitation Act of 1908 a period of 60 years is prescribed for a suit for redemption, this period is reduced to 12 years in the case of a puisne mortgagee as, in suits governed by Art. 132 of that Act, he has only a period of 12 years for instituting a suit on his mortgage. On the other hand, a contrary view is taken in the undermentioned cases(8) that even when the puisne mortgagee's right to enforce payment of his mortgage is barred under Art. 132, his right as mortgagee is not extinguished under S. 28, Limitation Act, 1908 and he can, therefore, redeem under Art. 148 within the period of 60 years. It is submitted that the latter view is correct. (Under Art. 61(a) of the Limitation Act of 1963 which corresponds to Art. 148 of the Act of 1908, a period of 30 years instead of 60 years is now provided for redemption but under Art. 62 of the Act corresponding to Art. 132 of the Act of 1908, the period remains the same, i.e., 12 years.)

Where there are successive mortgages a puisne mortgagee can redeem any of the prior incumbrances and is not required to redeem only the mortgage immediately prior to him (9)

The puisne mortgage must be a valid mortgage, a void mortgage cannot give the person in whose favour it is executed a right to redeem a prior mortgage.(10)

Unlike a purchaser of the equity of redemption, in whose case there is a prima facie implied contract to indemnify the vendor against liability on the mortgage, a puisne mortgagee is in no way personally liable to discharge the prior mortgage.(11)

As to the right of puisne mortgagee who was not made a party to the suit on prior mortgage and of the purchaser in execution sale under that decree to redeem each other see Note 8

6. Sub-mortgagee of puisne mortgagee.

A sub-mortgagee of the rights of a puisne mortgagee is entitled to redeem or to institute a suit for redemption of the prior mortgage as being a person having an interest in the 'right to redeem' the mortgaged property (1)

A sub-mortgagee may be redeemed by his mortgagor that is the original mortgagee but he cannot redeem the original mortgage. He may have his usual remedies against his mortgagor & the original mortgagee as also against original mortgagor. But sub-mortgagee is not a derivative title holder of the original mortgagor to enable him to redeem the original mortgage (2)

Mortgagor is entitled to redeem a sub-mortgage as there is a privity between the two. What is required under this section to enable a person to redeem the mortgage is not privity of estate but any interest in the mortgaged property or the right to redeem the same. Release of a sub-mortgage in favour of the original mortgagor does not extinguish the sub-mortgagee to operate as an assignment of the sub-mortgage in favour of the mortgagor.(3)

7. Prior mortgagee.

As has been seen already in Note 4 a person not bound by the mortgage sought to be redeemed cannot be said to have an "interest" in the "property mortgaged" within the meaning of this section. A prior mortgagee is not bound by the second mortgage (1) He has no interest such as is contemplated by the section in "the property mortgaged" under the second mortgage for what is mortgaged under the second mortgage is the equity of redemption remaining in the mortgagor after the first mortgage. It follows that a prior mortgagee cannot redeem the second mortgage under this section. This is in accordance with the well known principle of law "redeem up and foreclose down" which means that, of any number of mortgagees, the later can always redeem the earlier but cannot be compelled to do so and the earlier cannot redeem the later except by consent (2) The explanation to

O 34 R 1 Civil PC, also makes this clear. That rule provides that all persons having an interest either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption are necessary parties to any suit relating to the mortgage, but that a prior mortgagee is not a necessary party to a suit for sale or foreclosure by a puisne mortgagee or to a suit for redemption by the mortgagor of the puisne mortgage. There is, however, no prohibition against joining him as a party to such suits, and the undermentioned cases(3) have held that where it is joined as a party to the suit by the puisne mortgagee he is entitled to pay off the puisne mortgage.

The principle "redeem up and foreclose down" will not apply where the prior mortgage is not binding on the subsequent mortgagee. The position in such a case is that the subsequent mortgage operates on the entire interest of the mortgagor as if it had not been burdened with a prior encumbrance and hence the position of the subsequent mortgagee, though later in time, is superior to that of the prior mortgagee in view of his higher rights.(4)

A prior mortgagee who purchases the mortgagor's equity of redemption whether privately(5) or in execution of a decree(6) stands in the shoes of the mortgagor and can in that capacity redeem the subsequent mortgage. So also, where the prior mortgagee forecloses behind the back of the subsequent mortgagee and acquires the mortgagor's equity of redemption, he will be entitled to redeem the subsequent mortgage (7).

8. Purchaser of equity of redemption.

A purchaser of the equity of redemption is entitled to redeem or to institute a suit for redemption of the mortgaged property (1). That he will be entitled to do even if he has purchased out

A purchaser of the equity of redemption in execution of a money decree is not a "mortgagor" under S. 91(a).(4)

It has been held that a purchaser at a sale in execution of a rent decree is entitled to redeem a prior mortgage even if the decree and sale are declared void (5)

As between a puisne mortgagee and a purchaser of the equity of redemption sold in execution of a decree on the prior mortgage, the latter is entitled to redeem the former (6)

In case of successive mortgages if the prior mortgagee purchases the mortgaged property he is entitled as assignee of equity of redemption to redeem the subsequent mortgages. In a conflict between the right of the prior mortgagee as assignee of the equity of redemption to redeem the puisne mortgage and the right of the puisne mortgagee to redeem the prior mortgagee, the former has prior right (8)

A purchaser in a prior mortgagee's suit at a Court auction has better right to redeem the puisne mortgagee since the right of redemption of the mortgagor vests in him by purchase, nor can the purchaser in puisne mortgagee's suit have a better title than the puisne mortgagee (9)

An auction purchaser at a sale on suit filed by prior mortgagee to which puisne mortgagee is not impleaded is entitled to redeem the puisne mortgage as he occupied a dual capacity i.e. the capacity of the first mortgagee as well as the owner of the equity of redemption (11)

A purchaser of equity of redemption gets the same rights, as the liability of the purchaser is not a new liability but one arising under the pre-existing mortgage debt though the liability is confined to the property in his possession. His rights are thus co-extensive with those of the mortgagor in whose shoes he steps.(12)

A purchaser of the equity of redemption from the original mortgagor cannot redeem a sub-mortgage executed by original mortgagee.(13)

Mortgagor's security was sold by the Municipal authority in enforcement of first charge for taxes subject to the second mortgage and purchased by A which was confirmed. Prior to his decree the second mortgagee obtained a preliminary decree and then a final decree and purchased the property but his sale was confirmed after the auction purchaser in the Municipal suit was put in possession. It was held that the auction purchaser in the Municipal suit was entitled to redeem in preference to the auction purchaser either in the first mortgagee's or the second mortgagee's suit (14) the mortgage, as a person having an interest in the right to redeem (2) A lessee from the mortgagor, whose lease is binding on the mortgagor though it may not be binding on the mortgagee, is still a person having an interest in the mortgaged property and, therefore, entitled to redeem the mortgage (3) He does not lose that right merely because he attorns in favour of mortgagee (4) It has been held by Hidayatullah, J. agreeing with Bose, J. in a case referred on a difference of opinion between Bose and Hemeon, JJ. that a lessee from a mortgagor, whose lease is binding on the mortgagee, not being a person, whose interests are in any way jeopardised by the mortgage is not entitled to redeem (5) But this view does not appear to be correct. As observed by Hemeon, J. in that very case there is nothing in S. 91(a) to indicate that the right to redeem can only be exercised where the interest is likely to be or can be affected by the mortgage, and no fetters have been imposed in the clause as it stands on the right of redemption by a person "who has any interest in the property mortgaged." In Pava Matathil Appu v. Kavamel Amina (6) their Lordships of the Madras High Court said :

Malabar claiming under a lease from the ottidar (10) a holder of a zampavhu lease (11) a pattidat (12) and a darpatnidar (13) have all been held to have an "interest" within the meaning of S. 94, clause (a). In the undermentioned case (14) a distinction has been made between the permanent tenant's interest in the land before the mortgage and those after the mortgage. It was held that in the former case when the land mortgaged by the landlord is reversionary right vesting in him and the permanent tenant has no interest in it as would entitle him to redeem. His interest is paramount in the sense that it is not affected by redemption or foreclosure or sale. But in the case of a permanent tenant after the mortgage, it was held that since his rights came into existence during the subsistence of the mortgage, he is entitled to redeem.

In the undermentioned case (15) it has been held that a year to year lessee is not a person entitled to redeem under section 91. Clause (a). So also in the case noted below (16) arising before the Transfer of Property Act, it was held that a person holding a mukurati, mokurati, patta (17), mortgagor was not entitled to redeem. It is submitted that this view does not appear to be correct. There is no reason why such persons should not be entitled to redeem.

Where A mortgages property to B usufructually and B leases back the property to A who sub-leases the same to C. C really derives title from the mortgagee, since he is a transferee of an interest from A who is a transferee from B in so far as the leasehold interest is concerned. And as the mortgagee himself cannot redeem his own mortgage (as is shown by the words "other than the mortgagee of the interest sought to be redeemed") C who derives title from him cannot also redeem the mortgage. In the case noted below (17) in which the facts were as above stated, it was held that C was not entitled to redeem the mortgage as he had no interest in the equity of redemption. This is no doubt true, but the better reason why he should not be allowed to redeem is as stated above, that he derives his title from the mortgagee. The position of a tenant who pays statutory dues to the Municipality should be regarded as a fortiori case. What he possesses is not a mere right to redeem. It is something more. (18)

A lessee executed usufructuary mortgage in respect of an agricultural land since no rent was paid to landlord, the property was put to sale. The mortgagee paid the decretal amount. He claimed the mortgage was liable to be redeemed at the option of the mortgagor. On purchase of the property in Court sale by the mortgagee no merger took place between the two, this not the mortgage was not extinguished (19) in the property called a "reversion" (1) though a vested right, is not an interest in the "property mortgaged" or "the right to redeem the same" inasmuch as what is mortgaged is the leasehold interest. Consequently, A cannot claim to redeem the mortgage. He is in fact not bound by the mortgage at all.

Where a lease of mortgaged property is void the lessee has no right to redeem (20)

A landlord has no right to redeem the mortgage of occupancy tenancy created by such tenant (2)

There is a class of tenancy in this country in which the landlord is not entitled to the reversion except on failure of all the heirs of the tenant. In such cases the landlord's interest is really not a subsisting interest at all but merely a spes successionis like that of a reversioner to a Hindu widow. In such cases also the landlord cannot be said to have any "interest" such as will entitle him to claim redemption of a mortgage by the tenant of his holding. (3)

In respect of a mortgage created by his tenant if the landlord has carved out his interest and there is no full transfer it would satisfy the test applied in such cases namely whether there is absolute transfer so that nothing remains with the landlord or that some residual interest remains with him which could attract the words "any person who has any interest in the mortgaged property" in the section. (4)

Where the holding reverts to the landlord, either because the tenant dies without leaving any heirs (5) or by the tenant abandoning the village (6) or in some other way, (7) it has been held that he would be entitled to redeem the mortgage. These decisions do not raise the question whether the landlord will be bound at all by the mortgage created by the lessee. The general principle is contained in the maxim cessante stain primitiva, cessat derivativus (the derived estate ceases on the determination of the original estate). This principle also applies to leases. Where a reversion takes place, the lease will determine on the principle of merger contained in S. 111 of the Act. On such determination, therefore, on the maximum above quoted, the subordinate interests created by the lessee must also be held to come to an end. (See S. 105, Note 6 and S. 111, Note 1.) There are only two exceptions to this general principle and they are contained in S 115. They do not cover the case of the reversion of a lease on the death of a lessee intestate without leaving any legal heirs. Hence, in such cases, the mortgage of the lease hold interest will itself be extinguished and it cannot be seen how a question of the right to redeem will arise at all.

14. Superior proprietor under C.P. Land Revenue Act.

Section 122 of the C P Land Revenue Act 2 of 1917 (S 65 of the C P Land Revenue Act, 18 of 1881) provided that the sum payable under a sub-settlement shall be a first charge upon the land comprised in the sub-settlement. It was held that the word "charge" as used in that section had the same meaning as the word "charge" used in Cl (a) of this section. Where, therefore, a superior proprietor held a decree against the inferior proprietor on account of the sum payable under the sub-settlement, he was held entitled to redeem a mortgage on the land comprised in the sub-settlement.(1) 15. Tenant for life and remainderman.

A mortgages property to D and transfers his equity of redemption to B for life or for a particular period and then to C. Under the English law B can sue for redemption (1) C also can redeem, but only with the consent of B (2) On the death of the tenant for life his interest comes to an end and if he has transferred his interest to a third person such third person cannot redeem the mortgage after the death of the tenant for life (3) In the undermentioned case (4) A, a holder of a life estate, a mortgaged the entire proprietary interest in the land to B. The life estate holder died and thereafter C, the remainderman, accepted the mortgage as binding on him and claimed redemption. It was held that he could do so.

16. Reversioner under Hindu Law.

The interest of a reversioner under the Hindu law is an interest expectant on the death of the limited owner such as a Hindu widow. During the lifetime of the limited owner the reversioner has no more than a spes successionis and has no present interest in the property held by the limited owner(1) so as to entitle him to redeem a mortgage during the life of the limited owner (2) But in the under-mentioned cases(3) the view has been expressed that ordinarily a reversioner is not entitled to redeem during the lifetime of the limited owner, but that he can do so where it is necessary to preserve the property from loss on the same principle on which he is allowed to institute a suit to restrain waste by the limited owner. It has also been held in the cases noted below(4) that irrespective of the question of the necessity of preserving the property from loss a reversioner has sufficient interest in the property held by the limited owner so as to entitle him to redeem the mortgage during the lifetime of such owner. It is submitted that the last two views are not correct. The mere fact that the reversioner is interested in the preservation of the property and is allowed to maintain a suit for that purpose does not mean that he has any present interest in the property so as to entitle him to redeem the mortgagee under Cl. (a) of the section. After the death of the widow, the reversioner would be entitled, if the mortgage was one binding on the estate, to redeem the same as being a person having an interest in the "property mortgaged." (See Note 4).

17. Surrender of mortgaged property by Hindu widow to next reversioner.

A Hindu widow can renounce the estate in favour of the nearest reversioner and by a voluntary act efface herself from the succession as effectively as if she had then died. The effacement operates the estate of her deceased husband to his next heirs at that date (1) It is thus evident that on such renouncement the next reversioner in whose favour the renouncement is made becomes entitled to redeem the mortgage existing on the estate. In the undermentioned case(2) a Hindu widow mortgaged the estate of her husband and then by a compromise surrendered the possession of the estate to the next reversioner who agreed to hold the estate for her and pay her a fixed sum in cash and grain for her maintenance. It was held that the next reversioner acquired such an interest in the estate as qualified him to redeem.

18. Transfer from limited owner under Hindu law.

An alienation made by a Hindu widow or other limited owner in excess of her powers is not absolutely void but voidable at the option of the reversioner, if it is not so affected by a valid and set aside. The persons entitled to dispute the validity of such alienation are the reversionary heirs or persons who are entitled to succeed to the estate of the widow. As such, if the reversioner is certainly not entitled to dispute the validity of such alienation (1). Where, however, a Hindu widow or other limited owner mortgages the estate to A, and then transfers the equity of redemption to B, the mortgagee A has no locus standi to resist the claim of B for redemption on the ground that the transfer to B is beyond the powers of the limited owner (2).

19. Government acquiring mortgagor's interest by escheat.

When by the law applicable to the last owner there is a total failure of heirs, the property escheats to the Government as the ultimus heres. If there is a total failure of heirs, the Government, on the property the Government will take the property subject to such mortgage (1), and will be owner of the mortgagor's interest, be entitled to redeem the mortgage (2).

Where the Collector passed orders of allotment and orders for delivery of land to allottees of land which had reverted to the State by rule of law, the allottees were entitled to claim delivery of possession over the property for the amount of the mortgage. The allottees were entitled to seek delivery of possession over the property for the amount of the mortgage and discharge holders, allottees would be entitled to seek delivery of possession (3).

As to the cases where the mortgaged property is a leasehold, see Note 4 and 5. As to the cases where the mortgagor is a minor, see Note 6 and 7.

Where the equity of redemption of the mortgagor is forfeited to the Government by reason of the treason or other offence committed by the mortgagor, the Government is entitled to redeem the mortgage (4).

20. Heirs of mortgagor.

As seen in Note 4, interest under Customary Law is not a hereditary right, but a personal right of the mortgagor. Thus, a person who succeeds to the original mortgagor is not entitled to redeem the mortgaged property (1).

21. Son under Mitakshara law.

Under the Mitakshara law the son takes by birth an interest in the ancestral property of the family. Where the father mortgages such property for a binding purpose the son will be a person having an interest in "the property mortgaged" (see Note 4). As such the son has a right to redeem the mortgage.(1) As to the question whether the son's right to redeem is affected where he is not made a party under O. 34, R. 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure, see C.P.C. O. 34 R. 1 Note 12 in the Appendix.

The son under Mitakshara law does not acquire by his birth any interest in the self-acquired property of his father. He cannot, therefore, in the lifetime of the father claim a right to redeem a mortgage of such property created by the father. After his death, however, he will be entitled to redeem as his heir.(2)

22. Mortgage by manager of joint Hindu family.

Where the manager of a joint Hindu family mortgages the family property for a binding purpose, and subsequently the family gets divided in status, each of the members has a right to redeem the mortgage as a person having an interest in the mortgaged property (1)

Where a joint family property is subject to mortgage there is no transfer of ownership and coparceners are entitled to allot the mortgaged property in an oral partition to any one of them. The coparcener to whom the property is allotted in partition becomes entitled to redeem the mortgage and his right is also available to transferee from him. It is not necessary that such a right which flows from ownership can be made only by registered instrument (2)

22A. Co-mortgagors.

One of the co-mortgagors can get the entire property redeemed even of his co-mortgagors (1)

Although it is prescribed by O. 34, R. 1, CPC that all persons having an interest either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption, shall be joined as parties in suit relating to the mortgage but as per Ss. 91, 92 even one of the fractional owners of the equity of redemption may sue to redeem the whole mortgage and the suit is not liable to be dismissed for non-joinder of other co-mortgagors. Therefore even if the legal representatives of co-mortgagors have not been brought into a compromise with the mortgagee whereby they effect a new mortgage in lieu of the old mortgage, the compromise is not binding on the other successors and they can redeem the old mortgage.  (1881) 5 Bom 14 (20) (DB)  AIR 1925 All 707 (710) 47 All 803 (DB)  (1885) 9 Bom 429 (432) (DB)  AIR 1925 All 15 (15-16)  (1881) 5 Bom 11 (13) (DB) on record the court is not precluded from passing a decree in favour of surviving mortgagor for redemption of the mortgaged land.(2)

Where the suit for redemption of mortgage of only share of the mortgagor in joint family property is filed by the mortgagor himself other sharers are not necessary parties (3)

After the death of original owner of the property, his eldest son executed a mortgage deed creating usufructuary mortgage and delivered possession of property to the mortgagee. He was entitled to file suit for redemption of mortgage without impleading other heirs of the original owner since he was the mortgagor.(4)

Whereabouts of one of the mortgagors was not known. Suit for redemption was filed by wife and other heirs of the absconding mortgagor and a period of 7 years elapsed during the pendency of the suit. In the circumstances the suit was maintainable. All the mortgagors are not necessary parties to the suit for redemption of mortgage and by virtue of O. 1 R. 9 C.P.C. the mortgagors cannot be non-suited merely on ground that one of the mortgagors was not impleaded as a party to the suit (5)

23. Member of Malabar tarwad.

The anandavans or junior members of a Malabar tarwad are persons having an "interest" in the tarwad property within the meaning of this section. But the right of the junior members to redeem a mortgage created by the karnavan of the tarwad must be taken subject to the marumakkatayam law applicable to the parties. Under that law a Malabar family "speaks through the karnavan" and except in antagonism to him, can speak in no other way. It has therefore been held that only under very special circumstances (the onus of proving which is on the junior members) can the junior members be allowed to maintain a suit for redemption of a kanom granted by their karnavan (1). As to an illustration of such special circumstances, see the undermentioned case.(2)

After a division in status the members of a tarwad become tenants in common and it is open to some of them to redeem a previous mortgage which is binding on the tarwad. Therefore the 24. Tenants-in-common.

A tenant-in-common does not possess any interest in the share held by another tenant-in-common in the common property. The interest of each tenant-in-common is distinct and defined and is held by him not in unison with the others but independently of them. One tenant-in-common has therefore no right to redeem a mortgage created by another tenant-in-common of his share in the common property. (1) (See also Note 44 on section 60).

25. Attaching judgment-creditor.

Under the English law an execution creditor who took out attachment of the equity of redemption was in the position of a tenant by eleger having an interest in the property sufficient to entitle him to redeem (1) In this country it has long been established that the attaching creditor does not obtain, by reason of the attachment, any interest in or charge or lien upon the attached property (2) In cases before the Act it was accordingly held that such a creditor was not entitled to redeem a mortgage which had been executed before his attachment (3) The Act, however, in Cl. (f) of the old section gave him a right to redeem (4) The Legislature has, in 1929, repealed Cl. (f) and

26. Government attaching property under section 88, Criminal Procedure Code.

Under S. 88, Criminal Procedure Code, the Court has power to order an attachment of the property belonging to a person who is absconding. Sub-section (7) of that section provides that if the proclaimed person does not appear within the time specified, the property under attachment shall be at the disposal of the State Government. Thus, the interest possessed by the State Government under S. 88 Criminal Procedure Code is not that of a mere attaching decree holder. The effect of the section is to create an interest in the property in favour of the Government to remain in possession of it. The State Government therefore comes within the category of persons who may redeem or institute a suit for redemption of the mortgaged property under S. 91 of the Transfer of Property Act.(1)

See also the AIR Commentaries on the Code of Criminal Procedure, 8th (1982) Edn., section 88, Note 7.

27. Judgment-creditor obtaining order for appointment of receiver under section 51, clause (d), Civil Procedure Code.

A judgment creditor who has obtained an order for the appointment of a Receiver of the judgment debtor's property under S. 51 (d) of the Civil Procedure Code in execution of his decree cannot be said to have an interest in the property within the meaning of Clause (1) of this section, and cannot, therefore, redeem a mortgage previously executed by the judgment debtor on the property.(1)

28. Person holding decree for sale of mortgaged property.

In the undermentioned case (1) one A, a prior mortgagee, brought a suit for sale of his mortgage and impleaded B, a subsequent mortgagee as a party thereto. His suit was decreed against the mortgagor but dismissed against B. In a subsequent suit by B on his mortgage it was held that A was entitled to be impleaded as a party as he had a right to redeem B's mortgage under Clause (1) of this section by virtue of the decree for sale which he held against the mortgagor. It is submitted that this view is not correct. As has been seen already a prior mortgagee cannot claim to redeem a subsequent mortgage. The mere fact that he has obtained a decree for sale on his mortgage does not alter his position so as to give him an interest in the right to redeem. This view is also supported by reference to Cl. (c) of the section which provides for a special case of a creditor obtaining a decree for sale of the mortgaged property

29. Trustee.

A person holding property as a trustee has an interest in the property within the meaning of this section, which would entitle him to redeem a valid mortgage on the property (1)

Section 48 of the Trusts Act provides that where there are more trustees than one all of them must join in conducting the business of the trust (2) It has been held by the High Court of Madras that so far as the question of redemption of a mortgage is concerned the wide language of S 91 entitles one of several trustees to bring a suit to redeem a mortgage of the trust property without averring or proving that the other trustees were asked to join as plaintiffs in the suit (3)

Where A, B, C and D are the trustees and A and B alone grant a mortgage of the trust property without consulting the others, the mortgage is invalid and not binding on the trust. The trust, in such a case, cannot, as has been seen in Note 4, be said to have an interest in the property mortgaged or in the right to redeem the same. Consequently it follows that even A and B cannot, on behalf of the trust, claim to redeem the mortgage. In the undermentioned case (4) where the facts were as stated above it was held that A and B were not entitled to redeem, though the reasoning on which the view was based is not clear.

30. Benamidar.

A benamidar executing a mortgage on the property which he holds benami for the real owner can maintain a suit for redemption of the mortgaged property (1) So also a person purchasing the mortgaged property from a mortgagor benami for another person, is entitled to maintain the suit for redemption in his own name (2) The reason is that the benamidar is a trustee for the real owner. In Gur Narain v. Sheotal Singh (3) their Lordships of the Privy Council said

The benamidar has no beneficial interest in the property or business that stands in his name: he

31. Guardian of property of minor mortgagor and curator of lunatic mortgagor.

Clauses (d) and (e) of the old section provided that the guardian of property of a minor mortgagor on behalf of such minor and the committee or other legal curator of a lunatic or idiot mortgagor on behalf of such lunatic or idiot may redeem or institute a suit for redemption of the mortgaged property. These clauses have now been omitted in the new section as being superfluous. (1) Section 103 lays down the procedure where a person incompetent to contract wants to make a tender or deposit under the provisions of Chap. IV of the Transfer of Property Act, and O. 32 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides rules for a suit to be instituted on behalf of a minor or a person of unsound mind. There is, therefore, no necessity of making a special provision in this section for such cases.

A suit by lunatic person can be maintained for redemption of mortgage through a next friend or guardian.(2)

32. Trespasser.

A mere trespasser who has not perfected his title by adverse possession has no right to redeem; and if the mortgagee allows such a person to redeem, the true owner can treat the transaction as a nullity. (1) But when he acquires the interest of the mortgagor by adverse possession he is entitled to redeem. (2) Where a trespasser acquires title by adverse possession, there is no mortgage subsisting and therefore a suit by mortgagor for redemption would be incompetent. (3) An agreement to sell mortgaged property was entered into by the mortgagee in favour of the appellant. A suit for specific performance was filed by the purchaser-appellant and directed the appellant to remit the balance amount within certain period. She failed to deposit the amount even within the extended period and therefore the suit for specific performance was dismissed. However she remained in possession of the property for more than 12 years otherwise than in accordance with law and matured right by adverse possession, she did not access mortgage money tendered by the mortgagor nor did she vacate the possession. Therefore the mortgagor filed a suit for declaration of title and confirmation of title.

Held that the suit was not maintainable. Section 91 could not be invoked as she had no interest in the equity of redemption. She was not a mortgagee but was rather a volunteer. Since she had no interest in the equity of redemption, she could not be subrogated in place of the mortgagor.

33. Person having no interest redeeming mortgage — Effect of.

See Notes on S 92

34. Person with imperfect title to equity of redemption.

If a person seeking to redeem the mortgaged property has, to some extent, an imperfect title at the time when he institutes the suit for redemption, but is able to prove a perfect title at the hearing of the case he should have a decree for redemption (1). Thus, A purchased the mortgaged property in execution of a money decree against B the mortgagor. When A instituted the suit for redemption against the mortgagee, the sale certificate was not issued in favour of A. It was, however, issued subsequently and A produced it at the hearing of the suit. It was held that a decree for redemption should be passed in his favour (2). But if a person, at the hearing of the case, sets up a new title based upon purchase of rights made after the institution of the suit and not ripening of the prior imperfect title, the suit for redemption cannot succeed (3). A person with an imperfect title to the equity of redemption can also make a tender under O 21 R 69, clause (3) of the Civil P C and have the sale in execution of a mortgage decree stopped (4). Thus, in the undermentioned case (5) A was a first mortgagee and B, a second mortgagee. B sued on his mortgage and obtained a decree and the property was purchased by C on 26-10-1906 in execution of the mortgage decree, but the sale was not confirmed till 9-1-1907. A sued on his mortgage impleading B and obtained a decree and applied for execution. The property was fixed for sale on 5-11-1906. Before the sale took place C deposited the amount under O 21 R 69 (old S 291), and prayed for stopping the sale. The lower Court held that C had no locus standi to make the deposit. It was held by the High Court, reversing the decision of the lower Court, that when C made the deposit and prayed for redemption, he had an inchoate title to the property which was subsequently perfected by the confirmation of the sale and which therefore related back to the time of C's purchase of the rights of B.

Where the plaintiff was a tenant under the mortgagor and his status as tenant continued in spite of payment of some money under a compromise arrived at, it was held that he had an interest in the property and he could institute suit for redemption (5).

Clause (b) gives a surety for the payment of the whole or part of the mortgage debt a right to redeem or to institute a suit for redemption of the mortgaged property (1). A surety who is obliged to pay only the interest on the principal amount is entitled to redeem the mortgage (2). The right to redeem is, however, given to the surety not because he had any interest in the mortgaged property (3) but because he is liable to pay the mortgage debt and has a right on such payment to set off himself of all the creditor's securities. A surety has no right to redeem if the suretyship is for another debt or for a part of the debt which is not covered by the mortgage.(5) So also, where a person stands surety for another in respect of a debt, and the debtor also executes a mortgage as additional security, the surety is only in respect of the personal liability of the debtor and not in respect of the mortgage. In such a case, the surety cannot be said to be one for the mortgage-debt. Hence, such a surety is not entitled to redeem the mortgage.(6)

38. Clause (c) — Creditors of the mortgagor.

In England the general creditors of the mortgagor have, generally, no right to redeem; but under special circumstances they are given such a right (1) Thus, a creditor who has obtained a decree for sale of the debtor's real estate in a creditor's suit has a right to redeem the mortgagee of the estate (2) Under this Act a creditor has no right to redeem apart from the provisions of clause (c).

39. "May redeem."

Redemption is a legal right and not a liability. Therefore a person having that right cannot be forced to exercise it against his will (1) This is clear from the use of the words "may redeem" in the section. This is made clear in S. 60 also where the words used are "at any time after the principal money has become due, the mortgagor has a right." Thus, a subsequent mortgagee who is entitled to redeem a prior mortgage under Cl. (a) of this section cannot be compelled to redeem the prior mortgage before he can sue on his own mortgage (2)

40. Partial redemption.

The section provides, in general terms, that certain persons, besides the mortgagor, who have an interest in the mortgaged property or in the right to redeem it are entitled to redeem the property. The question whether a person who is entitled to a share only of the mortgaged property has the right to insist on redeeming the whole of the mortgaged property cannot, however, be decided under this section. That question can be decided only by a reference to the provisions of S. 60.(1) See Notes on that section.

41. Order of redemption.

The section merely specifies the persons who, besides the mortgagor, are entitled to redeem or institute a suit for redemption of the mortgaged property, but does not prescribe any order in which such persons may redeem. The general rule, in this respect, is that as between several persons entitled to redeem the person in whom the equity of redemption vests earlier in point of date has a preferential and a prior right to redeem (1). Thus, in Bevor v Luck (2) Sir W. Page Wood V.C. observed as follows :

'A general principle however may be traced which is this. Wherever a number of persons some prior to others as to the period of their enjoyment, come in under the same instrument as tenants for life and in remainder under a settlement, there no successive rights to redeem are given but only one single common right of redemption. But where some of the persons interested are prior to others by reason of priority in the date of the instrument under which they claim, as in the case of first, second and third mortgagees, the person entitled to priority in date has the first right to redeem, and in the event of his not redeeming, successive rights of redemption are given to those who follow.

As between a mortgagor himself and any other person interested in the right of redemption, the latter has a preferential right to redeem. Thus, it has been held in England that as between the mortgagor and the second mortgagee the latter has a preferable right to redeem the prior mortgage, the reason is that a mortgagor, by mortgaging the property to the second mortgagee, makes him his assign. (3) In the undermentioned case (4) where a subsequent mortgagee had obtained a decree for redemption against the prior mortgagee, it was held that so long as the decree remained in force and executable, the right to redeem the prior mortgage, as between the mortgagor and the second mortgagee, was preferentially in the latter.

A prior mortgagee who obtains a decree for foreclosure in a suit on his mortgage without impleading the subsequent mortgagee, (5) or in a suit for redemption by the mortgagor to which the subsequent mortgagee was not made a party (6) or who, having obtained a decree for sale on his mortgage without impleading the subsequent mortgagee, himself purchases the property in execution of the decree for sale (7) becomes the owner of the mortgagor's equity of redemption and is, therefore, entitled to redeem the subsequent mortgage in that capacity. But the subsequent mortgagee also has a right to redeem the prior mortgage and that right is not affected by the proceedings in the suit to which he was not a party. Thus, prima facie the prior mortgagee as owner of the mortgagor's equity of redemption and the subsequent mortgagee have the right to redeem each other's mortgage in such a case. The question, however, arises as to which of them is entitled first to redeem the other's mortgage. The general trend of decisions is that the prior mortgagee (who has obtained the equity of redemption) will have a prior right to redeem the subsequent mortgagee (8) Thus, in Hussanbhai v. Umaji (9) Jacob, J., observed :

"The question which is before us is concerned strictly with their legal rights inter se. There can be no doubt upon the authorities that a puisne mortgagee, who was not made a party to a suit on a prior mortgage, does not lose his right to redeem that mortgage by sale or foreclosure in that suit. The further question however whether the prior mortgagee, who had foreclosed, or purchased under a sale in such a suit, is in his turn entitled to the option of redeeming such a puisne mortgagee, is one that is not so free from doubt. It is true that the interest of the mortgagor was acquired by proceedings in a suit to which the present plaintiff was not a party, and by which he is not therefore bound. But it appears to me that it can only be for the protection of his rights, and not for their enlargement, that the puisne mortgagee under such circumstances can claim to disregard the effects of the previous litigation. If there had been no such former suit for redemption of the prior mortgage, there can be no doubt that the plaintiff would have been liable to be redeemed by the mortgagor. Can he then be allowed to say in reply to the prior mortgagee that the foreclosure operates to extinguish the rights of the mortgagor as against him? If the puisne mortgagee would still be liable to be redeemed, then it is no hardship on him that he should be redeemed at the instance of the prior mortgagee, who has by foreclosure acquired the title of the mortgagor, rather than by the mortgagor himself or any other private assignee of the mortgagor's interest.

In Parasurama Singh v. Pandhohi (10) Ryves, J., observed :

"It seems to me that both are prima facie entitled to what they claim and the question for the Court under such circumstances, when all the parties were before it and all the necessary evidence was on the record, was to decide once and for all, having regard to the equities of the parties and to prevent further litigation, what the justice of the case demanded. In this view what I think we have to look at in this appeal, is not whether the decisions of the Courts below were legally correct but whether we should now do what I think the Courts below should have done, looking at the consequences. If we uphold this decree, the plaintiffs (puisne mortgagees) pay the decretal amount to the defendants (prior mortgagees), and the next day the defendants will inevitably file their suit to redeem the plaintiffs and so recover the property. All that the plaintiffs are entitled to is to get back their mortgage money. After all, they are merely mortgagees and as such are liable to be redeemed by the owner of the property—that is, the mortgagor or whoever represents him. In this case the prior mortgagees, the defendants, having acquired the equity of redemption, stand in the shoes of the mortgagor and are the owners of the property. I should be content to stop here and base my decision on what seems to me to be required by the equities of the case. As I have already said the decision of the Courts below in this case was legal & right, but I do not think it was the proper decision to give having regard to all the circumstances of the case and the pleadings of the parties. I would therefore allow the appeal and allow the defendants to redeem the plaintiffs' mortgages on payment to them of the sum due on their mortgages."

The contrary view taken in the undermentioned cases(11) does not appear to be correct.

42. Onus of proof.

Under the English law a person who seeks to redeem a mortgage must show a prima facie title to the equity of redemption (1). The same principle applies under this Act also. If a person other than the mortgagor claims to redeem, he must prove that he is one of the persons described in S 91(2). Thus, where he claims to redeem in the capacity of a puisne mortgagee he must prove the due execution of the puisne mortgage, and this is so even when the mortgagor admits the due execution of the mortgage, as the suit is primarily against the prior mortgagee and not against the mortgagor(3). It is not, however, necessary for a subsequent mortgagee or a purchaser to prove the passing of consideration for the mortgage or transfer(4).

A Muhammadan mortgaged certain property and then died. After his death his major son acting on behalf of his three minor brothers executed a second mortgage in favour of another person. The second mortgagee sued to redeem the prior mortgage. The prior mortgagee contended that the major son had no power to act on behalf of his minor brothers, that therefore the mortgage in favour of the second mortgagee was invalid and that he had no right to redeem the prior mortgage. All the minor brothers (who had now attained majority) accepted the mortgage in favour of the

43. Whether section applies to redemption of charges.

It has been held in England that a charge is not subject to redemption or foreclosure.(1) Where a charge for maintenance was given in perpetuity to X and his heirs, it was held by the Allahabad High Court that such a charge was not capable of redemption so as to free the property from the charge and that all that could be done in such a case was to pay up the arrears of maintenance due and prevent the sale of the property.(2) In the undermentioned case,(3) however, where a Hindu widow obtained a decree for maintenance charging certain properties and in execution of the decree for arrears of maintenance, a third party purchased the property subject to the charge for future maintenance, it was held that a subsequent mortgagee of the property could "redeem" the purchaser by payment of the arrears and get subrogated to that extent to the rights of the chargeholder. ^[92. SUBROGATION.— Any of the persons referred to in section 91 (other than the mortgagor) and any co-mortgagor shall, on redeeming property subject to the mortgage, have, so far as regards redemption, foreclosure or sale of such property, the same rights as the mortgagee whose mortgage he redeems may have against the mortgagor or any other mortgagee.

The right conferred by this section is called the right of subrogation, and a person acquiring the same is said to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee whose mortgage he redeems.

A person who has advanced to a mortgagor money with which the mortgage has been redeemed shall be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee whose mortgage has been redeemed, if the mortgagor has by a registered instrument agreed that such persons shall be so subrogated.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to confer a right of subrogation on any person unless the mortgage in respect of which the right is claimed has been redeemed in full.]

1. Doctrine of subrogation.

Subrogation in its wide signification means that one person is substituted for another in regard to the latter's rights and liabilities in a certain matter (1) Such substitution may arise in various ways The simplest case is where A assigns his rights against B to C C is then "subrogated" to the rights of A. Apart from assignment, a subrogation or substitution of rights may arise by agreement between the parties. Thus, if A advances money to B to enable B to pay off his creditor C and B agrees that A shall be subrogated to the rights which C may have against B, A will be subrogated to the rights of C. This kind of subrogation is generally known as "conventional" or "contractual" subrogation.(2) though even the first class of substitution of rights is also sometimes referred to as conventional subrogation.(3)

Independent of assignment or contract, a right of subrogation is recognised by law under certain circumstances. This is called legal subrogation. Thus, a subsequent mortgagee paying off a prior mortgage on the same property is given the same rights against the mortgagor as the prior mortgagee had in respect of his mortgage. This class of subrogation rests upon doctrines of equity and principles of natural justice and not on privity of contract.(4) One of these principles is that a person who is interested in the payment of money which another is bound by law to pay and who, therefore, pays it is entitled to be reimbursed by the other (5) This principle is found enacted in S 69 of the Central Act. Another principle is that he who seeks equity must do equity (6)

The doctrine of subrogation is not confined in its applicability to mortgages though, in this Act, the doctrine is dealt with only in relation to mortgages (7) In the undermentioned case(8) it has been held by the High Court of Madras that where a trustee or executor or guardian contracts a loan for the benefit of the estate the creditor is subrogated to such rights of reimbursement as the borrower himself may have out of the estate. As to the right of subrogation of an insurer under a policy of marine insurance, see S 79 of the Marine Insurance Act, 11 of 1963 Prior to the passing of that Act the provision found a place in S 135-A of this Act The latter section was repealed by the Marine Insurance Act. The undermentioned case(9) relating to the right of a marine insurer to subrogation was decided under S 135-A (3) of the T P Act

An insurer has no independent cause of action nor has he any independent claim of his own than the assured himself On payment to the assured he acquires all his rights and remedies as from the time of the casualty causing the loss.(10)

Where an insurer of goods consigned by a consignee pays the consignee he is subrogated to rights of the consignee for damages from the Railways (11)

Section 92 of the Act deals with both conventional and legal subrogation in relation to mortgages The first paragraph deals with legal subrogation and the third paragraph with conventional subrogation.(12)

The law as to the right of a redeeming co-mortgagors is the same as it was before the enactment.(13)

See also section 48. Note 11.

- 2. Law prior to 1929.

Before the passing of this Act in 1882, the Courts applied the rule of conventional subrogation wherever there was an agreement between the parties to that effect. (1) They also applied the doctrine of legal subrogation as being in consonance with justice, equity and good conscience, to cases where a person, for the protection of his own interest, paid off a charge on the property. (2) Thus, a subsequent mortgagee paying off a prior mortgage was held entitled to stand in the shoes of the prior mortgagee in respect of the mortgage paid off. (3)

As regards a subsequent purchaser of the equity of redemption paying off a prior mortgage on the property his right of subrogation depended upon the applicability, to the particular case, of the doctrine of merger. According to the English law, where the ownership of a property and a charge thereon became united in the same person, the charge was extinguished unless the parties intended to keep the charge alive. This intention was presumed where it was for the benefit of the party paying to keep the charge alive. There was, however, one exception to this rule of intention against merger and that was, where the person paying off the charge was himself personally liable to pay the charge. In that case, he could not claim to keep the charge alive. (4)

It may be noted that the rule of intention referred to above was only applicable where a charge and the ownership of the property became united in the same person. If, in such a case, there was an intention, actual or presumed, to keep the charge alive, then the person paying off the charge was subrogated to the rights of the charge-holder. Otherwise the charge was extinguished and the question of subrogation did not arise.

The principles mentioned above were applied to cases arising in this country before the Act (5). The leading case on the point is Gokuldas v. Puranmal (6). In that case property subject to two Note.— Before the decision in Gokuldas's case there was a difference of opinion in this country as to whether the rule laid down in the English case of Toulmin v. Steere (1817) 3 Mer 210 Should be followed. That decision laid down that the purchaser of an equity of redemption could not set up a prior mortgage of his own or which he had got in against subsequent incumbrancers of which he had notice.

The rule was applied in the following cases :

 (1870) 5 Beng LR 463 (466) (DB) * (1875) 11 Bow HCR 41 (43) (DB)

It was not applied in the following case :

 (1971-74) 7 Mad HCR 229 (231, 232) (DB)

Even in England the authority of the decision was questioned. See the following cases :

mortgages in favour of A and B respectively, was sold in execution of a money decree and was purchased by C, C paid off A and then claimed, as against B to stand in the shoes of A. Their Lordships of the Privy Council observed as follows :

"The obvious question to ask in the interest of justice, equity and good conscience is what was the intention of the party paying off the charge? He had a right to extinguish it and a right to keep it alive. What was his intention? If there is no express evidence of it, what intention should be ascribed to him? The ordinary rule is that a man having a right to act in either of two ways, shall be assumed to have acted according to his interest."

In 1882, the Act introduced two provisions in Ss. 74 and 101. The former enacted a rule of legal subrogation where a subsequent mortgagee paid off a prior mortgage though the word "subrogation" was not used(7). That section ran as follows :

"Section 74. Right of subsequent mortgagee to pay off prior mortgagee.— Any second or other subsequent mortgagee may, at any time after the amount due on the next prior mortgage has become payable, tender such amount to the next prior mortgagee, and such mortgagee is bound to accept such tender and to give a receipt for such amount, and (subject to the provisions of the law for the time being in force regulating the registration of documents) the subsequent mortgagee shall, on obtaining such receipt, acquire, in respect of the property, all the rights and powers of the mortgagee, as such, to whom he has made such tender."

Although the section in terms applied to the payment, by a subsequent mortgagee, to the "next" prior mortgagee(8) it was held by the Courts that the same rule applied to cases where the payment was made to any prior mortgagee(9).

Section 101 enacted the doctrine of merger referred to above, in a restricted form. It applied only to cases where the owner of a charge acquired the property charged. It did not, in terms, apply to cases where a transferee from the owner of the property charged paid off the charge. But in such cases, the rule laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Gokuldas's case was followed and the charge was treated as kept alive, unless the person paying off was himself personally liable to pay the amount, or it was clear that there was no intention to keep the charge alive (10).

The present section 92 enacts the whole law of subrogation so far as it relates to mortgages. There is a legal subrogation in cases, falling under the first paragraph irrespective of any intention to keep alive the prior mortgage paid off. There is conventional subrogation in cases under the third paragraph of the section. In view of this provision S. 74 was found unnecessary and has been omitted. The old S. 101 has been substituted by a new one providing a rule against merger.

Apart from the right given by this section, a right of subrogation cannot now be granted on equitable grounds in the case of mortgages(11).

3. This section and section 69, Contract Act.

As seen in Note 1 the right of subrogation rests upon equitable principles and that one such principle is the principle of reimbursement found enacted in section 69 of the Contract Act. That section provides that a person who is interested in the payment of money which another is bound by law to pay, and who therefore pays it is entitled to be reimbursed by the other. Thus, a person paying off a prior mortgage may have two remedies :

- (a) to proceed against the mortgagor under S. 69 of the Contract Act, and
- (b) to exercise his right of subrogation(1).

Section 69 of the Contract Act, however, confers only a personal right. The party claiming it can enforce it in his own right and not in the right of the prior mortgagee. Consequently, the right arises only on the date on which the person discharges the mortgage-debt. By the right of subrogation on the other hand, the person paying off a mortgage acquires the rights and powers of the mortgagee whom he pays off. It is a claim which is enforced in the right of the original creditor. The subrogee does not acquire a new charge on payment. The charge is already there. All that he acquires is the right to enforce that charge(2).

There is a distinction between Sec. 135-A (since repealed) and Section 92 of the T P Act. Under Section 92 the subrogation results in the extinction of the original mortgagee's rights, whereas a subrogee under Section 135-A acquires right only to the extent of his payment which may be less than the rights of the assured himself. Secondly the person who redeems under Section 91 is an interested person or a surety or a creditor, but the subrogee under that Section would get the rights conferred by Section 69 of the Indian Contract Act, because it would be a payment made by a person interested. But the insurer pays under his own contract of insurance and is not interested in discharging the liability of the wrongdoer or the tortfeasor(3).

To enforce rights under the Policy of marine insurance a suit for damages for wrongful non-delivery of certain goods entrusted to the railway for carriage is maintainable by the Insurer in his own name(4).

Insurer paying for total loss is entitled to the interest of and gets subrogated to all the rights and remedies of the insured in respect of the subject matter under sub-section (2) of Section 135(a), but under sub-clause (3) the insurer does not get the interest of the insured, but is subrogated merely to the rights and remedies of the insured insofar as the insured was indemnified for payment for such loss(5).

As to the periods of limitation for enforcing these rights see Art. 62, Note 14 and Art. 23, Note 7 of the AIR Commentaries on the Limitation Act, 1963, 7th (1997) Edition.

4. Law in States where this Act is not in force.

The Transfer of Property Act is not in force in the Punjab and Pepsu. But the principle underlying this section has been applied to these States(1). The technicality in the third paragraph of the section requiring the agreement to be by a registered instrument is, however, not adhered to. Such an agreement may be either express or implied(2). Where an agreement is not express, it may be implied from the intention of the parties to keep the prior mortgage alive(3).

Before the application of the T P Act to Travancore a superior mortgagee redeeming a prior mortgage in pursuance of a covenant between him and the mortgagor was not entitled to claim the benefit of subrogation. What is a bar against the mortgagor holds good against his heirs(4).

S. Section, whether retrospective.

This section was inserted in the Act by S. 47 of the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, XX of 1929. There have been conflicting decisions upon the question whether or not the section has a retrospective effect. According to the High Courts of Allahabad(1), Bombay(2), Calcutta(3), Nagpur(4), Patna(5) and Saurashtra(6) and the Chief Court of Oudh(7) the section has a retrospective effect except in proceedings pending on the 1st of April, 1930. (On the other hand, the High Courts of Madras(8), Kerala(9) and Rangoon(10) have held that the section has no retrospective effect.

In Raja Janki Nath v. Raja Prumathia Nath(11) the question as to the retrospective effect of the section came up for decision before the Judicial Committee but their Lordships did not find it necessary to express any opinion on the point.

6. Whether section applies to charges.

This section speaks of subrogation in the case of mortgages. "Mortgage" includes a simple mortgage and therefore by virtue of S. 100, a person who pays off a charge on a property is subrogated to the rights of the charge-holder(1). It has, however, been held that a charge which a landlord has for rent under S. 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885(2) or under S. 9 of the C. P. Tenancy Act of 1920(3) is peculiar to himself. The charge exists only for the landlord and, therefore, a person (other than the tenant) who pays rent to the landlord is not subrogated to the rights of the landlord. So also it has been held that the section does not apply to a statutory charge which the Government has under S. 7 of the Land Improvement Loans Act (XIX of 1883) for lagai advance(4).

However, it is held in the undermentioned case that the tenant paying taxes ultimately payable by landlord is entitled to subrogation to the rights of the Municipality to have first charge over the property(5).

7. Right of subrogation arises on redemption.

A right of subrogation accrues only when the mortgagee has been redeemed. Where there has been no redemption no question of subrogation can arise(1). A landlord, who has a charge on his holding for his rent, does not redeem the charge when he brings the property to sale in execution of his rent decree and purchases it(2).

The right of redemption, as provided in S. 60, can be exercised until it is extinguished by act of parties or by a decree of a Court. The decree of Court referred to is the final decree in a foreclosure suit under O. 34, R. 3 and the final decree in a redemption suit under O. 34, R. 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure(3). When, therefore, payment is made to the mortgagor before a final decree is passed under O. 34, R. 3 or R. 8 declaring that the mortgagor is debarred from all right to redeem the mortgaged property, such payment will amount to the redemption of the mortgage and will give rise to the right of subrogation.

In regard to suits for sale of the mortgaged property there was a difference of opinion prior to 1929 as to whether a final decree for sale extinguished the right of redemption. In the undermentioned cases(4), which held that it was extinguished, the right of subrogation was denied when payment was made after such decree. The undernoted cases(5) however, which held that it was not extinguished, allowed the right of subrogation even when the payment was made after a final decree for sale.

By the amendment in 1929 of O. 34, R. 5, it is now perfectly clear that the right of redemption can be exercised until the confirmation of sale held in pursuance of a mortgage decree. A payment made before the date of confirmation of a sale will now be a redemption of the mortgage entitling the person paying to claim subrogation(6). (For a fuller discussion, see S. 60, Note 26.)

Equitable doctrine of subrogation applies to cases not covered by the T.P. Act. But unless there have been a payment by a party in discharge of the obligation of another and consequently a right of reimbursement accrued to him there is no scope for invoking the doctrine. Where a suit for possession is instituted and the decree is passed on the basis that the entire mortgage amount has become wiped off by adjustment against arrears of michavaram it is not a case where any payment has been made and no right of reimbursement can arise(7).

Calcutta High Court has taken the view in the undermentioned case(8) that even before payment by the guarantor to the creditor, the guarantor by invoking the equitable doctrine of subrogation can apply for temporary injunction.

As seen in Note 4 on S. 60, the right to redeem does not imply actual payment. The criterion of the right of redemption is the right to pay and recover back the property. Thus, in the peculiar circumstances of a case, a mortgage may be said to have been redeemed for the purpose of this section although the debt has been satisfied out of the rents and profits of the property and there is no need to make any payment.

8. There must be relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee.

The question of subrogation under this Act arises only on the redemption of a mortgage. This presupposes that there exists the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee between the person who is primarily liable for the payment and the person to whom the payment was made. If the relation of the mortgagor and mortgagee does not exist between such persons no right of subrogation will arise in favour of any person(1). In the undermentioned case(2) A mortgaged his property to B and then to C, B sued on his mortgage, obtained a decree and purchased the property himself. B then sold the property to D. A sued D for possession of the property contending that D's purchase was on his behalf. The claim was decreed on condition that A should pay to D certain amount. In order to pay the amount A raised money on mortgage from E and discharged the claim. In a suit by C, the subsequent mortgagee E claimed right of subrogation on the basis of the advance to A for discharging D's claim. It was held that there was no relation of mortgagor and mortgagee between A and D and consequently no prior mortgage in discharge of which the payment was utilised and that therefore there was no right of subrogation in E's favour.

An agreement to sell mortgaged property was entered into by the mortgagee in favour of the appellant. A suit for specific performance was filed by the purchaser was appellant and the purchaser directed the appellant to remit the balance amount within certain period. She failed to deposit the amount even within the extended period and therefore the suit for specific performance was dismissed. However she remained in possession of the property for more than 12 years otherwise than in accordance with law and matured right by adverse possession. She did not accept mortgage money tendered by the mortgagor nor, did she vacate the possession. Therefore the mortgagor filed a suit for declaration of title and confirmation of title.

Held, that the suit was not maintainable. Section 91 could not be invoked as she had no interest in the equity of redemption. She was not a mortgagee but was rather a volunteer. Since she had no interest in the equity of redemption, she could not be subrogated in place of the mortgagee. Her right having been matured by adverse possession, the suit filed by the mortgagor was time-barred(3).

9. "Other than the mortgagor".

It is well settled that a mortgagor who has created more encumbrances than one cannot set a prior encumbrance which he has discharged against a later encumbrance. This is the principle that a person cannot become his own creditor, and that in setting up the prior encumbrance which he has discharged against a second encumbrance, he would be derogating from his own grant(1). Moreover, when a mortgagor pays off a prior encumbrance created by himself, he does nothing but perform his own obligation(2). As has been seen in Note 2 an exception to the rule of intention against merger is that of payment by a person who is himself liable personally to pay the debt. Hence, even prior to the introduction of this section, the mortgagor discharging a prior debt was not entitled to be subrogated to the rights and remedies of his creditor(3). This has now been expressly recognised by the Legislature in the present section by the use of the words "other than the mortgagor"(4). Thus, a mortgagor, under the present section also, cannot claim the right of subrogations(5) and, whenever he pays off a prior mortgage, the payment enures for the benefit of a subsequent mortgagee, and enlarges his security by rendering it more valuable(6).

In the undermentioned case(7) it has been held that a mortgagor whose right to redeem a prior mortgage is extinguished can again acquire that right by subrogation if he redeems a subsequent mortgagee whose right to redeem the prior mortgage had not been so extinguished. It was also observed that "the new section does not state that the mortgagor can in no circumstances obtain the right of redemption which that mortgagee might have". It is submitted that this interpretation of S 92 does not seem to be correct in view of the words "other than the mortgagor".

The term "mortgagor" includes his successor-in-interest(8) and his agent(9). As to whether it includes purchasers of equity of redemption, see Note 13.

It has been held in the case noted below(10) that where a Hindu father mortgages the family property and subsequently in a family partition to mortgaged property is allotted to the son, the son would be in the position of an assignee from the original mortgagor and would not be barred from the right of subrogation.

If a sub-mortgagee effects the partial transfer of the mortgage right and when mortgage is redeemed in the presence of the sub-mortgagee the sub-mortgage is also redeemed. The test for determining whether the sub-mortgage right remains with the person redeeming as a separate right so as to be subject to redemption by subsequent sub-mortgagee would be to find whether the person redeeming has the right of subrogation in respect of the redeemed sub-mortgage(11).

When a mortgagee relinquishes his interest in favour of the mortgagor or when the mortgagor redeems the mortgage in the absence of sub-mortgagee, it cannot be said that the sub-mortgagee becomes a trespasser on the date of redemption or extinction of original mortgage. He has two distinct remedies (1) against original mortgagor and (2) against his mortgagor. If he were to become a trespasser then he would not be entitled to pursue the said two remedies(12).

10. Covenant to pay mortgage — Effect of.

It has been seen in Note 1 that the doctrine of subrogation rests on the equitable principle now found enacted in S. 69 of the Contract Act, that a person who is interested in the payment of money which another is bound by law to pay, and who therefore pays it, is entitled to be reimbursed by the latter. It has also been seen in Note 2 that the equitable rule of intention to keep alive a charge which is paid off is not applicable where the person paying off the charge is himself personally liable to pay it. It follows that a person who has covenanted with the mortgagor to pay off a liability and who makes the payment in pursuance of the covenant, is merely performing his own obligation and is not paying any money which "another is bound to pay" and cannot therefore claim any right of subrogation(1). Thus, where the purchaser of the equity of redemption(2) or a subsequent mortgagee(3), covenants to pay off the prior mortgage-debt, and pays off such debt, he merely performs his own obligation and therefore cannot claim subrogation. However the Madras High Court has, in Nachappa v. Samappa(4), demurred to the Broad proposition that if an alienee undertakes to pay certain mortgages from and out of the amount payable under the alienation taken by him, he cannot claim subrogation in respect of those mortgages.

A purchaser of mortgaged property subject to the mortgage cannot, however, be said to have covenanted to pay the mortgage-debt, and can, if he pays off the mortgage, claim to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee. In Malireddi v. Gopala Krishnavva(5), the auction-purchaser had purchased the property subject to the prior mortgages and it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that there was no personal covenant to pay the mortgage debt in that case. So also in Gokuldas v. Puranmal(6) the auction-purchaser had purchased only the mortgagor's interest in the property and it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that "the appellant (auction-purchaser) purchased the interest of the mortgagor only, and did not in any way bind himself to pay off that (mortgage) debt. When he paid the bank (the prior mortgagee) some six months afterwards it was not because he was under an obligation to do so". The undermentioned case(7) holding that an auction-purchaser of property subject to mortgages must be taken to have agreed to discharge them and cannot therefore claim subrogation by payment thereof is, it is submitted, not correct.

Where a vendee or a mortgagee from the owner covenants to pay a puisne mortgagee, he cannot claim subrogation against such mortgagee, in respect of any prior mortgage which he might have paid off even though he might not have covenanted to pay off the prior mortgage. This is also based on equitable principles(8). As was observed by Mukherjee, J., in Bisseswar Prasad v. Lala Sarnam Singh(9), "just as a person who has satisfied a mortgage which he has undertaken to discharge, cannot claim to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee as against other incumbrancers, a person who has undertaken to discharge a mortgage, but has defaulted, cannot set up as against that mortgagee, a right of subrogation based on the discharge of another incumbrance'

Where a vendee or a mortgagee from a person covenants to pay off two mortgages on the property but pays off only that the earlier of the two, he cannot, as against the second, claim to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee who has been paid off (10), firstly, on the ground that in discharging the earlier mortgagee, he is merely performing his own obligation or covenant and secondly, on the principle stated in Bissessar Prasad's case (11) referred to above

11. Redemption by subsequent mortgagee.

A subsequent mortgagee is a person falling under cl (a) of S 91 and has, therefore, a right to redeem or institute a suit for redemption of the mortgaged property. On redemption by him, therefore, of a prior mortgage he is subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee whom he redeems under paragraph 1 of this section (1). Even before the amendment in 1929, a subsequent mortgagee had, as has been seen in Note 2, a statutory right of subrogation under the old S 74 of the Transfer of Property Act (2).

As to the right of subrogation of the subsequent mortgagee paying off a period mortgage out of the amount left with him by the mortgagor, see Note 22

12. Redemption by prior mortgagee.

In the undermentioned case(1) A mortgaged his property to B and then to C. C brought a suit on his mortgage and impleaded B. B stated that he was a prior mortgagee and was willing to redeem C's mortgage. A preliminary decree for foreclosure was passed and B paid the decretal amount. B then filed a suit against A and sought to recover the amount paid in satisfaction of the mortgage in favour of C and the amount due on his own mortgage. It was argued that B who was a prior mortgagee could not, by redeeming the subsequent mortgage, claim subrogation to it. It was held that though under explanation to O. 34, R. 1, Civil Procedure Code, a prior mortgagee was not a necessary party to a suit on the subsequent mortgage, the explanation did not prohibit the subsequent mortgagee from joining the prior mortgagee as a party to his suit if he chose; after the prior mortgagee had decided that it was convenient for him to be joined in the suit on the subsequent mortgage and had allowed himself to be so joined, he was entitled to claim subrogation after redemption of the subsequent mortgage. As to the prior mortgagee's right to redeem the subsequent mortgage, see S. 91, Note 7.

13. Redemption by purchaser.

Section 59-A provides that the word "mortgagor" will, unless otherwise expressly provided, include persons deriving title from him. It has been seen in Note 3 on S. 91 that that section is one of such provisions inasmuch as it distinguishes between a "mortgagor" and persons deriving title from him. This section repeats that distinction and so provides an exception to the general rule laid down in S. 59-A. A purchaser or an auction-purchaser of mortgaged property is not the "mortgagor" for the purposes of this section and has, therefore, a right of subrogation under the first paragraph of the section(1). The contrary view taken in the undermentioned cases(2) is, it is submitted, not correct. Even before the amendment of 1929 it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Gokuldas v. Puranmat(3) that an auction-purchaser of the mortgagor's interest paying off a prior mortgage was not in the same position as the mortgagor.

As will be seen from the language of the first paragraph, the right of subrogation exists "against the mortgagor or any other mortgagee". Where the purchaser purchases the whole of the mortgaged property his right of subrogation will exist only against "any other mortgagee". As there is nothing left in the mortgagor he cannot exercise his right against the mortgagor. Where the purchaser purchases only a part of the property he can exercise his right of subrogation against the mortgagor or any other mortgagee as the case may be.

The law before the amendment of 1929 regarding the purchaser's right of subrogation was the same as it is after the amendment except that the Courts have not to consider the question of intention under the present section, which they had to go into before the amendment(4). The law applied was, as has been seen in Note 2, the rule of intention laid down in Gokuldas v. Putanmal(5) and affirmed by their Lordships in Mulireddi v. Gopalakrishnayya(6). In the latter case their Lordships observed as follows :

"It is now settled law that where in India there are several mortgages on a property the owner of the property, subject to the mortgagees, may if he pays off an earlier charge, treat it himself as buying it and stand in the same position as his vendor or to put it in another way, he may keep the encumbrance alive for his benefit and thus come in before a later mortgagee. It is further to be presumed and indeed the statute so enacts (Transfer of Property Act, S. 101) that if there is no indication to the contrary the owner has intended to have kept alive the previous charge if it would be for his benefit. So far therefore as Pangata or the respondents can be supposed to have bought the rights on the second mortgagee at the various times when they paid sums to him, so far they are entitled to stand in his shoes and claim priority over the present appellant who is the third mortgagee. This could hardly be disputed by counsel for the appellant, having regard to the decisions(7) of this Board.

The reason why a purchaser of equity of redemption is given a right of redemption is that unlike the mortgagor, he is not under any personal obligation to pay the mortgage-debt to the mortgagee(8). He may, however, covenant with the mortgagor to pay the mortgage debt personally in which case he cannot claim to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee whom he discharges(9).

A right of subrogation can be claimed by vendee only if the mortgagor has by a registered instrument agreed that he shall be so subrogated. Where the mortgagor entrusted the vendee with part of the sale consideration for the specific purpose of the same being paid to the mortgagee, no question of subrogation in favour of vendor would arise(10).

Where the plaintiff knowing that the mortgaged property was under attachment before judgment and was sold in Court auction, purchased it from the owner and brought a suit for declaration of his title and for possession, it was held that even on the basis of the doctrine of unjust enrichment the plaintiff would not be entitled to a decree for the amount by way of reimbursement. By introducing the doctrine of unjust enrichment, the provisions of S. 92(iii) would be rendered otiose(11).

Where a person does not purchase only the equity of redemption but purchases the property free from encumbrances and then pays off the prior mortgage to protect his own interest, it is needless to say that he is subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee whom he redeems(12).

If A and B mortgaged their joint property to C, and D creditor of B, alone brings the property to sell and purchases the same and redeems C, D is subrogated to the rights of C and A is entitled to redeem his share on paying the due on the mortgage(13).

14. Redemption by surety.

A surety for the payment of the mortgage-debt is a person referred to in clause (b) of S. 91. He has therefore a right of subrogation under the first paragraph of this section(1). This is based on the English law. The Special Committee in giving the right of subrogation to surety observes as follows :

"A surety is obviously entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the creditor if he pays him off. To use the argument of Sir S. Romilly in Craythorn v. Swinburn (14 Ves. 160 at p. 162) 'a surety will be entitled to every remedy which the creditor has against the principal debtor to enforce every security and all means of payment, to stand in the place of the creditor, not only through the medium of contract, but even by means of securities entered into without the knowledge of the surety, having the right to have those securities transferred to him, though there was no stipulation for that; and to avail himself of all those securities against the debtor'. The same principle has been incorporated in Ss. 140 and 141 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872."

The right of the surety to be subrogated to the position of the mortgagee was recognised in this country even before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act(2). In Heeralall v. Sved Oozeer Ali(3), a surety had paid off the mortgage-debt on default by the mortgagor and the question was whether the surety could proceed on the mortgage bond against the mortgagor. Markby, J., after pointing out that there was no authority on the subject in India, observed :

"Therefore we must decide the question by analogy of the law of other countries; and it appears to us clear that, by the law of England and the law of Scotland, and, as far as we are aware, by the general law of Europe, when a surety has paid off the debt of his principal, not only all the collateral securities are transferred to the surety, but, by what is called subrogation, the right is also transferred to him to stand in the place of the original creditor, and to use against the principal debtor every remedy which the principal creditor himself could have used. It seems to us, there-

Sections 140 and 141 of the Contract Act where an analogous provision is made are as follows :

"Section 140.— Where a guaranteed debt has become due, or default of the principal debtor to perform a guaranteed duty has taken place, the surety, upon payment or performance of all that he is liable for, is invested with all the rights which the creditor had against the principal debtor

Section 141.— A surety is entitled to the benefit of every security which the creditor has against the principal debtor at the time when the contract of suretyship is entered into whether the surety knows of the existence of such security or not and if the creditor loses or without the consent of the surety, parts with such security, the surety is discharged to the extent of the value of the security."

of decisions as to the position of a co-mortgagor redeeming a mortgage. Some cases(1) held that the redeeming co-mortgagor stepped into the shoes of the mortgagee whom he redeemed. Punjab and Haryana High Court in the undermentioned case(2) took the view overruling its earlier view in AIR 1982 Punj 182 that a co-mortgagor who redeems the entire mortgage is to be subrogated or to be treated for all intents and purposes as mortgagee qua the non-redeeming mortgages, that a redeeming mortgagor will be subrogated to the extent necessary for his own equitable protection. Undermentioned cases(3) took the view that the redeeming co-mortgagor acquired only a charge on the shares of the co-mortgagors as from the date of the payment made by him. The amendment now makes it clear that a redeeming co-mortgagor is subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee whom he redeems(4). mortgagors(5) The redeeming co-mortgagor stands in the position of the mortgagee as regards the non-redeeming co-mortgagors qua their shares, but holds his own share free from the mortgage. This position is due to the fact that the co-mortgagors are, in the eye of the law, principal debtors in respect of their own shares of the debt and sureties in respect of the shares of the other co-mortgagors, and as seen in Note 14, a surety satisfying the principal debt is entitled to stand in the position of the creditor and to hold the securities held by the creditor to realise the debt from the principal debtor(6) It has been held that where one of the co-mortgagors enters into possession of the mortgaged property after redeeming the mortgage, a suit by the other co-mortgagors for possession by partition is maintainable without a suit for redemption being brought in the first instance provided the right of redemption is not barred by limitation at the date of the suit(7) Where, in such a case, the other co-mortgagors also claim redemption and deposit the price of redemption fixed by the Court, the mortgage comes to an end and thereafter the possession of the co-mortgagor who first redeemed the mortgage is in the capacity as co-owner and not a mortgagee by subrogation(8) See also section 82, Note 17 and section 95, Note 1.

A right of a co-mortgagor to redeem the entire property subject to mortgage stands on the same footing as that of other persons mentioned in Section 91(9)

Right of subrogation does not cease with the passing of the decree in the mortgagee's suit for recovery of the mortgage money by sale(10)

A mortgagor redeeming his own share and purchasing the mortgagee rights in respect of the remaining property can acquire the status of the mortgagee and hold the mortgagee rights(11)

Although it is prescribed by O. 34, R. 1 CPC that all persons having an interest either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption, shall be joined as parties in suit relating to the mortgage but as per Ss. 91, 92 even one of the fractional owners of the equity of redemption may sue to redeem the whole mortgage and the suit is not liable to be dismissed for non-joinder of other co-mortgagors. Therefore even if the legal representatives of co-mortgagors have not been brought on record the Court is not precluded from passing a decree in favour of surviving mortgagor for redemption of the mortgaged land.(12)

As has been seen in Note 17 on S. 82, S. 95 and S. 82 are not mutually exclusive, and apart from the right of subrogation, the redeeming co-mortgagor has a charge for contribution under S. 82 enforceable within 12 years from the date of payment in excess of his share. (13) It has been held that this charge relates back to the date of the mortgage redeemed, for purposes of priority, though not for purposes of limitation. (14)

The principle of Section 92 will apply in the erstwhile Travancore State where T. P. Act was not made applicable. The rule of subrogation does not enable a redeeming co-mortgagor to claim to be the mortgagee but it entitled him to be reimbursed of whatever moneys he has spent before possession is recovered from him from other co-mortgagor. (15)

Where a co-mortgagor or a partowner only redeems the whole mortgage, and is thereupon subrogated to the rights of mortgagee under Section 92 of Act, his co-mortgagor or the mortgagors who had not joined in redemption, could redeem him only to extent of his/their share in the property (16)

When the co-mortgagor redeemed the mortgaged property and instituted suit for recovery of contribution held that the suit is for recovery of money. The starting point for limitation would therefore be the date on which co-mortgagor made payment and redeemed the mortgage. (17)

When one co-mortgagor gets the right of contribution against other co-mortgagor by paying the entire mortgage debt a correlated right also accrues to the latter to redeem his share of the property and get its possession on payment of his share of the liability to the former. This corresponding right of a non-redeeming co-mortgagor to pay his share of the liability and get possession of his property from the redeeming co-mortgagor subsists as long as the latter's right of contribution subsists. This right is purely an equitable right which exists irrespective of whether the right of contribution of the redeeming co-mortgagor amounts to mortgage or not. (18)

Rule of subrogation entitles a co-mortgagor to be reimbursed of whatever moneys he has spent before possession is recovered from him by the other mortgagor. (19)

When a redeeming co-mortgagor gets a right to contribution by other co-mortgagor a correlated right also accrues to the latter to redeem his share of the property and get possession on the payment of the liability to the former and this right subsists as long as the right to contribution subsists. (20)

A suit for redemption against redeeming co-mortgagor is maintainable if filed within 60 reason is that no one is entitled to officiously thrust a benefit on another and claim reimbursement. As has been seen already, the doctrine of subrogation rests on the same equitable principle as that enacted in S. 69 of the Contract Act under which only a person interested in the payment of money which another is bound to pay, and who therefore pays it, is entitled to reimbursement.

As stated by Mukerjee, J., in Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrika Singh(2) :

"Subrogation as a matter of right is never applied in aid of a mere volunteer. Legal substitution into the rights of a creditor for the benefit of a third person takes place only for his benefit, who, being himself a creditor, satisfies the lien of a prior creditor, or for the benefit of a purchaser, who extinguishes the encumbrances upon his estate, or of a co-obligor or surety, who discharges the debt, or of an heir, who pays the debt of the succession. Any one who is under no legal obligation or liability to pay the debt, is a stranger and, if he pays the debt, he is a mere volunteer."

The principle upon which the above proposition is based, namely, that a voluntary payment does not create any obligation to repay was laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ram Tulsh Singh v. Bhiswar Lal(3) decided before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act. Their Lordships observed :

"It is not in every case in which a man has benefited by the money of another that an obligation to repay that money arises. The question is not to be determined by nice considerations of what may be fair or proper according to the highest morality. To support such a suit, there must be an obligation, express or implied, to repay. It is well settled that there is no such obligation in the case of a voluntary payment by A of B's debt."

The contrary view taken in the undermentioned cases(4) that a volunteer can claim to be subrogated to the position of the mortgagee whom he pays, is, it is submitted, wrong. These cases follow the English decision Butler v. Rice (5). That case, no doubt, seems almost to go the length of holding that even a volunteer who pays off an existing mortgage would be entitled to the right of subrogation, but the two decisions Patten v. Bond(6) and Chetwynd v. Allen,(7) which the case of Butler v. Rice(8) takes as authority for the view taken in it, do not seem to warrant that conclusion. Those were cases in which payment was made by a third person on request and he was therefore rightly held to be subrogated the undermentioned English cases(9) also support the view that a volunteer is not entitled to a right of subrogation. The learned author Sheldon in his book on Subrogation(10) also says :

"The doctrine of subrogations is not applied for the mere stranger or volunteer, who has paid the debt of another, without any assignment or agreement for subrogation, being under no legal obligation to make the payment, and not being compelled to do so for the preservation of any rights or property of his own."

like equitable principle. Some of them⁽⁴⁾ rely upon the prior decision in Nasiruddin v. Ahmad Hussain.⁽⁵⁾ In that case A, a manager of a joint Hindu Family, contracted to sell the family property to B. Subsequently, he sold the land to C. C discharged a prior mortgage on the property. B sued for specific performance of his contract. In granting the decree their Lordships observed.

"It seems that the appellants (C) have, in virtue of their claim to be purchasers, discharged mortgages upon the property. In respect of any money paid by way of such discharge, they are entitled to stand in the shoes of the mortgagees whom they have paid off."

It is submitted that there is nothing in the above decision to warrant the view that it proceeded on the ground of good faith, irrespective of whether the title was void or voidable.

A distinction should be made between a transaction which is void or voidable and transaction which is only a sham or nominal one. A sham or nominal transfer is no transfer at all. A person claiming under such a transaction has no interest in the property and cannot claim the right of subrogation.⁽⁶⁾

Where a person entitled to the right of subrogation pays off a mortgagee in possession and obtains possession from the mortgagee, he is entitled to hold the mortgage as a shield to a claim for possession by the real owner and cannot be ousted unless and until he has been redeemed. But where such a person enters into possession by virtue of the transfer in his favour and the mortgage which he pays off does not give him any right to possession, he cannot use the payment of the mortgage-money as a shield to a suit for possession by the real owner but must surrender it to him. He can, however, enforce his rights under the mortgage if proper proceedings taken for that purpose.⁽⁷⁾

18. Redemption by trespasser.

Mere possession is not sufficient to support a claim of subrogation unless that possession is accompanied by some interest in the property which the person in possession is entitled to protect.⁽¹⁾ A trespasser who is in wrongful possession of the mortgaged property, paying off a mortgage-debt has no such interest and therefore cannot claim subrogation.⁽²⁾

19. Third paragraph.

As seen in Note 1 this paragraph deals with what is known as conventional or contractual subrogation. This class of subrogation arises, where a person advances money to the mortgagor to pay off a prior mortgage or charge under an agreement that he should be substituted for the mortgagee or the charge-holder and the mortgage or charge has been so paid off. Thus, in conventional subrogation, it is the mortgagor, and not the person advancing money, who redeems the mortgage with the money advanced by the latter, and the person advancing money acquires a right of subrogation because there is an agreement in his favour by the mortgagor that he should obtain that right. In other words, the right referred to usually as "conventional or contractual" subrogation is founded upon the principle of an agreement between a borrower and a lender that the lender shall be subrogated to the rights of the original creditor.(1)

Where a person advances money to redeem a usufructuary mortgage and obtained possession from the mortgagee but was ousted by subsequent mortgagee he is entitled to be subrogated to the mortgagee who was redeemed by funds provided by him and get possession from the subsequent mortgagee.(2)

A person claiming benefit under Sec 92(1) must show that he had pre-existing interest or charge on the property, that he redeemed the same in full and that he paid the amount from his own pocket and his own money for protection of his interests.(3)

This paragraph has to be distinguished from the first paragraph of the section. The difference is that the first paragraph deals with a person redeeming the mortgage and the third paragraph deals with a person who advances money with which the mortgage is redeemed. A person advancing money may or may not be a person interested in the property. Where he has an interest in the property, but does not himself redeem the mortgage, he cannot claim subrogation under the first paragraph.

In Hirasingh v Jaisingh(4) Sulaiman, C. J., stated the distinction between the first and the third paragraphs of the section as follows :

"The difference in the language of the two paragraphs is obvious. The first paragraph refers to a person who redeems and who on redeeming the property acquires the rights of the person whose mortgage he redeems. The third paragraph refers to a person who has advanced to a mortgagor money, with which the mortgage has been redeemed, who acquires the rights of the mortgagee whose mortgage has been redeemed. Thus the third paragraph does not require that the person who has advanced to a mortgagor the money, should himself have redeemed. All that it requires is that the money advanced by him should have been utilized for the purpose of redeeming the mortgage. That is why instead of the words 'whose mortgage he redeems' as used in the first paragraph, we have the words 'whose mortgage has been redeemed'. Now, it is well known that subrogation can arise in two ways: (1) by agreement and (2) by operation of law. The first paragraph deals with subrogation arising by operation of law and the third paragraph deals with subrogation by agreement. It is necessary that there should be an agreement for subrogation, that the agreement should be in writing and that it should be a registered instrument. It would be impossible to hold that these two paragraphs overlap each other, for the third paragraph requires certain stringent conditions which are not found in the first paragraph. They must therefore be mutually exclusive. The basic difference underlying these two paragraphs consists in this that the first paragraph refers to a person redeeming property and the third paragraph to a person who advances money with which a mortgage is redeemed.(5)"

Prior to the introduction of this paragraph in 1929, there was no provision dealing with conventional subrogation. But the right was recognised as existing, and was granted both where the agreement to subrogate was express(6) and where it was implied(7). An agreement to subrogate was implied where it could be gathered that the parties intended to keep the mortgage alive(8). Where there was no such agreement, express or implied, the mere fact that the money borrowed by a debtor was used to pay off a prior mortgage did not entitle the lender to the benefit of the discharged security(9). A mere stranger who had lent money to the mortgagor to redeem the mortgage and who was neither a surety of the mortgage debt nor interested in the property had in order to succeed on the equitable doctrine of subrogation to prove that there was an agreement between him and the debtor or the creditor that he should receive and hold an assignment of the debt as security(10). In some cases(11) the question whether a person who advanced money to the mortgagor for paying off a prior mortgage was subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee was held to be governed by the rule of intention referred to in Note 2 above. Under this section, there can be no subrogation in such cases unless there is an agreement therefor and the agreement is evidenced by will not ipso facto become a mortgage (16)

Where the requirements of this paragraph have been fully satisfied an agreement between the mortgagors inter se that the mortgage would be discharged by one of them personally would not take away the right of the person advancing money to claim a right of subrogation (17)

The word 'mortgagor' in this paragraph does not necessarily mean all the mortgagors where there are more than one. Hence one of the mortgagors can, by a covenant, give the right of subrogation. (18)

19A. Renewal of mortgage.

See under Note 20.

20. Person who has advanced money to a mortgagor.

The words "who has advanced to a mortgagor money" will include not only a simple creditor (1) but also a mortgagee (2) or a vendee (3) who has advanced money to the mortgagor in consideration of his mortgage or sale as the case may be. According to a Full bench case of the Nagpur High Court, (4) however the expression will not apply to the case of a vendee as in the case of a sale, it cannot be said that the money has been advanced, the word really contemplating a loan and the relation of a debtor and creditor. Such an interpretation of the expression 'advanced' as it is submitted, against the general trend of the judicial decisions.

It was held in the undermentioned case (5) that the words do not refer to mortgagee who has advanced money on a subsequent mortgage for the purposes of redeeming a prior mortgage in his own favour. A contrary view, however, was expressed in Kanhaya Lal v. Gulab Singh, (6) in which it was held that, on principle, it made no difference whether the money raised under a latter mortgage was applied in satisfaction of the earlier mortgage of a third person or in satisfaction of an earlier mortgage of the subsequent mortgagee himself. This view accords also with a Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court in Munna Lal v. Channu Lal (7) in which it was held that the renewal of a first mortgage after a second mortgage in favour of another will entitle the renewed mortgage to priority over the second mortgage.

It has been held that the word "mortgagor" in the expression "A person who has advanced money to a mortgagor" in paragraph 3 must be understood to mean the original mortgagor who was personally bound to pay and his legal heir (8) But this view does not seem to be correct in view of the new S 59A which has not been referred to in the judgments

21. "Mortgage has been redeemed".

In Janki Nath Roy v Pramatha Nath Roy(1) the Judicial Committee interpreted the expression "the mortgage has been redeemed" in the third paragraph as "payment off of the mortgage-money." Negating the contention that redemption was only complete when a re-conveyance or what in India takes the place of re-conveyance, is made their Lordships observed as follows :

"This contention, however, loses sight of the distinction between the redemption of a mortgage and the redemption of the property mortgaged. In their Lordships' opinion, it is clear that the words in the section, "mortgage has been redeemed," refer merely to the payment off of the mortgage-money, and not to an extinction of the mortgagees' rights over the mortgaged property. If such rights had become extinguished there would be none to which the person advancing the money, could be subrogated. The fourth paragraph moreover seems to contemplate that a mortgage may be redeemed in part, and this clearly shows that by redemption is meant no more than payment of the mortgage-money."

The fourth paragraph relates to the right of subrogation both under the first and the third paragraphs and it is conceived that though the first paragraph uses the expression "on redeeming property subject to the mortgage" it must, in the light of the observations of their Lordships quoted above, be interpreted to mean nothing more than mere payment of the mortgage-money

Where the mortgaged property has been sold in execution of the mortgage decree but the sale is set aside under C.P.C., O 21, R. 89 and the mortgage discharged with the money advanced by the creditor, the creditor may be subrogated under paragraph 3. The fact that the mortgage is discharged after the decree and sale on the mortgage does not affect the question.(2)

By obtaining an unregistered receipt from the mortgagee purporting to extinguish the mortgage the purchaser cannot be deemed to have subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee as such a receipt does not amount to redemption of the mortgage (3)

The subject may be discussed with reference to the following illustrative classes of cases

Illustration I.

A mortgages property worth Rs 2000, to B for Rs 1800 and then sells the property to C for Rs 200 subject to B's incumbrance. C pays Rs. 1800 to B in discharge of the mortgage

In this case, C as a purchaser of equity of redemption is a person interested in the property and pays B from his own pocket in order to protect his own interest. He comes under the first paragraph and is entitled to the right of subrogation, if he has not himself covenanted to pay the amount.(1)

2000 free of incumbrances. A receives the whole consideration of Rs. 2000 and pays B Rs. 1,800 in discharge of his mortgage.

In this case, the mortgagor himself redeems the mortgage, and the question of subrogation under the first paragraph does not arise. C, however, may be entitled to a right of subrogation under the third paragraph, if A has by a registered instrument agreed that C should be so subrogated (2). The right of subrogation under the first paragraph may also arise, if A fails to pay off B and C is compelled to pay off B in order to protect his own interest. In this case, C is a person interested in the property and is out of pocket to the extent of Rs. 1800 in excess of what he has paid to A as consideration for his sale.

Illustration III.

A mortgages property worth Rs. 2000, to B for Rs. 1,800 and then sells the same to C for Rs. 2000 free of incumbrances but leaves Rs. 1,800 in the hands of C for paying off B, and C accordingly pays him off.

In this case, what C pays to B is really part of the purchase-money, that is, A's money. It is therefore, really A, the mortgagor, who redeems (3). There can be no question of subrogation under the first paragraph. But the money with which A pays off B comes from C. C is therefore a person who has advanced money to A, the mortgagor, and will be entitled to claim subrogation under the third paragraph, only if A has, by a registered instrument, agreed that C shall be so subrogated (4).

Illustration IV.

A mortgages property worth Rs. 2,000 to B for Rs. 1,800 and then mortgages the same to C for Rs. 2,000. A receives the whole consideration and pays off B.

In this case there can be no question of subrogation under the first paragraph inasmuch as the mortgagor himself has redeemed the mortgage. The right may arise under the third paragraph, if A agrees by a registered instrument that C should be subrogated to the rights of B. (5) C will be entitled to claim subrogation under the first paragraph only if A fails to pay off B and he is required to redeem B in order to protect his own interest.(6)

In Sitaram v Kartar Singh,(7) it was, however, held by the High Court of Lahore that the payment to the prior mortgagee (B) though by the hand of the mortgagor (A) must be regarded as having been made by C and that C could claim subrogation on the basis of the payment. It is submitted that his view is not correct on principle.

Illustration V

A mortgages property worth Rs. 2,000 to B for Rs. 1,800 and then mortgages the same to C for Rs. 2,000. A receiving only Rs. 200, and leaving the balance with C himself who pays off B with that amount.

In this case, when C pays to B, he pays only A's money and not his own. It is, therefore, only A who redeems the mortgage, C being considered merely as the hand of A(8). So, the question of subrogation under the first paragraph will not arise. C however, may, as a person advancing money to A, be entitled to claim the right of subrogation under the third paragraph, if A has agreed by a registered instrument that C shall be so subrogated.(9)

A subsequent mortgagee redeeming a prior mortgage with money reserved with him by the mortgagor is not entitled to the benefit of Section 92.(10)

According to a Full Bench of the High Court of Madras(11) the reason why C cannot claim subrogation under the first paragraph is not that the payment must be regarded as a payment by the mortgagor himself but that paragraph applies only where a person having a pre-existing interest in the mortgaged property pays off the mortgage, and not where he gets the interest for the first time by advancing money to the mortgagor to enable him to pay off the mortgage. Varadachariar, J., observed as follows :

"There is a well-established distinction between cases in which a person who has a pre-existing interest in property pays off a prior charge on that property for the protection of his own interest, and cases in which a person acquires an interest in property only by reason of his advancing money to pay off an existing mortgage debt. It seems to me that clause (1) of S. 92 must be held to relate to the first type of cases above referred to and clause (3) to the second type."

It is submitted that this view introduces restrictions not warranted by the words of the section. A person advancing money and taking a sale or mortgage from the mortgagor is a person having an interest in the property and is entitled to redeem under S. 91; and if he is to be considered as redeeming the earlier mortgage with his own money (as the Full Bench assumes) there is no reason why the first paragraph should not apply. Again, suppose in the above illustration, C has to pay Rs. 2,200 instead of Rs. 1,800, to B. It is obvious that C cannot, if the distinction pointed out by the Full

Bench's property by manager and some others claiming property as their own, for paying off the mortgage decree — Agreement by these persons granting subrogation rights — No such right is created because it is only a mortgagor that can borrow money for paying off a prior mortgage and confer on the lender by registered instrument (rights of subrogation).

Bench is correct, claim subrogation even as regards Rs. 400 which he had paid over and above the amount undertaken to be paid by him, unless he had a registered agreement in his favour, a conclusion which is obviously not correct.(12)

It has also been held by a Full Bench of the Chief Court of Oudh(13) that C, in the above illustration, when he pays off B must be regarded as redeeming B with his own money and hence, therefore, claim subrogation under the first paragraph of the section. The reason given is that the case of a mortgage differs from that of a sale, in that the unpaid consideration money in the hands of the mortgagee cannot be considered, as in the case of a sale, as belonging to the mortgagor. A similar view has also been taken in the undermentioned cases (14). It is submitted that this view is not correct. It may, no doubt, be correct to say that as long as a portion of the consideration money in the hands of the mortgagee remains unpaid, it is the mortgagee's money, but still when it is paid to the prior mortgagee B, it is paid as mortgage consideration and therefore as the mortgagor's money. As has been rightly pointed out by Bennet J., in his dissenting judgment in the Oudh Full Bench case, there is a very definite pronouncement as early as 1883 by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Moheshlal v. Mohant Bawan Das (15) on the question of title to the money left with the mortgagee for the purpose of paying off the prior mortgage, their Lordships in that case observed,

"Although the money was paid by the plaintiff C (Ganashita) to E (Munir) for the satisfaction of the mortgage, it was paid with the money borrowed from the plaintiff C by A (Munir) and it was A's money. A was liable to him (B). The mortgage was therefore paid off by Munir (A) and not by the plaintiff C."

In a recent case,(16) decided by the High Court of Bombay, A who was a mortgagee in possession of some lands of B sued B on a money claim and attached before sale some of the above lands amongst others. Subsequently B mortgaged the above lands to C and later on of his consideration with C to redeem A's mortgage. On such redemption, C was bound to take possession of the mortgage lands. C deposited the amount in Court and presented an application under S. 88. A accepted the amount in full satisfaction of the mortgage debt and delivered possession to C. Subsequently A obtained a decree in his money suit and wanted to sell the mortgage land in execution. C claimed that the property should be sold subject to the prior charge acquired by subrogation under the first paragraph. On behalf of A, it was contended that as the money was left with C for redeeming A, the deposit was made only as an agent of the mortgagor. The first paragraph therefore could not apply, nor could C claim subrogation under the third paragraph as there was no registered agreement. It was held that as A accepted the deposit from C and made by a person entitled under S. 91 to sue for redemption, he could not now be permitted to say that the deposit was not by C on his own behalf but as an agent of the mortgagor. C was therefore entitled to subrogate under the first paragraph.

16. AIR 1942 Bom 227 (231) (DB).

When right of mortgagor to redeem is lost by foreclosure decree it cannot be revived by redemption of first mortgage by puisne mortgagee. A mortgagor executed usufructuary mortgage and later executed second mortgage, which was simple mortgage. First mortgagee being dispossessed obtained a decree for foreclosure but puisne mortgagee was not made a party. The second mortgagee brought suit for redemption and obtained a decree. Thus second mortgagee was not made a party in a suit for foreclosure he could redeem the first mortgage and acquire all the rights of first mortgagee and mortgagor will not be entitled for redemption of first mortgage (17)

Where a person having some interest in the property pays the money in order to save the property from loss or destruction he has first charge on property for payment. Here puisne mortgagee obtained partial discharge of a prior mortgage without redeeming the mortgage, to save the property from being sold. Though right of subrogation may not be available to puisne mortgagee, but he is entitled to charge on property for the amount spent to save the property from being sold. (18)

23. Fourth paragraph — Mortgage must be redeemed in full.

The last paragraph of the section provides that the right of subrogation shall not be claimed unless the mortgage in respect of which the right is claimed has been redeemed in full. (1)

A merely partial redemption of the mortgage cannot give rise to any right of subrogation (2)

The object of this provision is to avoid complications and difficulties in apportioning the claims arising from subrogation (3). Before the introduction of this paragraph in 1929 there was no provision similar to this paragraph and the judicial decisions were not unanimous on the point. The general trend was that in order to entitle a person to a right of subrogation there must be complete discharge of the mortgage-debt and that a partial discharge of the prior mortgage was not sufficient. (4) A contrary view was however taken in the undermentioned cases (5). In view of the express provisions in the present paragraph, the latter view is no longer good law.

This paragraph assumes that the mortgage has not been split up. Where it is split up, the mortgage has to be looked upon as several distinct mortgages. Consequently, if there is a redemption of one independent portion in full, then the provisions of this paragraph are complied with so far as that part is concerned (6) In the undermentioned case(7) A, who owned a one-tenth share, and B, who owned the remaining share in a property, jointly mortgaged it first to C, and then to D. C sued on his mortgage and obtained a decree under which A and D were entitled to redeem the one-tenth share on payment of Rs. 18,000 and B and D, to redeem the nine-tenth on payment of Rs. 4,000. D as a subsequent mortgagee, redeemed B's share by paying the amount and claimed to be subrogated in respect of the nine-tenth share of B. It was argued that as D had redeemed only a part of the mortgage, he could not claim subrogation. It was held that the mortgage was split up by the decree of the Court and that D having paid off the entire debt on B's share, could claim subrogation on the principle stated above. As to when a mortgage security is split up, see Note 41 on Section 60.

The redemption of a mortgage in full does not mean that the entire amount due on the basis of the mortgage must have been paid. If the mortgagee agrees to let the mortgage be redeemed on payment of a lesser amount, such payment also will give rise to the right of subrogation (8) Similarly, it is not necessary that the redemption must always be by payment in cash only. Where a mortgage was redeemed partly by paying cash and the balance by execution of a fresh mortgage(9) or by giving a hundee(10) in favour of the mortgagee, it was held that the mortgage had been redeemed in full.

It is unnecessary that the redemption should be by only one person, A, B, C can join together in redeeming the mortgage and when they do so each will be entitled to subrogation to the extent of the amount each has contributed towards redemption (11) In such a case it is not necessary that all must pay simultaneously nor can it be said that it is only the person who paid last that has redeemed the mortgage and that he alone is entitled to subrogation (12) Where a person advances money to the mortgagor to redeem a mortgage and the money advanced forms only a part of the amount that went towards redemption, the person advancing the money will be entitled to claim subrogation to the extent of the amount he advanced.(13)

It has been held that though a right of subrogation under this section may not arise unless the decision in 10 Cal 1035 - 11 Ind App 126 has been subjected to various exceptions and should be construed liberally) surety has redeemed the mortgage in full, this principle will not apply where the circumstances of the case do not give rise to a right of subrogation but to a right under S. 140, Contract Act. It has been held that under the latter section the surety who has paid off a part of the mortgage-debt may nevertheless claim the benefit of the security in respect of the amount paid by him. (14)

24. Rights of subrogee.

Under this section a person entitled to subrogation enjoys, so far as regards redemption, foreclosure or sale of the mortgaged property, the same rights as the mortgagee whose mortgage he redeems may have against the mortgagor or any other mortgagee. (1) A subrogee, however, will not acquire any rights which the prior mortgagee might have acquired otherwise than as such mortgagee. (2) Thus, suppose A mortgages properties x and y to B then property y alone to C. B and C obtain decrees for sale on their respective mortgages without making each other a party to his suit, and purchase the property themselves. C then redeems B. C thus becomes entitled to the rights of B by subrogation, and the effect is that C as a purchaser of property having paid off B, becomes an absolute owner of property y. As regards property x however, C has a mortgagee right only. B's rights as an auction-purchaser of property are not affected by C's redemption and hence B can redeem property x from C. (3) Similarly, the subrogee is not entitled to claim the advantages and benefits which he may personally derive by the act of redemption. Thus, where a co-mortgagor redeems the mortgaged property by paying an amount which is much less than the amount actually due on the mortgage, the other co-mortgagors are entitled to claim their share by paying proportionately the amount actually paid by the redeeming co-mortgagor. The subrogee is not entitled to claim their proportionate shares of the mortgage debt due on the date of redemption by him (4) The reason is that the right of subrogation is based on the doctrine of reimbursement (5)

This section only confers on the subrogee the rights of the mortgagee whom he redeems. The subrogee is not necessarily entitled to the remedies of the mortgagee whom he redeems (6)

(A) Rights against mortgaged properties.

A subrogee can enforce his right of foreclosure or sale against the property against which the mortgagee, whom he has redeemed, could have proceeded. Thus, if A mortgages properties x and y to B and then mortgages y alone to C. C on redeeming B, can foreclose or sell both the properties x and y in enforcement of his right of subrogation (7) Similarly, where A and B owning property x jointly, mortgage it to C and subsequently A alone mortgages his share to D. D on redeeming C, can exercise his right of subrogation by foreclosure or sale of the entire property (8)

A subrogee can, however, proceed against those properties only against which the prior mortgagee could proceed on the date of redemption by the subrogee and not necessarily against all the property which may originally have been comprised in the mortgage. Thus, suppose A mortgages his properties x, y and z to B. B releases property x from his mortgage. Subsequently, A mortgages property z to C who redeems B. C, as a subrogee, can proceed only against properties y and z as these alone were subject to mortgage on the date of redemption by C and not x, y and z originally comprised in B's mortgage (9)

A subrogee, who is also entitled to contribution in aid of enforcing his right of subrogation in respect of the entire mortgage as an indivisible whole, may split up the mortgage and distribute the mortgage liability over different portions of the mortgaged property in the respective possession of different subsequent transferees (10)

(B) Right to possession.

Where the mortgagee who is redeemed is entitled to retain in possession under his mortgage, the subrogee is also entitled to retain possession of the property until he is paid off (11) But where the prior mortgage is a simple one and a subsequent usufructuary mortgagee redeems him, the latter cannot, when he is himself redeemed, resist delivery of possession on the ground of subrogation (12) Similarly, a person who claims to be subrogated to the rights of a mere charge-holder cannot claim possession of the property charged, if the charge-holder has merely a right to put the property charged to sale and has no right to possession. (13) In the undermentioned case (14) a usufructuary mortgagee paid off a prior simple mortgage after the latter had obtained a decree for sale, and sought to bring the property mortgaged to sale for the purpose of recovering the amount of the simple mortgage, retaining his own lien as a usufructuary mortgagee. It was held by the Allahabad High Court that he was entitled to retain possession, under S. 72, of the mortgaged property as a usufructuary mortgagee until the amount due on both mortgages was discharged. No doubt, under the circumstances of the case, the subsequent mortgagee had under S. 72 a right to add the money spent by him to preserve the mortgaged property from sale to the principal money of his own mortgage and to retain possession thereof till the recovery of such amount. But, as has been seen under Notes on S. 72, the right under that section is only an additional one and not the sole remedy. It is, therefore, open to the usufructuary mortgagee as a subrogee under S. 92 to sell the mortgaged property for the recovery of the amount spent to redeem the prior mortgage.

(C) Right to prior mortgagee's leasehold rights.

Where a mortgagee is redeemed all subsidiary rights created on the mortgaged property, such as lease hold rights ipso facto come to an end. A subrogee, therefore, cannot get the prior mortgagee's rights as a landlord as against the tenants (15) See however, the undermentioned case (16) for a contrary view.

(D) Extent of subrogation.

As the doctrine of subrogation rests on the doctrine of reimbursement, the subrogee can claim subrogation only to the extent to which his money has been utilised in relieving the burden of the prior mortgage (17) If the whole of the prior mortgage has been discharged with his money, he will be subrogated to the entire mortgage rights of the prior mortgagee (18) But if the amount advanced or paid by him has gone only in part satisfaction of the prior mortgage, the balance being paid the mortgagor himself, he will be subrogated only to the extent of the amount paid by him which has gone in satisfaction of the prior mortgage, and not to the entire rights of the mortgagee. (19)

redemption, any amount spent by him on improvement of the mortgaged property, a subrogee to his rights making improvements is entitled to claim under the terms of the mortgage, the amount spent by him over improvements.(20)

Where out of the consideration of a sale a portion was left with the buyer to pay off a prior mortgage decree and owing to the delay on the part of the buyer the property was sold but the sale was set aside on payment of the decretal amount together with the auction-purchaser's volatium under O. 21, R. 89 of the Civil Procedure Code, it was held that the buyer could not, as a subrogee, claim subrogation in respect of the auction-purchaser's volatium inasmuch as the money did not go to the mortgagee.(21)

(E) Right to claim interest.

A subrogee on redemption of a prior mortgagee stands in the shoes of the prior mortgagee and can claim interest on the amount paid by him to discharge the mortgage, in the circumstances in which the prior mortgagee could have claimed it.(22)

Where the purchaser of the equity of redemption redeems a prior simple mortgage and is in possession, there is a difference of opinion as to whether interest should be allowed to the subrogee on the amount spent by him towards redemption. One view is that, as he enjoys the usufruct, he cannot be allowed interest for the period of possession (23) The second view is that an account of the profits enjoyed by the purchaser must be taken and if the profits fall short of the interest, only then should the balance of interest be allowed (24) The third view is that the purchaser is entitled to interest even though he is in possession. The reason given is that the purchaser has two distinct rights, namely, a right as owner of the equity of redemption, and a right as second mortgagee. By virtue of his first right, he is entitled to usufruct of the land. In his right as mortgagee he is entitled to interest, and neither of these rights must be made subservient to the other (25) It is submitted that the last view is to be preferred. The first two views proceed on the assumption that the purchaser enjoys the possession and the usufruct in his capacity of a mortgagee. This is incorrect as the mortgage that is redeemed being a simple one, did not give the subrogee any right to possession and hence any right to the usufruct.

25. Right of subrogation is available to successors-in-interest.

The right of subrogation conferred by this section is not confined to the first person only who redeems the prior mortgage. Every other person, who succeeds to the entire right possessed by the subrogee by redemption, transfer or otherwise, will also be clothed with the right of subrogation. (1) In the undermentioned case (2) a certain land was mortgaged to A, then to B and then to C. C's mortgage was effected to satisfy A's mortgage decree. C thus became subrogated to A's rights. In order to pay off C's mortgage decree, the land was sold to D, who borrowed the purchase money from P to whom he mortgaged it on the day of the sale. It was held that P's mortgage was entitled to priority over B's mortgage to the extent to which the loan secured thereby had gone to discharge A's mortgage.

26. Purchaser entitled to subrogation — Pre-emptor whether can claim that right.

Where a purchaser has, by redeeming a prior mortgage, obtained a right of subrogation, it has been held that the person who obtains the property from him by preemption is also entitled to the right of subrogation. (1)

27. Enforcement of rights acquired by subrogation.

The right of subrogation cannot only be set up by way of defence (1) can be enforced by a suit (2) Where a mortgage has been redeemed before a decree has been obtained on it the subrogee can enforce his right by way of a suit based on the redeemed mortgage. (3)

Where payment is made, after a preliminary decree has been passed on the mortgage, by a person competent to redeem under S 91 who is a party to the suit the subrogee is entitled to be substituted for the plaintiff-mortgagee and can apply for a final decree to be passed in his name (4) Where, however, a final decree has been passed, it has been held that a payment of such a decree satisfies it and no one can proceed with its execution. The only remedy for the subrogee in such a case is by way of a suit (5) Such a suit is not barred by S 11 or S 47 or O 2, R 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure (6) As to the starting point of limitation for such a suit, see the AIR Commentaries on the Limitation Act, 1963 7th (1997) Edition Article 62 Note 14.

Where a subsequent mortgagee pays off a prior mortgage and steps into the shoes of the prior mortgagee by subrogation, his position is the same as that of a person who holds two mortgages in his favour on the same property by the same mortgagor. As seen in Notes on S 67 A, if such a mortgagee has a right to obtain the same kind of decree in respect of both the mortgages he will be bound to sue on both the mortgages together (7) The same consideration would apply where the subsequent mortgage is to pay off the prior mortgage and only part of the consideration is utilized to redeem the prior mortgage. In such a case also, the person advancing the money is in the position of the prior mortgagee in respect of the amount utilized to discharge his mortgage and in the position of a subsequent mortgagee in respect of the balance.

It has been held that a person advancing money on a mortgage to pay off a prior mortgage, can claim priority for his advance in a suit based on his own mortgage (8).

29. Defence of subrogation is not barred even if suit to enforce it is time barred.

Limitation only bars the remedy but does not generally destroy the right. Hence, although a suit to enforce a right may be barred by limitation such right may be set up in defence. Thus, a person who is subrogated to the rights of a mortgagee may set up the mortgage as a shield although a suit for enforcing such mortgage may be barred by limitation.(1) A contrary view has been taken by a single Judge of the Madras High Court in the undermentioned case(2). It is submitted that this view is not correct.

30. Res judicata.

Under the Explanation to O. 34, R. 1, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, a prior mortgagee is not a necessary party to suit for foreclosure or sale by a puisne mortgagee but a subsequent mortgagee is a necessary party to such a suit as being interested in the equity of redemption. Where a first mortgage is executed in favour of A, the second in favour of B, and the third in favour of C and C redeems the mortgage in favour of A, C has dual capacity: (i) as a prior mortgagee, and (ii) as a subsequent mortgagee. He is a necessary party to a suit by B on his mortgage in his capacity as a subsequent mortgagee but not so in his capacity as a prior mortgagee. Where he is made a party to a suit on the mortgage by B but the prior mortgage is not impugned or sought to be postponed in any way, he need not set up the prior mortgage, as such a plea is a paramount claim not affecting the claim made on the puisne mortgage of B and therefore not a ground of defence (1). Thus, if B admits the validity of the prior mortgage in his plea C need not set up his rights under the first mortgage and a subsequent suit on the first mortgage by C is not barred as res judicata (2). If, however, B impleads C only in his capacity as a subsequent mortgagee, thus impliedly negating the priority under the first mortgage, C must, by way of defence, set up his priority under the first mortgage, otherwise he will be barred from doing so later on the grounds of res judicata (3).

B sues on his mortgage in Munsif's Court and impleads C as a subsequent mortgagee. C does not set up his rights as a subrogee in that suit. C then institutes a suit on the prior mortgage in the Court of Subordinate Judge as the claim exceeds the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of the Munsif's Court. Such a suit is not barred, as the Munsif was not competent to try the subsequent suit (4).

31. Plea of subrogation.

A transferee from the mortgagor who claims a right of subrogation against the plaintiff mortgagee by virtue of payment of certain prior mortgages must aver that the mortgagor in the prior mortgages was the mortgagor of the plaintiff, that the properties mortgaged were the same and that the payment had been made by or on behalf of himself (1). A plea of subrogation depending upon investigation of facts cannot be raised for the first time in second appeal (2) or before the Supreme Court (3).

[93. PROHIBITION OF TACKING.— No mortgagee paying off a prior mortgage, whether with or without notice of an intermediate mortgage, shall thereby acquire any priority in respect of his original security, and, except in the case provided for by Section 79, no mortgagee making a subsequent advance to the mortgagor, whether with or without notice of an intermediate mortgage, shall thereby acquire any priority in respect of his security for such subsequent advance.]

1. Legislative changes.

The present section corresponds word for word with the old S. 80. The old S. 93 was repealed by Act V of 1908 and re-enacted as O. 34, R. 8 of the Civil P. C. The old S. 80 was re-numbered as S. 93 and inserted after S. 92 by the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, 1929. The reason for the change given in the Report of the Special Committee is, "As the principle of tacking is closely allied to subrogation, we propose to put S. 80 as S. 93."

2. English and Indian law of tacking compared.

See Note 1 on S. 79.

3. Scope.

This section deals with two classes of cases, namely,—

(1) where a mortgagee pays off an earlier mortgage with or without notice of an intermediate mortgage, and

(2) where a mortgagee makes a subsequent advance to the mortgagor with or without notice of an intermediate mortgage.

As to the first class of cases the section provides that the mortgagee cannot tack on his mortgage to the mortgage which he has paid off. As to the second class of cases it provides that the mortgagee cannot, except as provided by S. 79, tack on his subsequent advance to his mortgage. The effect of S. 79 and this section is that where a mortgage to secure future advances expresses the maximum to be secured, but after certain advances within maximum have been made, a second mortgage is executed, the second mortgagee, if he had notice of the prior mortgage, will have to yield to the prior mortgagee in respect of further advances made after the second mortgage by the latter up to the maximum stated, although such advances may be made with knowledge of a subsequent mortgage, but if no maximum was expressed or if the subsequent mortgagee had no notice of the prior mortgage, the prior mortgagee making further advances after the second mortgage will have no priority in respect of such advances. Section 93 is thus complimentary to S. 79.(1)

The basis of this section is to be found in the general principle, enunciated by the maxim qui prior est tempore, potior est jure (where the equities are equal, the first in time shall prevail) and which is found enacted in S. 48. The effect of the section is, in fact, to state that the general principle cannot be defeated by the mortgagee claiming to tack his mortgage on to a prior mortgage paid off by him or to tack on to his mortgage a subsequent advance made by him, to the prejudice of intermediate mortgagees (2) the section only enacted what had already been regarded before as settled law in India.(3)

3. See Note 1 on Section 79

This section and S. 79 deal with a case where there are two different mortgagees and have no relevancy in a case where there is only one mortgagee and will not apply to the question relating to the character or constitution of the said mortgage.(4)

4. "With or without notice."

Notice of the existence of an intermediate mortgage is immaterial under this section, except in cases falling under 79.(1)

5. "Intermediate mortgage."

The section, in terms, applies only to the question of priority of an intermediate mortgage over a subsequent mortgage or a subsequent advance, where the mortgagee pays off a prior mortgage or the subsequent advance is made by the prior mortgagee. The principle on which the section is based is, however, applicable even to intermediate purchasers of the property. In Bhagwan Das v. Sham Das(1), X mortgaged his property to A in February 1893, and sold a portion of the equity of redemption to B in August 1894. A subsequently advanced a further sum of money to X in 1895. B claimed to redeem the mortgage of 1893 and was met by the plea that he should pay up the subsequent advance also before redemption. It was held by the High Court of Allahabad that to allow such a plea would violate the principle laid down in old S. 80 corresponding to this section.

6. "Subsequent advance" — Meaning of.

Meaning of. It has been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in The Imperial Bank of India v. U Rai Gyaow Thu and Co. Ltd (1) that the word "subsequent" in this section must, from the context, be taken to mean subsequent to an intermediate mortgage and that an advance when made after another mortgage is granted becomes a "subsequent advance". A mortgaged his property to B in 1874. He subsequently mortgaged the same property to C in March 1877 and thereafter to B in November 1877. B obtained a decree on both his mortgages without impeaching C, got the property sold in court auction, and took the sale proceeds in satisfaction of both the mortgages. C then sued on his mortgage, obtained a decree, and then claimed to recover the surplus proceeds of the said sale in the hands of B after satisfying the first mortgage of 1874. It was held that he was entitled to do so and that to allow B to retain the proceeds in satisfaction of both his mortgages would be against the provisions of old S. 80 corresponding to this section (2).

A deposited title deeds with S. I. Bank at Coimbatore and secured a loan the amount of which he placed in fixed deposit in the same Bank. He deposited the receipt with the branch of that Bank at Salem and obtained the facility of operating a current account to the extent of the amount lying in fixed deposit. Subsequently he again created a mortgage by deposit of title deeds over the same properties in favour of C Bank. Later the dues under the current account at Salem were adjusted by S. I. Bank by transferring the fixed deposit amount. Both the S. I. Bank at Coimbatore and C Bank obtained decrees on their mortgages and the question arose whether C Bank was entitled to priority because the transaction in favour of S. I. Bank was only a mortgage to secure future advances at Salem and that such advances were made only subsequent to the mortgage in favour of C Bank. It was held that the suit of S. I. Bank at Coimbatore was not in respect of moneys due to their branch at Salem. The debt due to the Salem branch had been wiped out by adjustment of the amount of fixed deposit. The equitable mortgage in favour of S. 1. Bank at Coimbatore must be deemed not an mortgage to secure future advance to a limit but to have become an effective mortgage to secure the entire sum when the amount was credited in his current account. As admittedly the mortgage in favour of C Bank was of a subsequent date, it was not entitled to priority.(3)

1. History of the section.

The old S. 94 of the Act of 1882 dealt with the question of costs of the mortgagee in mortgage suits. It was repealed in 1908 and was re-enacted in the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, as Order 34, Rule 10.

This section is new and is a re-enactment of the latter portion of the old section 75 which ran as follows :

“Every second or other subsequent mortgagee has, so far as regards redemption, foreclosure and sale of the mortgaged property, the same rights against the prior mortgagee or mortgagees as his mortgagor has against such prior mortgagee or mortgagees, and the same rights against the subsequent mortgagees (if any) as he has against his mortgagor.”

The first portion of the above section is covered by Ss. 91 and 92 of the Act (1)

The provisions of O. 34, R. 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure as they were in 1908 and which corresponded to the repealed S. 75, have also been repealed by Act XXI of 1929.

2. Principle.

This section is an enactment in part of the well-known principle expressed by the phrase “redeem up and foreclose down” (1) It provides that a mesne mortgagee has the same rights against mortgagees posterior to himself as he has against the mortgagor (2) The reason is that the posterior mortgagee whose interest has only been carved out of the mortgagor's interest remaining after the anterior mortgage, cannot, as against the latter, be in any better position than the mortgagor himself.(3)

The section, in terms, deals with the rights of mesne mortgagees. But it cannot be doubted that the same principle is applicable to the first mortgagee also who will have, against subsequent mortgagees, the same rights as he has against the mortgagor (4). The words "second or other subsequent" occurred in the old S. 75, and the word "mesne" was used in the corresponding O. 34, R. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code as it stood before 1929. They were properly used in those provisions as the rights of a mortgagee were dealt with in relation to prior as well as subsequent mortgagees. In the present section, the rights of mortgagees are dealt with as against posterior mortgagees alone. The word "mesne" seems to have been inadvertently retained.

Lis pendens does not apply to successive mortgages created prior to any suit in a Civil Court or in matters arising for enforcement of the rights under such mortgages. Consequently sale in execution of second mortgagee's decree cannot affect the rights of the prior mortgagee (5).

Since the mortgagee failed to repay loan, the State Financial Corporation obtained decree and in execution thereof the mortgaged property was sold and the sale was concluded. The mortgagee had also obtained loan from a Bank, by executing a simple mortgage. The Bank filed a suit for recovery of loan and ex parte decree was passed and, the property was sold and delivered to purchaser. The suit instituted by the Bank was finally disposed of and decreed prior to the sale of property in proceedings initiated by the Corporation and therefore the Bank was not affected by the sale concluded in favour of the Corporation. There was no lis pendens. The principle of lis pendens does not apply to the previously existing transfers including mortgages(6).

3. "The same rights..... as he has against the mortgagor".

Sections 67 to 73 deal with the rights of mortgagees against mortgagors. This section provides that a mortgagee can also exercise all such rights against mortgages posterior to himself. Thus, a prior mortgagee can require the subsequent mortgagee to redeem him or, in default, to submit to a foreclosure or sale of the property (1). (Section 67.) Again where, under the terms of the prior mortgage, the mortgagee is entitled to get possession of the mortgaged property under certain circumstances, he can, on the happening of such circumstances, sue a subsequent usufructuary mortgagee for recovery of possession(2).

This section must, however, be read subject to the proviso to sub-s. (1) of S. 68. That proviso enacts that a transferee from the mortgagor shall not be liable to be sued for the mortgage-money in a case falling under Cl. (a) of that sub-section. A prior mortgagee will not, therefore, be entitled to a personal decree for the mortgage-money, against the subsequent mortgagee, though he may be entitled to such a decree against the mortgagor(3).

The "rights" referred to are the rights of the mortgagee, under the mortgage, that is, rights flowing from the terms constituting the mortgage. It will not include rights, for instance, on covenants by the mortgagor not to alienate his properties, which do not form part of the terms of the mortgage. See Note 18 on section 10.

As to the effect of joinder and non-joinder of prior and puisne mortgagees as parties to suits on mortgages, see Note 19 on section 67.

4. Rights of persons deriving title from mesne or prior mortgagees.

By virtue of S. 59 A, a person deriving title from a mesne or prior mortgagee will stand in the same position as the mortgagee himself in respect of the enforcement, against the mortgagor, of the rights under the mortgage. Thus, a purchaser from a prior or mesne mortgagee will have the same rights against posterior mortgagees as the prior or mesne mortgagee himself has against the mortgagor.

^A[95. RIGHT OF REDEEMING CO-MORTGAGOR TO EXPENSES.—

Where one of several mortgagors redeems the mortgaged property, he shall, in enforcing his right of subrogation under section 92 against his co-mortgagors, be entitled to add to the mortgage-money recoverable from them such proportion of the expenses properly incurred in such redemption as is attributable to their share in the property.]

[A] Sections 95 and 96 were substituted for the original section 95, by the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, 1929 (XX of 1929), S. 48. Original S. 96 was repealed by the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 (V of 1908), S. 156 and Schedule V.

1. Scope of the section.

In cases arising prior to the Act it was held that a co-mortgagor redeeming the mortgage obtained a lien on the shares of other co-mortgagors for their proportionate share of the mortgage-money with a right to retain possession until such share is paid by them(1).

Section 95 of the Act gave legislative effect to this view and enacted as follows :

"Where one of several mortgagors redeems the mortgaged property, and obtains possession thereof, he has a charge on the share of each of the other co-mortgagors in the property for his proportion of the expenses properly incurred in so redeeming and obtaining possession."

The section, however, gave rise to various interpretations as to the nature of the right acquired and the conditions requisite for the acquisition of the right. One set of cases(2) held that the redeeming co-mortgagor had only a charge on the property and another set of cases(3) held that the right acquired was one of subrogation of the rights of the mortgagee whom he had redeemed. According to a third set of cases(4) he was only a charge-holder with rights of priority over intermediate mortgagees or purchasers.

There was also a difference of opinion as to the class of mortgages to which the section applied. It was held in some cases(5) that the section applied only to mortgages under which possession was obtained, while other cases(6) held a contrary view. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ahmad Wali Khan v. Muysamat Shamsh-ul-Jahan Begum(7) took the latter view and observed as follows :

"That section might be so strictly construed as to limit its operation to mortgages under which possession passes, and therefore, on redemption properly repasses. But it seems to their Lordships more reasonable to construe the section distributively, to make the condition of obtaining possession apply only to the cases in which its fulfilment is from the nature of the mortgage possible, and in other cases to make the charge follow upon redemption."

In cases of usufructuary mortgages it was held that a co-mortgagor should obtain possession and retain it in order to enable him to claim a charge(8). If he obtained possession, he could retain it till he was paid by the co-mortgagors the amount representing their share of the mortgage-money(9). He could not sue for sale(10). See also the undermentioned cases(11).

Co-mortgagor pending his suit to redeem the mortgage extinguishing ownership of the property by selling equity of redemption enables the other mortgagor to redeem the mortgage by bringing fresh suit(12). See also undermentioned case(13).

The conflict of opinion has now been set at rest by the present amended section, recognising the right of the redeeming co-mortgagor to subrogation under S. 92(14). In enforcing such right of subrogation the redeeming co-mortgagor has, under this section, a right to add, to the mortgage-money recoverable from his co-mortgagors, such portion of the expenses properly incurred in such redemption as is attributable to their share in the property.

Apart from the right of subrogation given by this section and S. 92, a redeeming co-mortgagor has a right to a charge for contribution against his co-mortgagors under S. 82 read with S. 100(15). It has been held that this charge relates back to the date of the mortgage redeemed for purpose of priority against subsequent mortgagee though not for the purpose of limitation(16). But it is not clear on what principle this view can be sustained. Possibly the view is that the charge under S. 82 is a contingent charge even before the mortgage is discharge when the right to vac on the charge will arise. The charge cannot, however, like a right of subrogation, be enforced against a bona fide transferee without notice of the charge. See also Note 17 on section 82.

2. "Redeems".

As to the meaning of "redemption" generally, see Note 4 on S. 60. The payment of the balance due upon a mortgage is as much a redemption as the payment of the whole sum due in a case where there has been no part payment previously. So where one of several co-mortgagors pays off the balance due on the mortgage he would be entitled to the rights given by this section(1).

3. "Expenses properly incurred".

The redeeming co-mortgagor can, under this section, claim a proportion of such expenses only as have been properly incurred(2). The solutum of five per cent on the purchase-money paid to the auction-purchaser in order to set aside under O. 21, R. 89 of the Code of Civil Procedure is not an expense that can be said to have been properly incurred(3). In the undermentioned case(3) of the Madras High Court it has been held that the poundage fee chargeable from the mortgagor who seeks to set aside a sale under O. 21, R. 89 of the Civil Procedure Code is not an expense properly incurred in redeeming the mortgage. This section has now resolved the doubt that existed before as to whether the words "expenses properly incurred" meant only the expenses of redemption or included the mortgage-money also(4) by treating the expenses so incurred should be added to the mortgage-money recoverable from the other co-mortgagors.

The amounts spent by a redeeming co-mortgagor by way of poundage in saving property by having the sale set aside is entitled to recover as a contribution from co-judgment debtors though the sum may not come under Section 82(5).

A and B mortgaged their joint property to C. B was individually indebted to D on a promissory note in respect of which he obtained a decree against B, putting the property to sale and purchased the same on redeeming C's charge. It was held, that D was subrogated to rights of C. A was entitled to redeem his share by paying his dues on mortgage and expenses to D(6).

4. Interest.

The old section did not contain any provision for payment of interest on the proportionate share of the redemption amount attributable to the other co-mortgagors. It was held in some cases arising thereunder that the redeeming co-mortgagor was not placed completely in the position of the mortgagee whom he redeemed and that the question of payment of interest on the redemption amount and of the date from which it was payable was a matter of discretion of the Court(1). In other cases(2) it was held that the redeeming co-mortgagor was not entitled to claim any interest before suit unless he had *demand*ed interest by notice to the other co-mortgagors. In the undermentioned case(3) the Chief Court of Oudh held that Article 115 of the Limitation Act 1908) applies to a claim for such interest and that therefore no interest for a period over three years prior to date of suit could be awarded.

Under the present section the redeeming co-mortgagor is entitled by "subrogation" under S. 92 to the rights of the mortgagee paid off and, will, it is conceived, be entitled to claim interest in the same way as the prior mortgagee could have done. See Note 24 on section 92. But the redeeming co-mortgagor will not be entitled to claim interest on the expenses of redemption to which he is entitled under this section to add to the mortgage money(4).

5. Co-mortgagor's liability to contribute.

See Notes 3 and 17 on Section 82.

6. Such proportion as is attributable to their share in the property.

The proportion attributable to the co-mortgagor's share in the property must be ascertained by reference to S. 82. The redeeming co-mortgagor has to contribute pro tanto to the extent of the value of his share and can recover only the balance from the other co-mortgagors(1). This right to recover the balance is, however, not a right to recover from all the other co-mortgagors in solidum the mortgage-money. He has to split up his claim into a claim against each co-mortgagor in consonance with S. 82(2). He is not entitled to a sale of the other co-mortgagors' shares jointly on their failure to pay their proportion of the mortgage-debt. As each co-mortgagor's liability is separate, the redeeming co-mortgagor is entitled to separate decrees against each of the co-mortgagors in default of payment of their proportionate shares(3).

A co-mortgagor satisfying a mortgage decree and obtaining an assignment of the decree is, however, entitled to execute the decree as a transferee of the decree against the other co-mortgagors and, in the execution proceedings, the matters relating to contribution based upon the value of their

7. Persons deriving title from the mortgagor.

Under the old section there was some difference of opinion as to whether the section was restricted to mortgagors in the sense of persons who have actually executed the mortgage or whether it included cases where the mortgage is originally made by a single mortgagor but subsequently the equity of redemption vests in several persons by devolution of transfer. The general trend of opinion was that the section included the latter class of cases(1), some cases, however, taking the contrary view(2). The introduction of S. 59-A by the amending Act of 1929 now makes the position clear. "Mortgagor" under that section includes person deriving title from him and where the equity of redemption vests in several persons, such persons would be "several mortgagors" within the meaning of this section(3).

A lessee or an assignee of a mokurrari interest of one of several mortgagors cannot, however, be considered "one of several mortgagors" and cannot claim relief under this section(4).

A vendee of a sham title from the mortgagor gets no interest by the transfer, and cannot claim any rights under this section(5).

8. Personal remedy.

There is a difference of opinion as to whether one co-mortgagor can sue for a personal decree for contribution against the other co-mortgagors under Ss. 69 and 70 of the Contract Act. See Note 14 on S. 82 and the undermentioned cases(1). As to whether such a suit is cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, see Note 27 on that section.

[A] See Foot-note (A) under section 95

Synopsis

1. History of the section.

2. Scope.

1. History of the section.

This section is new. It has been inserted by S. 48 of the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act XX of 1929. Before the amendment, the Act did not define a mortgage by deposit of title-deeds. The only provision relating to equitable mortgages was that contained in the last paragraph of the old S. 59 of the Act, by which the legal formalities required in respect of other mortgages were dispensed with in the case of a mortgage by deposit of title deeds in certain towns.

The law in relation to such mortgages as administered prior to 1929, was neither uniform nor clear. The High Courts followed the practice observed in their own Courts(1). The High Court of Bombay held that an equitable mortgagee was entitled to maintain an action for foreclosure or sale governed by the 60 years' period of limitation under Art. 147 of the Limitation Act of 1908(2). The High Court of Calcutta, though it allowed a suit for foreclosure or sale to be instituted, granted a decree only for sale(3). In Madras(4), Rangoon(5), and Sind(6), the procedure relating to simple mortgages was being followed. In the undermentioned cases(7) a bona fide purchaser for value of property subject to an equitable mortgage, without notice of the mortgage, was held entitled to the property free of the equitable mortgage. See also section 67, Note 17.

With a view to remove these anomalies, a new definition of a mortgage by deposit of title-deeds was inserted in S. 58, Cl. (1), and the present section was enacted making the provisions relating to simple mortgages applicable to equitable mortgages(8).

In order to provide against hardships likely to be caused by this section in provinces where a different view had been taken, S. 15, sub-s. (2) of the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Supplementary Act, XXI of 1929, provided as follows :

Notwithstanding anything contained in S. 9 of this Act, in the Presidency of Bombay and such other territories as the Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, specify in this behalf, a suit by a mortgagee for foreclosure or sale on a mortgage by deposit of title deeds may be

Section 96 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, was repealed in 1908, by the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, as it related to procedure, and a corresponding provision was inserted in that Code in the chapter relating to suits on mortgages. (See O. 34, R. 12).

As a result of the enactment of this section, O. 34, R. 15 of the Code of Civil Procedure has been newly added making applicable to equitable mortgages the provisions of the Code relating to simple mortgages. In a mortgage by deposit of title deeds a decree may be passed in a suit of a simple mortgage can only be passed. A decree for foreclosure cannot be passed in a suit of mortgage by deposit of title deeds(9).

2. Scope.

This section makes such of the provisions of ss. 59 to 95 as relate to simple mortgages applicable to mortgages by deposit of title deeds(1). But these provisions would be applicable only "so far as may be" to mortgages by deposit of title deeds. Thus the second paragraph of S. 59 of the Act requires a simple mortgage for not less than Rs. 100 to be effected only by a registered instrument signed by the mortgagor and attested by two witnesses. Again S. 60 requires a mortgage of redemption to require the mortgagee to deliver the mortgage deed and to have registered an acknowledgment in writing that any right in redemption of the mortgage conferred to the mortgagor has been extinguished, in addition to the return of all the documents relating to the property mortgaged, in his possession. These two provisions obviously cannot be made applicable to mortgages by deposit of title deeds, inasmuch as no deed at all is necessary to create such mortgages.

A mortgage by deposit of title deeds by the mortgagee on the basis of a security of deeds of firm run by joint family is binding on the sons by payment of the debt(2).

The list to be applied to conclude whether the letter written or acknowledged at the time of deposit of title deeds or thereafter requires registration or not depends on the nature contained in the letter and if it recites that through this letter the mortgage was created, then or you would require registration otherwise not, where the equitable mortgage was truly created and the letter written thereafter only confirmed the act of deposit of title deed, it does not require registration(3).

Where a loan is taken under a promissory note and equitable mortgage is created at the same time by depositing original title deeds, the memorandum executed subsequently to evidence deposit of title deeds already made need not be registered and is admissible in evidence(4).

Even if a house was constructed on mortgaged property subsequently after creation of equitable mortgage, the mortgagee-Bank is entitled to recover the loan amount from the house because any construction raised on a mortgaged property will automatically be deemed to have been mortgaged with the creditor(5).

Where the property is secured in favour of the Bank by way of equitable mortgage and not by way of usufructuary mortgage or mortgage with possession and possession of property is not delivered to the Bank in lien or interest or otherwise, the Bank would be entitled only to such rights which a simple mortgagee will have in regard to the mortgaged property. In the event of the mortgagor failing to pay the amounts due according to the contract, the mortgagee has a right to cause the mortgaged property to be sold and apply the proceeds towards discharge of the mortgage money. The mortgagee does not have any right over the rents or income from the mortgaged property. The equitable mortgage as such, does not help the Bank to claim a charge or equitable assignment in regard to rents(6). Possession does not go with equitable mortgage(7).

1. Scope of the section.

Prior to the amendment in 1929, there was no definition in the Act of an anomalous mortgage, but the old S. 98 dealt with certain classes or types of anomalous mortgages. The amending Act of 1929 introduced in S. 58, Cl (g), a definition of "anomalous mortgage" and the present section now deals only with rights and liabilities of the parties to such a mortgage(1).

Under this section the rights and liabilities of the parties under an anomalous mortgage are to be determined by their contract as evidenced in the mortgage deed, and so far as such contract does not extend, by local usage(2). Thus, the question whether a mortgagee under an anomalous mortgage has a right to claim a decree for sale or for foreclosure or for both, or a personal decree for the mortgage-money, will depend upon the terms of the particular contract of mortgage(3). It has been held that he cannot claim any right expressly or impliedly negatived by the contract(4), and that if those rights, though given, are controlled or limited by the contract to a particular state of circumstances, he will be entitled to claim those rights only subject to such limitations(5).

Insofar as the contract does not extend, the section says that the rights and the liabilities will be governed by the local usage. The instances of anomalous mortgages in which the rights and liabilities are governed by local usage are provided by the various customary mortgages prevalent in different parts of India, such as Kanoni and Othi in Malabar and Iladarwara in South Kanara.

It is submitted that the view abovementioned, viz., that an anomalous mortgagee cannot claim any right which is expressly or impliedly negatived by the contract between the parties is not correct. Because such a view is in conflict with the decision and observations of the Privy Council in Mohammad Sher Khan v. Raja Seth Swami Dayal(6) which has already been considered in Note 29 on S. 60. It was held by their Lordships in the above case that the parties to an anomalous mortgage cannot contract themselves out of the statutory right of redemption conferred by S. 60 of the Act. It was, therefore, held that notwithstanding an express provision in the mortgage deed for allowing the mortgagee to remain in possession of the mortgaged property for a certain period after the right of redemption had accrued under S. 60, the mortgagor was not debarred from suing for redemption — Mortgage with possession — Stipulation for redemption within two years and in default mortgage to have option to sue for recovery of amount by sale of property — Mortgagee held entitled to remain in possession after expiry of redemption and is entitled to sue for possession on dispossession during subsistence of mortgage — and not bound to sue for sale)  AIR 1935 Oudh 254 (255) (DB),  AIR 1928 Mad 88 (88) (DB),  C 8001, 2 All 203 (205, 206) (DB) (Anomalous mortgage — Mortgagee entitled to possession — Possession not delivered — Mortgagee held entitled to sue for mortgage-money)  AIR 1915 Oudh 16 (22, 23) : 18 Oudh Cas 10 (DB) before the expiry of such period. Referring to the argument that the mortgage in question was an anomalous mortgage, their Lordships observed as follows:

"But their Lordships do not think it necessary to pursue this enquiry for in the view they take, the rights and liabilities of the parties must depend on the terms of the instrument as controlled by the Transfer of Property Act, for even if it were an anomalous mortgage, its provisions offend against the statutory right of redemption conferred by S. 60, and the provisions of the one section cannot be used to defeat those of another unless it is impossible to effect reconciliation between them. An anomalous mortgage creating after a lapse of time and in the absence of redemption to enter and take the rents in satisfaction of the interest would be perfectly valid if it did not also hinder an existing right to redeem. But it is this that the present mortgage undoubtedly purports to effect. It is expressly stated to be for five years, and after that period the principal money became payable. This, under S. 60 of the Transfer of Property Act is the event on which the mortgagor had a right on payment of the mortgage-money to redeem.

The section is unqualified in its terms, and contains no saving provision as other sections do in favour of contracts to the contrary. Their Lordships therefore see no sufficient reason for withholding from the words of the section their full force and effect."

The above passage clearly shows that the rights and liabilities of the parties to an anomalous mortgage must depend on the terms of the instrument as controlled by this Act and where such terms are inconsistent with any provision in the Act which is applicable to anomalous mortgages, it is the latter that will prevail and not the contract between the parties(7). See also S. 68, Note 12.

The rights and liabilities of the parties in an anomalous mortgage have to be determined, as warranted by S. 98, with reference to the terms of the contract between the parties. In instant case certain fixed sum was to be paid every month, which was believed by the parties to be a "fair occupation rent". The document did not provide for payment of interest. The amount was to be paid irrespective of any profit from the property. What was agreed was payment of fixed sum every month irrespective of any profit and not a division of profits between the mortgagor and mortgagee(8).

2. Provisions of section 60 apply to anomalous mortgages.

The provisions of S. 60 apply also to anomalous mortgages and, therefore, stipulations in a deed of anomalous mortgage amounting to a clog on the equity of redemption are invalid. See section 60, Note 29.

2A. Applicability of section 68 to anomalous mortgages.

See section 68, Note 12.

3. Applicability of other provisions of Act where contract is silent on the point.

As has been seen already in Note 1, some decisions hold that if the contract of anomalous mortgage expressly or impliedly negatives any right or remedy given to the parties under other provisions of this Act, such provisions cannot be applied(1). But if the contract of mortgage is silent on any particular point and the application of the other provisions of this Act is not inconsistent with the contract, there is no reason why such provisions should not be applied(2). In the under-mentioned case of the Lahore High Court(3), where, in an anomalous mortgage there was a covenant to pay, but the contract was silent about the mode of enforcing such covenant it was held that it could be enforced under S. 68(1)(a) of the Act. The High Court of Calcutta sees us, however, to be of the opinion that the moment the mortgage in question is found to be an anomalous one, Ss. 67 and 68 cannot be applied at all(4).

As seen in Note 1 of the correct view under the section is that the terms of an anomalous mortgage cannot prevail against the express provisions of this Act insofar as such provisions may apply to anomalous mortgages.

Where the mortgagee in possession was not empowered to create lease which would be binding on the mortgagor after redemption of mortgage, the tenant induced by the mortgagee could not claim protection under the Rent Control law(5).

3A. Applicability of general provisions of law.

It has been held by the Patna High Court that the general principle of application of general principles of law, such as the doctrine of subrogation to securities to anomalous mortgages(1). In that case there was nothing in the contract of mortgage to restrict the application of the doctrine. If the contract expressly or impliedly negatives any such rule of subrogation it is clear that the principle cannot be applied in opposition to the contract.

5. Combination of a simple mortgage and a usufructuary mortgage

There was a conflict of opinions before the amendment of this section in 1929, as to whether a combination of a simple mortgage and a usufructuary mortgage was an anomalous mortgage. The general view was that it was not an anomalous mortgage(1) though in some cases it is held to be an anomalous mortgage(2).

There was also difference of opinion prior to the amendment of this section as to the rights and liabilities of the parties to such a combined mortgage. According to one view which regarded it as an anomalous mortgage, the rights and liabilities of the parties were determined by the provisions of the Act itself(3). The other view was that though such mortgages were not anomalous ones, the rights and liabilities of the parties were to be determined by the terms of the mortgage-deed(4) A third view was that such a combination constituted an anomalous mortgage within the meaning of S. 98 and hence the rights and liabilities were governed by the terms of the contract and not by the provisions of the Act(5). See also S. 68, Note 17.

The amendment in 1929 has put an end to the above conflict by including such a mortgage in the definition of an anomalous mortgage. It is clear that the rights and liabilities of the parties to such a mortgage would now be governed by the terms of the contract as evidenced by the mortgage-deed and, so far as such contract does not extend, by local usage(6). In the undermentioned cases(7) the amendment has been held not to be retrospective.

A mortgagee under such a mortgage has a right of sale(8) and also a right to obtain a decree for the mortgage-money on the basis of the personal covenant in the mortgage(9). The dismissal of a suit for sale of the property, however, only bars an action for sale but does not extinguish the right of the mortgagee to possess the property. It, therefore, follows that until the debt is liquidated the security remains unaffected(10).

Though the document in the present case is styled as a possessory mortgage deed, the mortgagee is given the right to bring the property to sell on the mortgagor failing to pay the mortgaged money after the prescribed period. The document is therefore not a usufructuary mortgage simpliciter whereas it partakes the character of a simple mortgage also, such a mortgage comes under the category of anomalous mortgage(1).

6. Combination of a usufructuary mortgage and a mortgage by conditional sale.

Prior to the amendment of this section in 1929, a combination of a mortgage by conditional sale and a usufructuary mortgage was not regarded as an anomalous mortgage(1). Under the present definition of an anomalous mortgage as contained in S. 58, Cl. (g) however, such a combination will clearly be an anomalous mortgage and the rights and liabilities of the parties thereto will be governed by the terms of the contract or by local usage, as the case may be.

A mortgagee under this class of mortgages has a right of foreclosure(2). Such a mortgage does not generally contain a covenant to pay and therefore the mortgagee is not entitled to a personal decree.

7. Kanom.

A kanom is a customary mortgage prevalent in Malabar. It is a combination of a usufructuary mortgage and a lease(1), and has been recognised as an anomalous mortgage(2). The mortgagor who is known as a jenmi makes a lease in favour of the mortgagee, known as kanom-holder or kanomdar, a fixed rent out of which mortgagee is entitled to retain the interest due on the mortgage debt, the balance only being paid to the mortgagor. As to the rights and liabilities of the parties under this class of mortgages, see the Malabar Tenancy Act, 1929 (XIV of 1930) and the undermentioned cases(3).

1. Scope of the section.

This section defines "a charge" and states what provisions of the Act apply thereto and against whom it is enforceable.

A person, according to this section, is said to have a charge on the immovable property belonging to another when—

- (1) such property is made security for the payment of money due by the latter, and
- (2) such transaction does not amount to a mortgage.

A mortgage, as defined in S. 58, is a transfer of an interest in specific immovable property for the purpose of securing the payment of loan. Thus, in the case of a mortgage as well as in a charge, the property of another person is made security for a loan or debt; but whereas a mortgage is a transfer of an interest in property, a charge, as defined above, does not involve the transfer of any interest in property(1).

According to Sir John Salmond a charge is the best type of security. He observes :

"The best type of security is that which combines the most efficient protection of the creditor with the least interference with the rights of the debtor, and in this latter respect the mortgage falls far short of the ideal. The true form of security is a lien, leaving the full legal and equitable ownership in the debtor, but vesting in the creditor such rights and powers (as of sale, possession, and so forth) as are required, according to the nature of the subject-matter, to give the creditor sufficient protection, and lapsing ipso jure with the discharge of the debt secured"(2).

A charge is a device to create enforceable security(3)

Hypothecation creates a charge in favour of hypothecatee(4).

Where a decree for payment of money against an industrial unit stipulated that judgment-debtor should not create charge on machinery of unit but did not stipulate that charge is created in favour of judgment, creditor, decree cannot be said to have created charge on machinery of industrial unit(5).

A charge under the section may be created either by act of parties or by operation of law. It is stated in the Preamble that this Act is one "to define and amend certain parts of the law relating to the transfer of property by act of parties" and in view of that statement, it is not easy to understand why charges created by operation of law have been included in this section. "But for the fact that there are some sections in the Act which refer to such charges", observes Lord Williams, J., of the Calcutta High Court, "one would have thought that they had been included by inadvertence"(6).

Charge can be created in respect of both immovable and movable properties. A charge is nothing but a device to create security which is enforceable in a Court of law. In order to create a charge in respect of immovable property, it is necessary that the same is required to be embodied in a document. However in order to create a charge relating to movables it need not be in writing. Further in order to create a charge, it is not necessary to employ any technical or any particular form of expression. All that is required is that there should be a clear intention to make a particular property as a security for the payment of money. Creation of enforceable security is the essence of charge either in respect of immovable property or in respect of moveables(7).

There is a difference of opinion on the question whether this section is exhaustive of all kinds of charges. One view is that it is exhaustive of all charges and that a Court is not justified in introducing new conceptions of charges not supported by the statutes in India(8). The other view is that the section is not exhaustive and that there are certain kinds of charges which are not included within the purview of this section(9). There are charges created by a decree of Court(10), or by an award(11) and charges created on the grounds of equity(12). As to whether these are charges,

2. Liens and charges under the English law.

In England a "lien", in its primary sense is a right in one man to retain that which is in his possession but which belongs to another until certain demands of the person in possession are satisfied(1). In this sense it is given by law and not by contract, and subject to some exceptions does not arise until possession of the property is obtained(2). It is only a right of defence, not a right of action and, consequently, can be claimed in respect of a statute barred debt. It does not, except in special circumstances, give any right to sell the thing retained, and is not capable of being assigned(3).

A lien, in its secondary sense, where the person claiming the lien has not got possession of the thing in respect of which the lien is claimed, is either judicial, equitable or statutory. Judicial liens are obligations established by judgments or orders of Courts of justice binding the property, but giving no right of possession. Equitable liens are founded on the consideration of a duty or implied intention on the part of the owner to make property answerable for a specific claim(4). An equitable lien has been defined as an equitable right conferred by law upon one man, to a charge upon the real or personal property of another until certain specific claims have been satisfied(5).

An equitable charge is a security which does not create a legal estate in land but only gives a right to payment out of the property. It entitles the holder to have the property comprised therein sold to raise the money charged thereon, but it does not, in the absence of any express provision to that effect, amount to an agreement to give a legal mortgage, and the mode of enforcing it is by sale and not by foreclosure(6).

An equitable lien differs from an equitable charge in that the latter is a right founded on contract while the equitable lien is founded on the principle of equity. But in so far as their effect is concerned, there is no distinction between an equitable lien and equitable charge and both are liable to be defeated under the statutes of limitation(7). An equitable lien differs also from the common law lien in that the latter is founded on possession and, except as modified by statute, merely confers a right to detain the property until payment whereas the former which exists irrespective of possession confers on the holder the right to judicial sale(8).

The charge created by a lease on shares for debts owed by the shareholders to the Company is not merely an equitable charge(5).

See also Note 4.

4. Charge on future property.

In order to create a present charge it is, of course, necessary that the property charged must be in existence. A document creating a charge on property which may come into existence in the future does not create any charge in praesenti. It may, however, operate as an agreement to create a charge when the property comes into existence in the future. As has been seen in Note 2 on S. 43, when it does come into existence, equity, treating that as done which ought to be done, fastens upon the property and the agreement to create a charge will become a completed charge(1).

Where a mortgagor mortgaged certain properties to a portion of which he had no present title but acquired it later on, and on the death of the mortgagor his heir sold such portion to third person, the question was whether the mortgagor was entitled to a decree charged on such portion. It was held that a charge on future properties operates upon such property as soon as it comes into existence and hence even though Sec. 43 was not applicable, the transferee would obtain the benefit of the subsequent acquisition of title by the transferor(2).

Assignment of future debt by way of security There can be a valid and legal assignment of moneys which are to fall due hereafter, by way of security for the loans borrowed by the assignor. In such a case, the creditor in whose favour the security is created will be entitled to priority over earmarked or made a security for payment of a debt a charge would arise on that property.)

5. "Made security".

In order to create a charge it is not necessary to employ any technical or any particular form of words. All that is required is that there must be a clear intention to make a particular property, a security for the payment of money(1). As observed in Nathan Lal v. Durga Das(2),

"A charge does not involve the transfer of the interest in the property subject thereto and arises from the circumstance that certain property, movable or immovable, or any interest in such property, is indicated with certainty as the fund out of which a certain claim is to be met or satisfied, the fund so indicated being the security for the claim."

Where the property is not intended to serve as security, there can be neither a mortgage nor a charge(3).

In cases where the transaction is reduced to writing the cardinal rule of construction is that the intention of the parties should be gathered from the language used by the parties in such deeds(4).

Where the intention of parties which could be gathered from the document in question, namely, the power of attorney, indicated that the property in dispute was not made security for payment of expenses incurred for managing, imposing etc. the land in favour of attorney holder, as no restriction or embargo was put on owner for transfer of land and only the right created in favour of attorney holder was to claim expenses incurred as aforesaid, if his power of attorney was revoked or cancelled, no charge could be held to have been created by the document in question on the land in dispute(5). Where, however, the language of the deed is not itself precise or is ambiguous, the surrounding circumstances may be looked to, for the purpose of ascertaining such intention(6). In considering whether a particular deed or document does or does not create a charge, cases as regards other deeds are not always a good guide(7).

Ordinarily, when the parties refer in a document to particular properties as the source from which a debt is to be paid or by the sale of which a debt is to be realized, there is some indication of an intention to make the property more directly liable than on a mere enforcement of a personal liability(8). For instance in maintenance cases, where in the absence of a specific agreement the maintenance will only be a kind of indefinite charge upon the family property, even a slight indication to convert it into a definite charge may suffice(9). This will be a fortiori so in a case where the party claims to be entitled to succeed to or to share in a certain property and that claim is settled by a provision for maintenance payable out of that property(10). Again, where a property is already subject to a mortgage, and a later document between the same parties relating to a fresh advance provides that the previous mortgage shall not be redeemed before the later debt is paid or that the later debt shall be paid at the time of redeeming the prior mortgage, it has been held that the parties must have intended that the security under the first mortgage should be available for the fresh advance as well(11). But the stipulation in a subsequent mortgage of a different property to the

A mere covenant by a party not to alienate the property was held not by itself sufficient to create a charge(17). An agreement between A and B that A should give a regular mortgage of his immovable property for money advanced by B does not constitute a mortgage or charge upon such property(18). So also, an agreement to sell does not create any interest or charge on the property(19). Immovable property security cannot be furnished by submitting a certified copy of Xerox copy of the title deeds(20).

- (1) By an agreement between A and B who were brothers, it was agreed that B should waive his claims to succeed to his father's estate and should withdraw a suit instituted by him against A for maintenance, that A should pay a certain monthly allowance to B in perpetuity, and further, if A for his own necessity mortgaged or hypothecated the muafi villages, so that the property left might be insufficient to meet the monthly allowance fixed, A would pay the allowance out of his other property. It was held by the Judicial Committee that the deed created a charge for the allowance on the property(21).

paid to the plaintiff by the defendant and further added that the property awarded to the defendant should be treated as makphul for the sum. It was held that a valid charge for the sum was created on the defendant's property(22).

- (3) A stipulation in a lease deed that the lessee should deduct a certain portion of the annual rent in repayment of a sum of money already borrowed by the lessor from him, creates a charge on the property leased and not merely a personal obligation(23).
- (4) A sold certain property to B. The sale deed contained the following provision: "The said vendee is to pay Rs. 25 ... to me annually (as malikana) which he has agreed to pay." It was held that the words "as malikana" could not be rejected as mere surplusage. They showed an intention that the payment of Rs. 25 should be an annual charge upon the property(24).
- (5) By a deed, J admitted liability. In respect of that liability, he undertook to execute a charge bond over specified share and rights in a village together with sir land. J undertook to get the sanction of the Court for transfer of sir, and not to assign the property until he carried out the above undertaking. It was held that the property was made security for the liability and that a charge was created(25).

scription of the property would be sufficient if, from the facts and circumstances, the property can be ascertained(3), the principle being "certum est quod certum reddi potest" that is certain which can be made certain(4) Where, however, the description given is too vague and indefinite, the charge will be void for uncertainty(5) In Montagu v Earl of Sandwich(6), Cotton, L J observed .

"I think it is an established rule, that where the covenant is to charge real estate which can be ascertained by existing facts and circumstances, for example, if there is a covenant to charge all the real estate which a man has at a particular time, that covenant will itself make a charge. But where the covenant is to charge, not all or any definite portion of a man's estate, but only that which is worth £ 1000 a year, or which would be sufficient to secure £ 1000 a year then from the indefiniteness of the matter referred to there will be no charge unless an instrument is afterwards executed to give effect to the covenant, and it remains simply a covenant to be enforced as against the assets of the covenantor."

Thus, a valid charge can be created upon what could be defined to be the whole of a man's property at the date of the charge (7) A charge on villages granted to a person by Government in the property of the judgment-debtor both movable and immovable is not void for uncertainty.)

7. "By act of parties."

In the undermentioned cases,(1) a charge created by Will was held to be a charge by act of parties and within the meaning of this section. See also the undermentioned case.(2) A mere agreement to execute a mortgage cannot create a mortgage or a charge (3)

As to whether a charge created by decree incorporating a compromise is a charge created by act of parties, see Note 28.

Credit facility was given by a financial institution to a company against its agreeing to mortgage immovable property. Resolution was also passed accordingly in the Board's meeting of the company. However, the company neither mortgaged the property nor register the charge with the Registrar of companies, though it availed of credit facility the company went into liquidation. Held that the undertakings given by the company did not amount to mortgage or charge attracting S. 125 of the Companies Act and became void against the liquidator (4)

8. Security bond charging immovable property.

Where, by a security bond, a person besides making himself personally liable under S. 145 of the Civil Procedure Code, gives his immovable property as security, the question whether the transaction amounts to a mortgage or a charge will depend on the terms of the document and the intention of the parties. It is therefore a question of construction of the particular document (1)

This section shows that, for the creation of a charge, there must be some person in whose favour the charge is created. Where a security bond purporting to charge immovable property is given to the Court and not to any named person there is no charge, as the Court is not a juridical person and can neither sue nor take property, nor assign it (2) In the undermentioned case (3) no person was named in the security bond as mortgagee. It was held that the security bond did not create a mortgage but created a charge. It is submitted that the decision is wrong as it proceeds on the reasoning that a document invalid as a mortgage creates a valid charge.

As to the enforcement of security bonds, see Notes on S. 145 of the A.I.R. Commentaries on the Code of Civil Procedure, 10th (1985) Edn. and O. 34, R. 14. Note 4 in the Appendix.

9. Contingent charge.

A contingent charge, that is to say, a present charge as security for discharging a contingent liability can be validly created (1) Section 5 and S. 21 of the Transfer of Property Act recognise the principle of such a transaction (2) In such a case as soon as the contract is entered into, the promisee is entitled to look to the specified property as security for the due performance of the contract (3) No doubt there is a difference between a present charge to discharge a contingent liability and the mere possibility of a charge or a promise to create a charge in future. But it cannot be said that whenever there is a charge to secure a liability which will arise only, if at all, in the future, there is no present charge within the meaning of the section (4) Thus, where in a document there was a clause to the following effect : "In the case aforesaid creditor being dispossessed of the holding in any way, in that case he shall realize his dues from my one anna share in Mauza Dharwali and Gasainpur." It was held that a present charge on existing property was created though it could only be enforced on the happening of the contingency, i.e., dispossession of the creditor.(5) A contrary view taken in the undermentioned cases(6) that such a charge is not a charge within the meaning of this section is, it is submitted, not correct. In Madho Misser v. Sidh Binaik Upadhya(7) which is a leading case for the contrary view A borrowed money from B and agreed to repay the amount within a certain period with interest; he also agreed that if he did not repay the money according to the stipulation, B should take possession of certain land and then A would not be liable to pay interest. It was contended that the document created a charge on the property. In negating the contention their Lordship of the Calcutta High Court observed :

"When the Legislature speaks of a charge under S. 100, it speaks of something which operates as a charge upon land immediately as it is executed. This document seems to us, not to create a charge at the time of its execution, but to operate only as a charge upon the land in question upon the non-payment of the principal money in 1289. All that it does is to create the possibility of a charge ultimately arising on the land. That is set a charge under S. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act."

Similar observations were made in Haryas Rai v. Naurang(8) a case decided by the Allahabad High Court. Speaking about these cases Courts-Trotter, J., in Imbichu v. Achampat Avukoya Haji(9) observed as follows :

"Now the learned Judge has held that their deed of partition, Ex. D, did not create a 'charge' under S. 100, Transfer of Property Act, and in coming to that decision, he bases himself upon a decision in Madho Misser v. Sidh Binaik Upadhya (10). Now that decision as well as the decision in Haryas Rai v. Naurang(11) is capable of two constructions. It is capable of being construed as deciding that the instrument in that case was, in fact, not a present charge to secure against a future contingent liability, but a mere contingent charge arising on the happening of a possible future event. If the two cases mean that, there is no particular harm in that, though whether one would agree with the view they take of the construction of the particular instruments is another question. But if they are supposed to enunciate the proposition which is contended for here and nothing short of that proposition will avail the respondent — namely, wherever you have a charge to secure a liability which is not a liability existent in praesent, but will arise, if at all, in the future, that cannot be a present charge within the meaning of the Transfer of Property Act, then I think this Court is bound to say that those decisions, if they mean that, are bad law and should not be followed. The most forcible illustration, I think, is the one given by my learned brother of a Government servant who gives security by the deposit of a fidelity bond or other security for the faithful discharge of his duties. Is the charge bad, because he has not been dishonest at the time the deposit is made? Another equally good illustration is the case of a man who, while his account is in credit at the bank, deposits his title deeds to secure any future overdraft there may be. It is idle to contend that those are not perfectly good charges on the property over which they purport to operate, notwithstanding the fact that the indebtedness in both cases is future and is contingent. As I say, if those cases in Calcutta and Allahabad are to be supposed to decide the proposition contended for, we decline to follow them."

10. Floating charge.

The term "floating charge" and its synonym "floating security"(1) are commonly used in financial and mercantile circles(2) as a charge which affects all the assets of a going concern expressed to be included in it, but not specifically affecting any item until some event occurs which causes it to crystallize into a fixed security. "The term has received judicial recognition and is found used in legislative enactment (3) The whole basis of this kind of charge is that even after the creation of the charge, the business goes on and the person who creates the charge can dispose of the assets in the ordinary course of business till the charge becomes a fixed charge (4)

A specific charge is one which without more fastens on the ascertained and definite property while a floating charge is ambulatory or shifting in nature hovering over and floating with property which it is intended to affect until some event occurs or some act is done which causes it to settle and fasten on the subject of the charge within its reach and grasp. When a charge is fixed it affects the title to the property as a transfer of interest takes place immediately and the property can be dealt with subject to the charge. But if the charge is a floating charge Company may on ordinary course of business deal with the property by mortgage, selling, disposing or using it up at any time before the charge attaches.(5)

In Evans v Rival Granite Quarries, Ltd (6) Buckley, L.J., described a "floating security" as follows :

"A floating security is not a future security. It is a present security which presently affects all the assets of the company expressed to be included in it. On the other hand, it is not a specific security. The holder cannot affirm that the assets are specifically mortgaged to him. The assets are mortgaged in such a way that the mortgagor can deal with them without the concurrence of the mortgagee. A floating security is not a specific mortgage of the assets, plus a licence to the mortgagor to dispose of them in the course of his business, but is a floating mortgage applying to every item comprised in the security, but not specifically affecting any item until some event occurs or some act on the part of the mortgagee is done which causes it to crystallize into a fixed security."

According to Lord Macnaghten, in Illigworth v Houldsworth(7) :

"There was not much difficulty in defining what a floating charge is in contrast to what is called a specific charge. A specific charge, I think, is one that without more fastens on ascertained and definite property or property capable of being ascertained and defined, a floating charge, on the other hand, is ambulatory and shifting in its nature, hovering over and so to speak floating with the property which it is intended to affect until some event occurs or some act is done which causes it to settle and fasten on the subject of the charge within its reach and grasp."

Romer, L.J., in In re Yorkshire Woolcombers Association, Ltd (8) lays down three characteristics of a floating charge. He observes :

"I certainly think that if a charge has the three characteristics that I am about to mention it is a floating charge. (1) If it is a charge on a class of assets of a company present and future, (2) if that class is one which, in the ordinary course of the business of the company, would be changing from time to time and (3) if you find that by the charge it is contemplated that, until some future step is taken by or on behalf of those interested in the charge, the company may carry on its business in the ordinary way."

Thus, it will be seen from the above observations that, in a floating charge the property is constantly changing from time to time, the charge does not of itself fasten even on the property existing at the moment of the creation of the charge (9). The charge becomes a fixed charge or specific charge on the intervention of the charge-holder or the undertaking charged ceasing to be a going concern(10) and till then the charge remains dormant (11).

there was no floating charge but a fixed charge because the element of fluctuation which was necessary for a floating charge was wanting, and the element of fluctuation due to wear and tear was widely different from what would be consequent on the power of disposal in the ordinary course of business (12) Similarly where assets were given in the possession of the lender company it was held for the same reason that there was no floating charge (13)

- (2) Where the borrower company handed over the keys of the godowns to the lender company and further agreed to keep in the godowns stock fetching a certain fixed price and it was also agreed that whenever the borrower company wanted to take out any stock from the godowns it must do so only with the consent of the lender company, it was held that the document did not create a floating charge but a specific charge. (14)
- (3) The mere element of uncertainty as to what the amount of the charge, or what the object charged would be was, however, held not sufficient to satisfy the requirements of a floating charge (15) Where it was agreed that the borrower company could dispose of the stock with the permission of the lender company and thus carry on its business it was held that the nature of the fixed charge could not be altered so as to become a floating charge merely because in spite of the charge, the business of the borrower company continued to be carried on (16)

Debentures of companies afford the most ordinary example of a floating charge but they are not the only instances of it, a floating charge may be created even by an individual and by means other than the issue of debentures (17) So also floating charge need not be on the whole undertaking nor the whole property of the company (18)

What is the difference between a floating charge and a contingent charge described in Note 9? In the case of a contingent charge, as soon as the contingency happens a specific property which has already been marked out become liable to satisfy the claim of the charge holder. But in the case of a floating charge the happening of the contingency which converts the floating charge into a fixed charge does not necessarily fasten the liability to all or any of the properties which constituted the debtor's assets when the floating charge was created but to such properties as constitute the assets of the debtor at the time that the floating charge becomes a fixed charge (19)

In the absence of a stipulation to the contrary a floating charge leaves the person or the company creating the charge at liberty to create specific charges in priority to itself (20)

A floating charge on the undertaking or property of a company, requires registration under S. 109 of the Indian Companies Act, VII of 1913. Otherwise it is void under that section.(22) (See now S. 125 of the Companies Act, 1956) A document creating a floating charge will also require registration under S. 17 of the Registration Act if it concerns immovable property of the value of Rs. 100 and upwards and will not affect the immovable property if not so registered.(23) As to the effect of non-registration upon the secured debts due to the borrower from third persons which are charged, see Notes on Section 8

11. "By operation of law."

A charge created by "operation of law" is a charge that comes into existence on certain state of facts happening simply because of a rule of law coming into operation, without the intervention of any agency (1) It has been held that the words "by operation of law" in this section are more extensive than the words "by law" and that a charge created "by operation of law" includes a charge directly created by the provisions of an Act as well as other charges created indirectly as a legal consequence of certain conditions (2) It has also been held that the expression "operation of law" only means working of the law and is not restricted in its application to such cases as fall under S. 55 or S. 73 of the Act.(3)

A statutory charge differs from a contractual charge and is based upon the principle of justice, equity and good conscience.(4)

In order to create a charge by operation of law no document is necessary to be executed or signed or attested by the party and charge may be created without any writing and the instrument creating a charge is not required to be attested (5)

The following are instances of charges by operation of law created directly by the provisions of Acts :

in the restrictive sense as charge under Sec. 100, T. P Act (18)

(i) Section 65-A will not apply to statutory charges like the one created by Section 39 of Malabar Tenancy Act of 1930.(19)

Charge created by consent decree is in the nature of charge contemplated by S 100.(20)

An attachment before judgment, or in execution of a decree has merely the effect of preventing all private alienations of the property to the prejudice of the claims enforceable under the attachment. It does not create any title, charge, lien or priority in the property in favour of the attaching creditor (21) So also the appointment of a Receiver does not amount to a charge on the property for which the Receiver is appointed (22) There is no provision of law under which a creditor who advances money become entitled to a charge over the property acquired with the money advanced by him.(23)

Similarly there is no provision of law under which a charge can be said to have been created by operation of law in favour of Builders over the buildings constructed by them on the land of the Company regarding payment due to the builders from the Company (24)

Any alienation of property made on or after the assessment of sales tax would not be valid unless and until the sales tax amount due and payable is cleared as provided by S. 24 of T.N. General Sales Tax Act, 1959 under which statutory charge has been created on the disputed property.(25)

As to charges created by decree, see Note 28.

12. Charge under Rent Acts.

A charge for the payment of rent under the Bengal Tenancy Act(1) or the Madras Estates Land Act,(2) is not such a charge as is defined by this section. So also a charge under S. 74, Orissa

Tenancy Act(3) and under S 65, Bihar Tenancy Act(4) are not charges within the meaning of this section. The charge created by the tenancy law in the Central Provinces, however, has been held to be a charge arising by operation of law within the meaning of this section (5). See also the under-mentioned cases.(6)

13. "And the transaction does not amount to a mortgage."

In its ordinary sense the word "charge" means an obligation imposed on property or a claim on property. In this sense every mortgage would create a charge, but every charge would not be a mortgage.(1)

This Act, however, draws a clear distinction between a mortgage and a charge(2) and restricts the latter to cases where the security does not amount to a mortgage as defined in S 58. In the undermentioned case(3) it was observed by Sadasiva Aiyar, J., that "every mortgage creates a charge but conversely every charge does not amount to a mortgage." It is submitted that the said observations are not correct in so far as they imply that a mortgage will include a charge, within the meaning of this Act. In some cases(4) the word "charge" has been loosely used for the word "mortgage". Such use of the word is not correct.

The main distinction between a "charge" under this section and a mortgage is that a mortgage involves a transfer of an interest in specific immovable property, while in a charge there is no such transfer of interest (5). The following further differences between a mortgage and a charge may be noted :

A contrary view was expressed in the unmentioned cases⁽²⁾ that even where an intended security is not completed according to law, a charge may be created. The view was rested on the English rule that where parties intend to create a charge and have the power to do so, Court will give effect to that intention notwithstanding any mistake which may have occurred in the attempt to effect it, on the principle that equity treats that as done which ought to be done⁽³⁾. But the Courts in this country are not free to apply the English equitable principles in the face of the statutory provision contained in this section.⁽⁴⁾

Where an instrument embodies the true contract between the parties and is, in terms, an instrument which only creates a charge, then an erroneous belief of the parties that they had created a mortgage would not affect the true nature and validity of the transaction and the failure to effect an attestation in the form required for a mortgage would not obstruct the legal enforcement of the charge.⁽⁵⁾

15. Mortgage or charge.

A charge has a closer resemblance to a simple mortgage than to any other kind of mortgage. As the remedy in a simple mortgage and in a charge is the same and the provisions applicable to simple mortgages are made applicable to charges also, the line of demarcation between them is very thin and sometimes hardly distinguishable.⁽¹⁾

In a charge no right in rem is created but right is something more than a personal obligation for it is a jus ad rem i.e. a right to a thing without possession. Charge is only good against subsequent transferee with notice.⁽²⁾

A charge is a burden laid on immovable property of one person as security for the payment of money to another and it is to be contradistinguished from a mortgage. A mortgage, is, in essence, a form of transfer but a charge is not so and while a mortgage is a security for payment of debt, a charge is a security for payment of money which may or may not be a debt. A mortgage may be created only by act of parties but a charge may be created either by (i) act of parties or (ii) by operation of law or (iii) by decree of a competent Court.⁽³⁾

As has been seen already in Note 13, the main distinction between a mortgage and a charge is that in a mortgage there is a transfer of an interest in property, while in a charge there is no such transfer. Therefore, in order to determine whether a particular transaction is a mortgage or a charge it must be ascertained whether the parties to the transaction intended to transfer an interest in the property (4) Such intention must be gathered by looking at the substance and essence of the transaction and not merely at the form of the deed (5) If the intention of the parties is to transfer an interest in the property, in order to make it a security, the transaction will amount to a mortgage (6) If, on the other hand, parties intend merely to make the property security without transferring any interest in it the transaction amounts to a charge (7)

In a simple mortgage the mortgagor agrees expressly or impliedly that the mortgagee shall have the right to cause the mortgaged property to be sold for the recovery of his debt. The presence of a clause giving the other party a right to sell the property in order to recover his debt indicates a transfer of an interest in the property and is, therefore, a distinguishing factor between a simple mortgage and a charge. If an instrument is expressly stated to be a mortgage and gives a power of realization of the mortgage-money by sale of the mortgaged property, it should be held to be a mortgage. (8)

A mortgage by deposit of title deeds effectuates transfer of right to the properties and creation of charge separately on the properties becomes unnecessary (9)

If, on the other hand, the instrument simply creates a lien or directs the realization of money from a particular property without reference to sale, it creates a charge (10) Thus, where a decree based on a compromise provided that "the defendants do pay to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 31,251" and further declared that "the immovable properties specified therein shall be hypothecated for the realization of the said money and that the defendants shall not be able to create any encumbrance on the same," it was held that the decree had no resemblance in form to a simple mortgage, that the hypothecation clause created a lien and prohibited further encumbrances and that the parties only intended that the immovable properties mentioned in the schedule to the decree should be reserved intact as security for the payment of money (11) Similarly, where under a deed of adjustment filed in execution proceedings the firm A was to pay K Rs. 34,950 on 18.5.1921 and on default to pay Rs. 40,000, and the deed concluded "the first party to be at liberty to recover the amount due to them under this adjustment by sale of the _____ property in execution," it was held that the deed did not give the opponent the power of realization by sale of the property in any of the recognised ways, i.e., by sale through Court in execution of a mortgage decree or sale without the intervention of Court under a power given in a mortgage-deed, and was therefore not a mortgage but was merely a charge.(12) The power of sale given by the deed in that case was peculiar, limited and outside the provision of the Indian law relating to realization of moneys secured by mortgage by sale of the mortgaged proeprty. On the other hand, where it was stated that the property was nazar gahan and the transferee was granted a right to cause the property to be sold through Court, it was held that the document created a mortgage and not a charge.(13) In the case of documents written in the language of the State, the mere name given to the document(14) or the words which imply a power of sale(15) are not by themselves sufficient guides for determining the character of the transaction. The intention of the parties must be ascertained from all the circumstances. Thus, where an ikrarnama executed by A in favour of his wife M securing his immovable property for the payment of her dower-debt used the words "arth" and "mustaghraq" which imply a power of sale and it was argued that the above words showed that the transaction was a mortgage, it was held that there was nothing in the deed except the above words to show that the power of sale was granted, that the parties wishing to create a charge as distinguished from a mortgage could not do so without using the above or some such words, and that what was intended was to provide a property which M could always take possession of, in lieu of her dower and therefore the transaction did not amount to a simple mortgage but created a charge only.(16)

However, where under an agreement for sale of property earnest money is paid and the sale is to be held within four months subject to approval of owner's title with condition that if the vendor does not complete the sale the earnest money would be due and payable by him and that it would be a first charge on the property the transaction amounts to a mortgage.(17)

Where an instalment bond provided that the executant would be personally responsible for the payment of the money and in case of default it would be competent to the other party "to institute a suit, obtain a decree and to recover the dues by attachment and sale of the under-tenure," it was held that the clause which entitled the creditor to recover his dues by attachment and sale of the property lent support to the view that a mere charge was to be created, inasmuch as an attachment is wholly unnecessary in a proceeding for the sale of property under a mortgage decree. The document therefore was held to create only a charge and not a mortgage.(18)

According to the High Court of Lahore the presence of a personal liability makes the transaction a mortgage. In Benares Bank Ltd. v. Harprasad(19) their Lordships observed :

"When a charge is created by act of party the specification of the particular fund or property negatives a personal liability and the remedy of the holder of the charge is against the property charged only. When there is in addition a personal covenant, the security will become collateral to that personal covenant and the security would in that case appear to become a transfer of a right of sale to support the personal covenant and as the right of sale is a right in rem the transaction would be a mortgage. For this reason it has been held that the absence of a personal liability is the principal test that distinguishes a charge from a simple mortgage."

A similar view was taken by the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court also in the undermentioned case.(20) See also the undermentioned case.(21)

In the Punjab certain classes of agriculturists cannot create a mortgage of their land by virtue of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act (13 of 1900) though it was permissible before. Where A executed a mortgage before the Act and subsequent to the Act took a further advance on the old security on the same conditions as the original mortgage, it was held that the subsequent transaction was not a fresh alienation so as to be hit by the Act, (22) but that it created only a charge (23).

16. Creation of charge — Writing and registration, whether necessary.

Prior to 1929, there was no provision specifying any formalities for the creation of a charge as there was in S. 59 in regard to mortgages, in S. 107 in regard to leases, in S. 118 in regard to exchanges, and in S. 123 in regard to gifts. In some cases it was held, therefore, that it could be created even orally, (1) in accordance with the general principle of law that everything is to be taken as permissible unless there is a prohibition against it. If, however, a document was executed, it had to be registered under S. 17(1)(b), Registration Act, unless the amount secured was less than one hundred rupees (2). No attestation was, however, necessary (3). Nor was it necessary that the deed should also be signed by the person creating the charge. It was sufficient if it was accepted by him. (4)

The first paragraph of Section 100 of T.P. Act consists of two parts. The first part concerns the creation of a charge over immovable property. A charge may be made by act of parties or by operation of law. No restriction is put on the manner in which a charge can be made. Where such a charge has been created the second part comes into play. It provides that all the provisions hereinbefore contained which apply to a simple mortgage shall, so far as may be, apply to such charge. The second part does not address itself to the question of creation of a charge. It does not attract the provisions of Section 59 of Registration Act relating to the creation of a mortgage. With regard to the applicability of the provisions to a simple mortgage, the second part of the first paragraph makes no distinction between a charge created by act of parties and a charge by operation of law. Now a charge by operation of law is not made by a signed, registered and attested instrument. Obviously, the second part has not the effect of attracting the provisions of Section 59 to such a charge. If a charge can be made by a registered instrument only in accordance with Section 59 of Registration Act the subsequent transferee will always have notice of the charge in view of Section 3 of T.P. Act under which registration of the instrument operates as such a notice. But the basic assumption of the doctrine of notice enunciated in the second paragraph is that there may be cases where the subsequent transferee may not have notice of the charge. The plain implication of this paragraph is that a charge can be made without any writing. If a non-testamentary instrument creates a charge of the value of Rs. 100/- or upwards, the document must be registered under Section 17(1)(b) of the Registration Act. But there is no provision of law which requires that an instrument creating the charge must be attested by witnesses. Thus where in a suit on promissory notes, a security bond is executed by defendant in respect of immovable properties for the benefit of decree-holder as a charge for decree amount such a security bond is not required to be attested. It is valid and operative if it is duly registered (5)

Where the charge is created by a decree, it is exempted from registration under S. 17(2)(vi), Registration Act, 1908. The same rule has been held to apply where the decree incorporates a compromise creating a charge (6). It has also been held that in such cases the fact that the compromise creating the charge has not been attested would not render the charge or the decree invalid (7).

Where the value of the suit property exceeds Rs. 100/-, a security bond executed for stay of execution of decree pending appeal requires to be registered (8).

the present section is to clarify the position. (1) But even this fails to give a clear idea as the particular rights and liabilities of a charge-holder. The words "so far as may be," show that certain provisions which apply to a simple mortgage may not be applicable to the case of a charge. The section provides that all the provisions preceding this section which apply to a simple mortgage shall apply to a charge, unless any particular provision is incompatible with a charge. (2) Thus, the provisions contained in S. 56(3), S. 67(4), S. 68(5), S. 79(6), S. 83(7), and S. 92(8), have been held to be applicable to charges. On the other hand the provisions of S. 67-A have been held applicable to charges created by act of parties but not to charges created by operation of law, on the ground that the clause "in the absence of a contract to the contrary" occurring in that section is an essential part of it and cannot be given effect to in a statutory charge. (9) On the same principle, it follows that all the provisions which apply to a simple mortgage only "in the absence of a contract to the contrary" will not apply to a charge created by operation of law.

A charge-holder, like a simple mortgagee, has a right to bring the property charged to sale. (10)

In Renukabar v. Bheosan (11) where a charge for maintenance was created by act of parties and the charge-holder was given a right to take possession of the property instead of a right to ask for sale, it was held that the first part of the section dealt with substantive rights and the second with the manner in which they were to be enforced and if a transaction created a charge within the meaning of the first part of the section it did not become invalid only because a remedy provided for the enforcement of the charge was other than the sale of the property. According to his Lordship "S. 100 contemplates other methods of enforcement, for, the words relating to sale are "so far as may be" and unless some authority is cited to show that the transaction is invalid, effect should be given to the manifest intention of the parties."

A charge-holder, like a simple mortgagee, can enforce his charge against any portion of the property charged. (12)

Where there was a prior charge to secure the arrears of property tax on a building mortgaged to Bank for loan, it was held that the Bank on selling the building was selling as second mortgagee who had to discharge the first charge so as to give an unincumbered estate (13)

Where a charge holder is given possession of the property as a charge-holder, he can remain in possession of it until the amount due to him is satisfied, but if the possession is not attributable to the charge he cannot insist on retaining possession until his dues are paid (14) In the undermentioned case (15) decided before the amendment in 1929, where the charge-holder was given possession as such and one of the owners of the charged property sued to recover possession on payment of the charged amount it was held that, by virtue of S. 100, the last paragraph of S. 60 applied to his case and if he had claimed possession of his share only on payment of the proportionate amount he would not have been allowed to do so but as he claimed the whole property by paying the whole amount he was entitled to do so.

Where in execution of maintenance decree property charged is sold, auction purchaser can be said to have purchased property subject to charge of maintenance as the judgment debtor's right was already circumscribed by charge of maintenance. (16)

Where while enforcing charge of maintenance, if at a particular point of time a particular property is sold and the sale proceeds were not sufficient to liquidate the arrears of maintenance, then the charge-holder could proceed against other properties in the very execution. (17)

A charge already created in favour of the creditor would continue to subsist so long as the same has not been extinguished or abandoned by express words. Hence where a mortgagor, as a part of the same transaction, took back the mortgaged property on lease, making the rent payable a charge on his equity of redemption, and subsequently surrendered the lease, undertaking to pay the arrears of rent and interest, without delay, and there were no express words in the release deed executed by him extinguishing the charge created by him, it was held, that the mortgagee was entitled to insist on the payment of the arrears of rent as well as the mortgage amount due before allowing redemption. 18. Priority as amongst several charges.

Ordinarily as between several charges created on the same immovable property a charge later in point of time will be postponed to one earlier in point of time (1) See also section 48.

19. Assignment of a charge.

A charge is not a merely personal right but is a right as to property and as such is transferable. (1) But in some cases, a charge has been said to be an interest in property (2) It is submitted that this is not an accurate use of language. (See Note 13).

As to whether such an assignment requires registration, see Note 17 on S. 8, under the sub-heading 'debt secured by a charge' and the undermentioned cases (3)

A partition deed between A and N created a charge in favour of A on properties allotted to N's share for expenses of certain religious ceremonies. A transferred his share to X who performed such ceremonies and claimed to enforce the charge against N's properties. It was held that it was competent to perform such ceremonies, he could enforce the charge against N (4)

20. Section does not apply to a charge of a trustee.

A trustee has a right of indemnity for out of pocket expenses properly incurred by him in the execution of the trust. He has a first charge in respect of this right of indemnity on the trust estate, (1) both income and corpus (2) The first half of the second paragraph of this section provides that the provisions of this section will not apply to such a charge. Section 32 of the Trusts Act, 1882 provides a special mode for the enforcement of the trustee's charge. That section provides

"Every trustee may reimburse himself, or pay or discharge out of the trust property, all expenses properly incurred in or about the execution of the trust or the realization, preservation or benefit of the trust property or the protection or support of the beneficiary.

If he pays such expenses out of his own pocket, he has a first charge upon the trust property for such expenses and interest thereon, but such charge (unless the expenses have been incurred with the sanction of a principal civil Court of original jurisdiction) shall be enforced only by prohibiting any disposition of the trust-property without previous payment of such expenses and interest.

If the trust property fails the trustee is entitled to recover from the beneficiary personally on whose behalf he acted, and at whose request, express or implied, he made the payment, the amount of such expenses

Where a trustee has by mistake made an over-payment to the beneficiary, he may reimburse the trust-property out of the beneficiary's interest. If such interest fails, the trustee is entitled to recover from the beneficiary personally the amount of such over-payment."

The reason why the trustee is given the right to enforce his charge only by prohibiting any disposition of the trust property without previous payment of such expenses is that he cannot be allowed to put an end to the trust itself by bringing the corpus of the property to sale (3) In Darke v Williamson(4) the re-building of a chapel was entrusted to three of the trustees in whom the estate was vested. There being a deficiency of money, they borrowed, on a deposit of the title deeds of the chapel, £500 which they personally engaged to pay. The representatives of the trustees were compelled to pay the money. The legal estate was vested in new trustees. It was held that representatives of the persons who had paid the £500 were not entitled to a decree for foreclosure or sale, as by granting such relief the trust would have been altogether destroyed, and that the proper course for realising the money was to deliver the title deeds into their custody and to prohibit disposition of the property without previous discharge of their lien.

The trustee is, however, entitled to have his costs and expenses of executing the trust which is existing and valid. Where the trust is void there is no trust which he can execute and therefore he cannot claim costs and expenses incurred in the execution of what is merely an invalid and inoperative nominal trust.(5)

Where a donor settled under a Trust Deed all properties in favour of the school and the deed further provided that she was entitled to manage and run the school and reserved a right to receive maintenance from the school and a right to reside in the residential cottage during her lifetime, the maintenance was a charge on the properties.(6)

21. "Save as otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force."

This expression in the second paragraph has the effect of excluding the charges which are expressly provided for in any other law in force from the operation of the provisions as regards notice in this section. Thus, in case of a charge for a loan under the Land Improvement Loans Act (19 of 1883), S. 7(1) of that Act read with its proviso operates as a saving clause and excludes it from the provision as to notice (1) Similarly, a charge for rent under the Central Provinces Tenancy

1. AIR 1939 Bom 183 (187) (Transferee for consideration without notice — Charge held binding)

Act (1 of 1920) is saved from the operation of the provision as regards notice in this section by reason of the express provision in S. 9 of that Act (2). But the saving clause is not limited to those cases in which the law expressly states in so many words that the charge is to take effect against transferees for consideration without notice. It also applies to those cases in which the law provides in effect that the charge is to take effect against transferees without notice: thus, a first charge created under S. 177 of the United Provinces Municipalities Act (2 of 1916) in respect of Municipal tax comes within the saving clause and excludes it from the operation of the provision as to notice (3). But a contrary view has been taken in the undermentioned decision of the Gujarat High Court (4). The provision as to notice under this section was also applied to charges created under the Calcutta Municipal Act of 1899, for sums due on account of a tax imposed upon buildings or lands and consolidated rates. (5)

Auction purchaser of property sold in enforcement of statutory charge of municipal taxes having no notice is not bound by the claim. This section in unambiguous language laid down that no charge is enforceable against any property in the hand of the transferee for consideration without notice of charge where it is otherwise provided by law. A saving provision must expressly provide for enforcement of charge against the property in the hands of the transferee for value without notice of charge and not merely create a charge which Section 141 of the Bombay Provincial Municipal Corporation Act does not do (6).

Where there is a specific provision like Section 74(1) Estate Duty Act that all private transfers of property which are subject to statutory charges of estate duty are void no one deriving title from such a transfer subsequently would get title free from the statutory charge (7).

In Manna v. Ashan Hussain (8) A obtained a decree for her maintenance against B, her husband, creating a charge on B's property. Subsequently, B mortgaged the property to C, who sued on the mortgage and obtained possession by force of sale. On A's execution of the decree against C for enforcing the charge, C sued for declaration that the property in his hands was free from the charge as he was a bona fide transferee for value without notice. Assuming that C had no notice and that the charge created by the decree was a charge by operation of law within the meaning of this section, it was held that C, as a person claiming through B was B's privy and the decree passed against B bound C also under the general rule of law. C, therefore, was held to fall under the saving clause of the proviso as stated above and could not claim the benefit of the proviso.

If the husband's transferee of property has notice of the charge in respect of the claim of wife's maintenance, the charge can be enforced. (9)

22. Transferee for consideration without notice.

Under the section as it stood before 1929 there was a difference of opinion on the question whether a charge was enforceable against a transferee for value without notice. The general trend of decisions was that it could not be so enforced. (1) A contrary view that it could be enforced even against a transferee for value without notice was held in some cases on the ground that a charge was a transfer of some interest in the property charged and that the transferee could not take a larger interest than the transferor himself had. (2)

As has been seen already in Note 1, the creation of a charge does not transfer any interest in the property charged, as in the case of a mortgage. While, therefore, in the case of a mortgage a transferee of the mortgaged property can acquire only the remaining interest of the mortgagor, a transferee of the charged property takes the whole property unless there is any equity against him. If he is a bona fide transferee for value there is no equity against him and therefore the charge cannot be enforceable against him.

The present section as amended in 1929 makes this position quite clear. A charge is not enforceable against a bona fide transferee for value (3) According to one view the amended section was introduced merely to clarify the position and does not effect any change in the law as it stood before the commencement (4) According to another view the amendment has effected a change in the law, but there is a difference of opinion as to whether it is retrospective (5)

The question whether the transferee is a bona fide purchaser for value and without notice is a question of fact (6) The onus is on the transferee to prove that he is a transferee for consideration without notice. (7) The defence is a single defence that he is a purchaser for value without notice and does not consist of first, a defence that the defendant is a purchaser for value and then a reply from the plaintiff that he had notice (8) and hence ought to be specifically alleged and proved by the transferee. (9)

By virtue of provisions of S 100 T P Act, the land in the hands of the transferee can be pursued for realisation of the decretal dues unless the transferee can prove that he purchased the property without notice of the charge and for consideration (10)

It was held in the undermentioned case (11) that where a subsequent transferee of two items of property burdened with charge transfers one of them to a person for consideration who has no notice of the charge, the charge-holder can recover the entire charge from the remaining property.

In order to claim the benefit of the protection under the provision the subsequent transferee need not be the transferee of the entirety of the property. The protection can be claimed even by the transferee of a portion of that property such as a subsequent purchaser for value or a transferee of an interest in the property such as a mortgagee. (12)

In the case of Dattatraya Shankar Motilal (13) the Supreme Court held that the expression "in the hands of" appear to be a figurative expression intended to convey that a person has sufficient control over the subject matter to which in the context the phrase is applied so as to enable that person, to do whatever he can do with it as the nature of the subject-matter should permit. Actual control as compared to possibility of obtaining control seems to be implied in the term. In the context of the saving clause the inappropriateness of its applicability to a simple mortgage or in setting of the entire phraseology its inapplication to mortgage seems to us to be clear and evident. In the context in which the phrase, "in the hands of" has been used. There is no doubt that it was intended to convey and it is conveyed that the buyer is a transferee for consideration without notice of charge was in possession including constructive possession through a tenant who has attorned to him and with all intents and purposes as far as transfer is concerned has conveyed to him all the rights, title and interest which the vendor had in the property including possession. Under the S. 100 transfer of property means the transfer of the whole property and not merely an interest in and over the property as a mortgage or lease. The declaration that all provisions hereinbefore contained which applied to simple mortgage shall so far as can be applied to such charge does not have the effect of changing the nature of the charge into one of interest in property. From these observations it would appear that in a competition between in charge created by a decree which is registered and a subsequent mortgage without notice of prior charge the former charge should prevail.

Charge created under Section 55(6)(b) cannot be enforced against bona fide purchaser for value without notice.(14)

But a contrary view is taken in the Bombay High Court observing that on account of deletion of the words "with notice of payment" which occurred after the words "claiming under him" by an amendment the result is that the charge of the buyer on the price pre-paid is effective not only against the seller but against all persons claiming under him irrespective of notice (15)

It was held however in the undermentioned case(16) that where a subsequent transferee is a simple mortgagee, he cannot be considered "to have the property in his hands" within the meaning of this section, so as to be able to plead the defence under the proviso.

As to the enforcement of seller's charge and a buyer's charge against a transferee for consideration without notice, see Notes 12 and 20 respectively on Section 55

23. Subsequent transferee from a transferee, if protected.

Where A is a transferee of the charge property for consideration with notice of the charge and he transfers it to B who takes it for consideration without notice of the charge, on the plain meaning of the section B being a transferee without notice, the property in his hands will not be subject to the charge (1) Where A a transferee for consideration without notice of a charge, transfers it to B who has notice of it, can B take it free from charge? Yes. The reason is that a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice can give a good title to a purchaser from him with or without notice (2) A being a purchaser without notice takes the property free of the charge and he is perfectly entitled to transfer his rights to any person whether the latter had notice of the charge or not. B can thus shelter himself under the title of A, his transferor.(3) 24. Charge, whether binds auction-purchaser.

Section 2, Cl. (d) provides that the Act does not apply to transfers in execution of decrees or orders save as provided by S. 57 and Chap. IV. The saving provision in S. 2, Cl. (d) is perfectly general in its terms and this section being contained in Chap. IV, the provision as to notice applies to transfers by auction sales in execution and an auction-purchaser takes the property which he buys for a price, free of the charge if he has no notice thereof (1) (See also notes on section 2.)

According to the undermentioned cases (2) however, this provision did not apply to auction-purchasers. Relying upon the preamble and the definition of "transfer of property" in S. 5, they held that the words "transferred for consideration" in this proviso must be taken to mean only a transfer by act of parties and not a transfer by court sale. Further, following the English law on the subject, these cases held that the auction-purchaser was in no better position than the judgment debtor himself and he was, therefore, subject to the same equities as the judgment debtor was, with or without notice of the charge. No doubt, the language of S. 100 itself seems to be more appropriate for a transaction based on a contract. But in view of the fact that by virtue of S. 2(d) the provisions of S. 100 directly apply to the transfers by operation of law or by or in execution of a decree or order of a Court, the words, "transferred for consideration", which are wide enough to include these transfers also, must be taken to include auction sales and this proviso must, therefore, be taken to apply to auction-purchasers (3). Recently this question was considered by the Supreme Court in Laxmi Devi v. Mukund Kanwar (4) and there it was held by that Court, overruling the first view, that the latter view states the correct law and the proviso applies to auction-purchasers. See also the undermentioned case (5) which, following the Supreme Court decision, has applied the proviso to the auction-purchasers.

However, where the property was purchased by the petitioner in a public auction in execution of mortgage decree obtained by State Financial Corporation against the owner mortgagor and he had notice of property tax due in respect of property purchased by him, the first charge of Corporation in respect of the property could be enforced even against him by initiating recovery proceedings permissible under law. When a charge was first created by operation of law over any property, that charge would have precedence over an existing mortgage (6).

See also the undermentioned cases (7) in which this provision as to notice is applied to auction-purchasers.

25. Enforcement of charge.

By virtue of the last clause of the first paragraph of this section, S. 67 is applicable to a charge-holder and he is entitled, like a simple mortgagee, to sue for sale of the charged property. Order 34, R. 15 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the provisions contained in that Order and which apply to a simple mortgage should, so far as may be, be applied to charges also. The procedure for the enforcement of a charge by a suit for sale of the property will, therefore, be governed by rules contained in that Order. There must, therefore, be a preliminary decree under O. 34, R. 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure in all such cases.(1) Further by virtue of O. 34, R. 14 of the Code of Civil Procedure, he cannot obtain a money decree in respect of the amount charged and sell the property. He must file a suit for sale of the property charged.(2)

In a case from Malasia it was held that on an application for sale of the land charged, the court has not only to apply the law, but also to invoke the aid of equity in order to be satisfied whether a cause to the contrary has been shown or not in accordance with S. 256(3) of the National Land Code (corresponding to S. 100 of T. P. Act).

The charge must not only come to the court with proof that the charger has defaulted but also with the proof that the chargee himself is free of fault and that he was not guilty of any unreasonable conduct, and that there was no right of innocent third parties to be affected by the order.(3)

The effect of a decree on a charge is the same as that of a decree on a mortgage (4)

Where in pursuance of a decree for sale, the property is sold but the sale proceeds are found insufficient, the charge-holder will be entitled to apply for a personal decree against the judgment debtor under O. 34, R. 6 if the judgment-debtor is also under a personal obligation to pay the money.(5) It has been observed, however, in the undermentioned case,(6) that even if the judgment-debtor is not under a personal obligation to pay, the charge-holder will be entitled to a personal decree under O. 34, R. 6 by virtue of the provisions of O. 34, R. 15. The relevant remarks are based on the authority of an Allahabad case(7) and on the assumption that in that case the decree was granted under O. 34, R. 6 only on the authority of O. 34, R. 15. It is submitted that the view ignores the words, "so far as may be" in R. 15. A personal decree under O. 34, R. 6 cannot be passed unless the judgment-debtor is also under a personal obligation. In the Allahabad case above referred to there was such a personal obligation and it was not decided merely on the strength of the provision in O. 34, R. 15 as it stood before the amendment.

A decree creating a charge for future maintenance to be paid at a particular time stands exactly on the same footing as a decree ordering the payment of a sum of money by instalments and the charge-holder may apply for execution of the decree as the amount of maintenance becomes due (8). In such a case though the charged property may be sold for arrears already accrued, the liability for future payments will remain after the sale and the property in the hands of the auction-purchaser will be subject to the charge in respect of such payments (9).

The amount of court-fee that is recoverable in a paper suit and for which the Government has a charge on the subject-matter of the suit can be recovered by the Government on execution of the decree and a separate suit for the purpose is not necessary (10).

A person having a charge on the property of a company can claim priority over the unsecured creditors of the company without bringing a suit for that purpose if the company has gone into liquidation (11).

Where a charge-holder is entitled to claim possession of the property instead of a sale thereof the decree in a suit for possession will have to approximate as close as may be to a decree for foreclosure (12). A charge-holder not entitled to possession of the property cannot enforce the charge by suing for possession (13).

As to the enforcement of the charge under S. 7 of the Land Improvement Loans Act, 19 of 1883, see the undermentioned case (14).

Debts owed to the Corporation in the form of consolidated rates can be enforced against the property charged therefor in absolute right (15).

26. Personal liability.

Where a charge is created by act of parties and there is a personal covenant to pay, the charge holder is, of course, entitled to a personal decree against the person bound to pay.

Where there is no personal covenant to pay the charge holder will not on principle be entitled to a personal decree (1). It has, however, been held in the undermentioned cases (2) that he will be given a personal decree where the charge is on the income of the property and the defendant has been in receipt and enjoyment of the income. Where the plaintiff had a seller's charge under S. 55(4)(b) and sued to enforce his charge and also claimed a personal decree against the defendant, he was granted such a decree inasmuch as the buyer was also under a personal obligation to pay the purchase-money under S. 55(5)(b).(3)

Neither Section 49B of the Electricity (Supply) Act, 1948 (as amended in W. B.) nor Cl 6 of Schedule of Electricity Act, 1910 (as amended in W. B.) do nowhere make the outstanding dues of the licensee for the energy supplied to person, a charge on the premises or the property to which the electricity was supplied. These are personal obligations. The auction purchaser of premises is not liable to make payment of outstanding dues for consumption of electricity supplied to that premises prior to such auction sale.(4)

27. Sale in execution of a charge decree — Whether extinguishes the charge.

Where in a suit to enforce a charge a decree for sale is obtained and the property is sold in execution of the decree, a question arises whether such a sale extinguishes the charge on the property and the auction-purchaser gets it free from it. The general principle applicable to the mortgage is that at a mortgage sale the auction-purchaser takes the security free from the mortgage. Order 34, Rule 15 of the Civil Procedure Code also provides that all provisions which apply to a simple mortgage shall, so far as may be, apply to charges. In applying those provisions, it must, however, be borne in mind that a charge is not exactly identical with a mortgage, and although a similar remedy is available, a suit for the enforcement of a charge is not necessarily the same as a suit for sale on a mortgage(1) and hence different results may follow. Thus, the general principle stated above regarding mortgage sale, might apply in the case of a single charge because by reason of sale, all dues on the charge may be liquidated either by the sale proceeds or by a personal remedy where available and thus the charge may be extinguished. But where a charge is of a recurring nature, as in the case of maintenance allowance, if the property is sold in execution of a decree for arrears, the liability in respect of future payments remains after the sale and is not extinguished by it. The effect of the sale is to satisfy the claim for the arrears only. The charge for future maintenance still remains attached to the property and the auction-purchaser gets the property subject to the charge.(2) Second part of Section 100 is subject to Section 52, T. P. Act.(3) See also the under-mentioned case.(4)

28. Charge created by a decree.

One view is that where a decree incorporates a compromise creating a charge upon specific immovable property of the judgment-debtor it is a charge within the meaning of this section (1) According to some cases it is nothing but a charge by act of parties (2) the reason being the well-settled principle that a contract is nonetheless a contract because it is embodied in a decree (3) It has been held by the undermentioned case(4) that a decree creating a charge passed on the basis of an award also amounts to an "act of parties" According to the undermentioned case(5) a charge created by a decree based upon an award is nonetheless a charge created by operation of law as the expression "operation of law" only means working of the law Another view is that a charge created by a decree is not a charge within the meaning of this section According to this view the section is limited to charges created by act of parties or by operation of law and is not exhaustive of all charges A charge created by a decree is neither a charge created by act of parties nor a charge by operation of law It is, therefore, not included in this section (6) According to this view decrees stand on some what different footing and are governed by rules of their own, so it may well be that the intention of the Legislature was to leave decrees out of this section "(7) This view does not distinguish between decrees incorporating a compromise and ordinary decrees

No doubt, this section specifically deals with charges created only by act of parties and by operation of law. It is also true that in view of the distinction made by S. 2, Cl (d) between a transfer "by operation of law" and that "by or in execution of a decree of a competent Court," a charge created by operation of law must be distinguished from that created by a decree so as to not to include the latter within the former class. The Special Committee in 1927, however, have referred to the charges created by a decree in their report and have purported to amend the section in order to protect the transferees for consideration without notice "as charges created by operation of law or by a decree will not necessarily be registered" (8) This according to the undermentioned cases, (9) seems to suggest that they intended to include the charge created by decree within the purview of this section. But a contrary view, viz. that the expression "operation of law" would not include a charge created by a decree has been taken in the undermentioned cases (10)

The plaintiff's suit for specific performance was not decreed but the suit was decreed for the amount paid by the plaintiff to the defendant vendor with interest, charged on the property which was agreed to be sold. In execution of the decree, the defendant's property was auctioned and was purchased by the decree holder. Thus the charge was created on the property by the court by its decree. In respect of the charge created for the first time by a decree, S. 100 has no application. This was not a case where decree was passed in favour of the decree holder in recognition of any right available to him under S. 55(6)(b). It was again not a charge created by a decree passed in pursuance of agreement or by act of parties but a charge created by the court by its decree. Therefore S. 100 would not apply. (11)

There is a distinction between decree which declares a charge and a decree which creates a charge. In the former case charge declared under the decree is created by act of parties or by operation of law and comes within Section 100 and to enforce it a fresh suit is necessary. In the case of a decree which creates a charge decree-holder can execute it by putting the property to sale. (12)

A charge created in a decree passed after contest is a charge by operation of law (13)

(B) Enforceability against transferee for consideration without notice.

Even in the cases which held that a charge created by a decree was a charge within the meaning of this section there was a conflict of opinion as to whether such a charge could be enforced against a transferee for consideration without notice of a charge. Some cases held that a charge created by decree could be enforced against transferee for consideration whether he had notice of it or not (14) resting this view on the ground that a charge was a transfer of an interest in property and an owner of the property charged could, like a mortgagor, pass it only subject to it (15) A contrary view, namely that a charge could not be enforced against a transferee for consideration without notice was taken by other cases (16) By the amendment in 1929, the conflict has been set at rest by the addition of the proviso in the section and, therefore, no charge, if it comes within the meaning of the section, whether by decree or otherwise, will be enforceable against a transferee for consideration without notice of it. (17)

According to the view which holds that the charge created by a decree is not a charge within the meaning of this section, its enforceability against a transferee for value without notice will be governed by different considerations and different rules. The difference which the intervention of a decree makes, according to this view, is that, not only the immediate parties to a decree are bound by it but also all persons who claim through or under them and date their title from after the decree or the institution of the suit. In other words, not only are the parties bound by the decree but also their privies. One effect of this is that the question of notice does not arise (18)

Where the decree is not merely declaratory creating a charge but is an executable decree under which the charge can be enforced by getting the property charged sold, it cannot be urged that it

Where the decree which created the charge has been satisfied in full and no longer exists and a person wants to enforce a charge which has accrued in his favour by operation of the law of subrogation the law of estoppel cannot be called into aid, as it is only a charge and not as a judgment that he wants to enforce it. was binding only against the judgment-debtor but not against his privies including the purchaser for value without notice.(19)

Thus, where a decree creating a charge is executable, that is to say, if the Court orders the defendant to pay the plaintiff a certain sum of money on a specified date and directs that if it is not paid, property which it specifies is to be sold for its recovery, those orders must be carried out and the judgment-debtor cannot evade them by transferring the property so charged to another, however innocent the other party may be. The doctrine of estoppel by record applies in such a case. The doctrine of lis pendens may also apply (20) The effect of the former doctrine is to create an estoppel in such a case so as to bind the transferee from the judgment-debtor after the decree to carry out its orders in the same way and to the same extent as the judgment-debtor himself and it is not necessary for the decree-holder to sue the transferee all over against (21) But when the decree creating a charge is merely declaratory and does not direct the doing of a particular thing, that is to say, it is not executable, an important difference arises, and the transferee, though bound by the decision in the sense that it is res judicata, is not necessarily bound to the same extent and in the same way as the judgment-debtor. Pleas are available to him which are not available to the judgment-debtor. The effect of the application of the doctrine of estoppel by record to such a decree is only this : The estoppel being restricted to the precise point put in issue and decided, or at the outside, to a point which might and ought to have been raised, the decree is effective to create a charge on property in the hands of the judgment-debtor in that suit and nothing more. Then the ordinary rule governing the charges, namely that a bona fide purchaser for value without notice takes the property free of charge, obtains in this case, and a transferee for consideration without notice of a charge created by a decree will not be bound by the charge (22) The same result follows by the application of the doctrine of lis pendens. When a decree creates a charge and provides expressly or impliedly for its execution, it does not put an end to the suit and hence the transferee from the judgment-debtor is bound by the charge, whether he takes it with or without notice (23)

A judgment-debtor had brought a title suit to set aside the money decree and applied for stay of execution proceedings in which the suit land was sought to be sold to realise the decretal amount, the court granted the stay after the judgment-debtors furnishing a security bond. Ultimately the title suit was dismissed and the land was sold in auction. The judgment-debtor had, however, transferred the land during pendency of the suit. It was held that the transferee from the judgment-debtor could not contend that the transfer was not attracted by the mischief of lis pendens. A charge within the meaning of S. 100 is quite competent to attract the provisions of S. 52 of the T. P. Act (24)

But where the decree is merely declaratory and inexecutable, the suit qua suit is at an end and the transfer is not hit by the doctrine of lis pendens (25). In short, where a decree creating a charge is executable, the property in the hands of a transferee for consideration without notice will be bound by the charge, while in case of a declaratory and inexecutable decree, he will not be so bound.

A mortgage created in spite of notice of a pending suit in which charge in respect of the same property is claimed will be bound by the decree under Section 52 (26).

This section will not apply to the case of a transfer during the pendency of a litigation in which a charge is created by a decree. In such a case the transfer is affected by the doctrine of lis pendens and the question of notice is immaterial (27). See also S. 52 Notes 6a and 20.

(C) Enforcement of the charge.

By virtue of O. 34, R. 15, Civil Procedure Code, all provisions in O. 34 applicable to a simple mortgage apply, so far as may be, to charges within the meaning of S. 100. If a charge created by a decree is regarded as one under S. 100, the rules in O. 34 will apply to it so far as they are appropriate to the nature of the charge. Thus, where a decree creating a charge is final in its terms, no fresh final decree is necessary (28). Rule 14 of O. 34, however, does not apply to charges which are created for the first time by a decree. Such a charge can, therefore, be enforced in execution without any fresh suit being filed in respect of it. (29)

If a charge created by a decree is treated as one not within S. 100, it will be enforced by sale of the property in execution of the decree itself when it is executable (30) and by a suit to enforce the charge by sale, where the decree is declaratory. (31)

The question whether the charge had been created by the decree itself or by the compromise stated by the counsel before the Court is a question of fact which has to be decided on the interpretation of the statement which has been made by the counsel (32).

As to whether a personal remedy is available for such a charge, see Note 10a on O. 34, R. 15 Civil Procedure Code in the Appendix.

the property pays money in order to save the property from loss or destruction, he has a first charge on the property for such payments.(1)

Government revenue is the first and paramount charge upon the land and if default is made in payment, the land is sold in a summary way. The purchaser gets a clear title and the land is lost for ever to the defaulting proprietor (2) The question arises as to whether a person who pays the Government revenue on behalf of another who is liable to pay it and thus saves the land from sale is entitled to a charge, for payment, on the land saved. In Nugender Chunder Ghose v. Shreemutty Kominee Dossee (3) A mortgaged his property to B. A died and his widow C while in possession of the property allowed the Government revenue to fall into arrears. In order to save the property from being sold, B paid up the arrears. Their Lordships of the Privy Council observed :

"Considering that the payment of the revenue by the mortgagee will prevent the talook from being sold their Lordships would, if that were the sole question for their consideration, find it difficult to come to any other conclusion than that the person who had such an interest in the talook as entitled him to pay the revenue due to the Government, and did actually pay it was thereby entitled to a charge on the talook as against all persons interested therein for the amount of the money so paid "

Following this decision it was held in the undermentioned cases(4) that a co-sharer who paid the quota of the Government revenue due from another co-sharer in order to save the estate from being sold was entitled to a charge on the other co sharer's share for the payment made on his behalf. This view was, however, adversely commented upon in Kristomohunee Dossee v. Kali Prosono Ghose.(5) The question came for decision before a Full Bench in Kinu Ram v. Mozaffar Husam(6) and the majority of the Judges held that the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Nugender's case(7) were merely obiter; that those observations ought to be understood as applicable to the case of a mortgagee alone, that the doctrine of salvage lien acted upon in Irish cases was rejected in England in the undermentioned cases(8) and that there was no general principle of law that a payment of Government revenue or any other payment necessary to save the estate made by one having an interest which would be sacrificed by the loss of the estate, gives a charge on the estate for the money so paid and that, therefore, a co-sharer paying the Government revenue and thus saving the estate did not by reason of such payment acquire any charge on the share of the defaulting co-sharer. The minority, however, followed Nugender's case(9) and took the contrary view taken by earlier cases. Following the majority view in Kinu Ram's case(10) the High Courts of Allahabad(11), Bombay(12), Calcutta(13) and Patna(14) have held that the co-sharer has no charge for the payment. The Madras High Court(15) on the other hand, has followed Nugender's case(16) and the view taken by the minority of the Judges in Kinu Ram's case(17) and held that the co-sharer has got a charge in such cases. The Nagpur Court adopted the majority view in Kinu Ram's case(18) in one case(19) but later cases(20) held that the co-sharer has got a charge.

The minority view in Kinu Ram's case(21) left the case of a mortgagee paying Government revenue untouched and it was held in the undermentioned cases(22) following Nugender's case, (23) that the mortgagee paying the Government revenue in order to save the property from sale has a charge on the property.

The principle referred to above as to payments in the nature of salvage is not confined to payments of Government revenue, but is of general application (24)

A tenant for life may spend to save the property from the forfeiture by a creditor of the estate and has a lien for the money so spent. But he spends for improvements at his peril. Such tenant cannot sell portion of the property and contend it is binding on the remainderman. The principal of salvage being that if the property has to be saved, he cannot be permitted to sell the property or even a portion of it except with the consent of the remainderman (25)

A purchased an oil well which was subject to a mortgage. B had a right of pre-emption. A made payment to the mortgagee in part satisfaction of the mortgage decree on the oil well, the payments being necessary to save the oil well from sale. It was held that A had a charge for the amount paid as against B exercising his right of pre-emption.(26)

It will thus be seen that even if it is assumed as held in Kinu Ram's case(27) that the doctrine of salvage has been rejected in England, it has been applied.(28) and applied by the highest tribunal, in India. Thus, in Manohar Das v. Hazari Mull(29) decided in the year 1931 their Lordships of the Privy Council observed .

"As regards the present question, the only effect of the preliminary decree was to make the mortgaged property security for the judgment debt pending realization, by sale as provided in the decree, and, pending such realization, the plaintiff, as a secured decree-holder, was just as much interested in the preservation of the security as he had been under his mortgage while it subsisted, and their Lordships see no reason why he should not be entitled, in accordance with the opinion of the Board in the case already cited Nugender's case, to a first charge in respect of the payments of revenue made after the passing of the final decree, which were really in the nature of salvage payments on behalf of all persons interested."

It has been held by the Rangoon High Court that the charge given on the principle of salvage lien is not a charge within the meaning of the section.(30)

30. Hindu widow's right of maintenance.

A Hindu widow's right of maintenance is not a charge on the family property within the meaning of this section though it may be made a charge by a decree of Court or by agreement (1) In some decisions, no doubt, the word "charge" or "security" has been used in connection with the widow's right of maintenance(2) but it is in a loose sense that the word can be so used (3) Thus, it may be said that the widow has a charge on the property only in the sense that the liability of her husband's relations to maintain her is not a personal one but arises from there being family property in their hands.(4)

If a charge is created in maintenance suit on specific immovable property the decree can be executed against the property.(5)

A charge created by the Court in like a judicial lien, which is separate and distinct from the charge created under S 82. There is no question of applying the doctrine of equity. Therefore in a decree for maintenance creating a charge on the suit properties decree holder is entitled to proceed against any of the charged properties created by the Court leaving the rest of the charged properties. Furthermore, the charge created by the Court cannot be split up(6)

Maintenance decree is not only a declaratory decree but is also an executory decree. The decree-holder is entitled to recover past maintenance by proceeding against the charged property as well as future maintenance and charge continues as long as the decree holder has right to recover further maintenance. Sale in execution of such a decree does not extinguish the charge completely. Therefore the same property can be brought to auction whenever maintenance becomes due and the

(The application of the doctrine of salvage Lien does not depend upon the question whether the demand which was met was a charge or a first charge on the property. The doctrine of salvage Lien is wider than the doctrine of subrogation. In the case of subrogation the person making the payment gets only the rights of the person whose dues are paid off while in the case of salvage Lien such person is entitled to a right prevails over all the interests which are saved by the payment.)

auction purchaser purchases it subject to the charge. An executory charge decree for maintenance becomes executable again and again as future sums become due (7)

Charge attaches to the property charged and a charge for maintenance present and future is a recurring charge and is not extinguished by decree for sale. A recurring charge is not identical with a mortgage and an auction purchaser would not get the property free from charge.(8)

Where a charge is created in a suit for maintenance by wife against the husband as manager of joint family her step-sons who were made eonomine parties are bound by the decree and subsequent partition does not change its position.(9)

Similarly, once a charge is created over the properties, which would stand as a security for the payment of maintenance the charge will continue to be there even if the maintenance amount is increased due to change of circumstances and would also be available for the entire amount including enhanced maintenance.(10)

Debts due by a deceased Hindu are also not a charge upon any specific property unless expressly made so by agreement or by a decree.(11) Debts binding upon a Hindu, however, take precedence over his widow's right of maintenance (12) Therefore, though under S. 39, a right of maintenance can be enforced against a transferee with notice or a gratuitous transferee, the rule does not apply where the debts having precedence over the right of maintenance, a transfer of the family property is in liquidation of such debts (13) But if the maintenance has been made a charge upon the property it will take precedence over the right of a subsequent purchaser of the same property in execution of a money decree even though such decree is in respect of a debt binding on the husband.(14)

they were purchased by third parties in the auction held by the court in execution of the maintenance decree is that the auction-purchaser purchases the properties subject to the charge (15)

After passing of the decree for maintenance, the husband of the decree-holder wife died. Consequently she became entitled to succession to the share in the property left by her deceased husband. Therefore the security in the form of charge obtained by her because of decree for maintenance became merged in the greater right of succession and thus the charge stood extinguished. Her remedy to proceed against the property for realising maintenance amount came to an end (16)

When a person is trying to execute a maintenance decree with a charge he is really trying to enforce a charge, he is not trying to recover a debt within meaning of Section 214 of Indian Succession Act and there is no need for him to obtain a succession certificate (17)

So also where in a suit for maintenance filed in forma pauperis a decree creating a charge on property for arrears of maintenance was passed the charge so created was held to take precedence over the rights of the purchaser at the sale held in enforcement of the statutory charge under O. 33, R. 10, Civil P. C. for arrears of court-fee in that suit (18)

31. Debts of a deceased Muhammadan.

The unsecured debts of a deceased Muhammadan are not a charge upon the estate left by him and do not give the creditor any priority over a bona fide purchaser for value to whom it has been transferred by his heir-at-law (1). A Muhammadan wife's claim for dower is exactly on the same footing as any other unsecured debt and does not create a charge upon the estate of the husband (2). Thus, in Hamura Bibi v. Zubaida Bibi (3) their Lordships of the Privy Council observed

"The dower ranks as a debt, and the wife is entitled, along with the other creditors, to have it satisfied on the death of the husband out of his estate. Her right, however, is no greater than that of any other unsecured creditor, except that if she lawfully, with the express or implied consent of the husband or his other heirs, obtains possession of the whole or part of his estate, to satisfy her claim with the

1. Scope of the section.

It is an important principle of equity jurisprudence, that the mere fact of a charge having been paid off does not decide the question whether it was extinguished. It is a matter of intention of the parties. If the charge is intended to be kept alive it will not be extinguished. The intention to keep the charge alive is presumed where it is for the benefit of the person paying to do so, for a man is presumed to act according to his interest (1) This principle of equity, which may be called the rule of intention is, however, not applicable where the person paying off a charge is himself personally liable to pay it. In Adams v. Angell (2) the leading English case on the point Jessel, M. R., observed as follows :

"In a Court of Equity it has always been considered that the mere fact in which a charge has been paid off does not decide the question whether it was intended to be kept alive or not. — The person who pays off the charge may keep it alive or extinguish it, and he may keep it alive either by means of an assignment to a trustee or by a declaration of intention. — The intention, however, is always to prevail if it is sufficiently expressed or evidenced by the surrounding circumstances.

In Thorne v. Cann (3) Lord Macnaghten observed :

"Nothing I think is better settled than this — that when the owner of an estate pays charges on the estate which he is not personally liable to pay, the question whether those charges are to be considered as extinguished or as kept alive for his benefit is simply a question of intention. You may find intention in the deed, or you may find it in the circumstances attending the transaction, or you may presume an intention from considering whether it is or is not for his benefit that the charge should be kept on foot."

The equitable rule of intention was applied in England not only to cases where a charge was paid off by a person, but also to cases to which the doctrine of merger was applicable. Under the latter doctrine where a smaller estate and a larger estate in property became united in the same person in the same capacity, as where a chargeholder acquired the ownership in the property, or the owner acquired the charge on the property, the lesser estate became merged and extinguished in the greater (4) Equity, however, prevented the merger by applying the rule of intention to such cases also.(5)

In India the rule of intention was applied by Courts to cases arising before the Act was passed, as being in consonance with justice, equity and good conscience.(6) In Mohesh Lal v. Mohunt Bawan Das,(7) A took a loan from B in 1872 on a mortgage for Rs. 20,000 of which a sum of Rs. 8,000 and odd was for the payment of an earlier mortgage of 1869 carrying a higher rate of interest. B himself paid off the earlier mortgage out of the consideration amount and got back the discharged mortgage-bond. There were no mesne incumbrances between A's mortgage and the earlier mortgage. It was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the question whether a charge paid off was kept alive or extinguished was one of intention of the parties, that in the circumstances of the case the intention of the parties was to extinguish the charge, that it was not for the benefit of the parties on the date of the advance that the prior charge should be kept alive, and that therefore the charge was extinguished. In Gokaldas Gopaldas v. Puranmat Premsukh Das,(8) A purchased, in execution of a money decree, certain property which was already subject to two mortgages x and y. A paid off x and, in a suit by the mortgagee of y in right of his mortgage, claimed to hold x as a shield. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that he was entitled to do so. They refused to extend to India the rule laid down in Toulmin v. Steere(9) that when a person paid off a prior charge with notice of an incumbrance, he could not keep the charge alive against the incumbrancer. Their Lordships observed :

"The obvious question to ask in the interests of justice, equity and good conscience is—what was the intention of the party paying off the charge? He had a right to extinguish it and a right to keep it alive. What was his intention? If there is no express evidence of it, what intention should be ascribed to him? The ordinary rule is that a man having a right to act in either of two ways shall be assumed to have acted according to his interest."

In the year 1882, the Act introduced two provisions in Ss. 74 and 101. The former provided that any subsequent mortgagee paying off a prior mortgage was entitled to all the rights and powers of the mortgagee paid off, independent of any rule of intention. In other words, the mortgage paid off was kept alive without reference to any intention of the parties. Section 101 enacted the rule of intention in relation to merger. It ran as follows :

"Where the owner of a charge or other incumbrance on immovable property is or becomes absolutely entitled to that property the charge or incumbrance shall be extinguished, unless he declares, by express words or necessary implication that it shall continue to subsist, or such continuance would be for his benefit."

The section did not, in terms, apply to cases where the charge-holder did not, become absolutely entitled to the property charged and there was therefore no question of merger (10) In such cases and in all other cases not regarded as covered by Ss 74 and 101 where a charge or mortgage was paid off the general rule of intention was applied by Courts (11)

(a) Where a charge-holder acquired the ownership of the property charged and there were no intermediate incumbrances and no other circumstances showing that it would be for his benefits to keep the charge alive the charge was extinguished by merger (12) The case fell within Section 101 of the Act as it stood before the amendment of 1929.

alive the charge was not extinguished (13) If even in such a case the intention was clear to extinguish the charge, it was extinguished. (14) This case also fell within the old S. 101.

(c) Where the owner of property acquired a charge upon it and there were no incumbrances and no other benefit by keeping the charge alive, the charge was extinguished by merger. (15) But where the owner (not being the mortgagor himself) acquired a charge thereon and there were intermediate incumbrances, or it was otherwise for his benefit to keep the charge alive, it was not extinguished. (16) These cases also were held to come within the old S. 101 (17), though a contrary view was expressed in the undermentioned case (18) that the matter was governed not by S. 101 but by the general doctrine of merger. The same principles applied where the owner of property subject to several mortgages (not being the mortgagor himself or a person personally liable to pay them) paid off an earlier mortgagee. On such payment, he was held entitled to treat himself as buying the charge and was thus reduced to the position of an owner of property acquiring a charge thereon, and the question whether the charge was extinguished by the rule of merger was one of intention under S. 101 of the Act. In Mali Reddi Ayyareddi v. Gopala Krishnavva (19) their Lordships of the Privy Council observed as follows :

It is now settled law that where in India there are several mortgages on a property the owner of the property subject to mortgages, may if he pays off an earlier charge treat himself as buying it and stand in the same position as his vendor, or to put it in another way he may keep the incumbrances alive for his benefit and thus come in before a later mortgagee. This rule would not apply if the owner of the property had covenanted to pay the later mortgage-debt ... It is further to be presumed, and indeed the Statute so enacts (Transfer of Property Act, S. 101) that "there is no indication to the contrary the owner has intended to have kept alive the previous charge if it would be for his benefit."

Where therefore an owner of property (not being himself under a personal liability to pay the debt) paid off an earlier mortgage, he was held entitled to keep the charge alive, if there were intermediate incumbrances or it was otherwise for his benefit to do so (20).

(d) Where a person advanced money to a mortgagor for the purpose of paying off a prior mortgage, and took a sale or mortgage of the properties in consideration of such advance, the question whether the mortgage paid off was kept alive for his benefit was regarded as one depending on the intention of the parties. (21)

(e) A person who had covenanted to pay the debt or was otherwise personally liable to pay the debt could not, by paying off a prior charge, keep it alive as against the former (22). Thus, the mortgagor who had effected two mortgages on the same property could not, by paying off one of them, keep it alive against the other (23) So also a person who had undertaken to pay mortgages x and y could not pay off x and keep it alive against y. (24)

Where a person paid off a prior charge on the property and was entitled under the rule of intention to keep the charge alive for his benefit he stepped into the shoes of the charge-holder who was paid off. In other words he was subrogated to the rights of the prior charge-holder. But where the mortgagee or charge-holder or incumbrancer himself acquired the ownership of the property there was no question of any subrogation or substitution of one person to the rights of another but it was merely a question of keeping alive the mortgage

By the introduction of the new S 92 and the substitution of the new S 101 for the old section, the Legislature has abolished the rule of intention in cases falling within their scope. A right of subrogation to the rights of a mortgagee does not now depend upon any rule of intention but is governed by the terms of S 92. (25) Where a mortgagee or a person having a charge upon immovable property purchases or acquires the rights in the property, the question whether the mortgage or charge is kept alive (there being no question of subrogation in such a case) does not also depend upon any rule of intention. The section declares that there shall be no merger as between the mortgagee and any subsequent mortgagee or charge-holder of the same property. (26)

But the section does not provide for a case of an owner of property acquiring a charge on the property (27) as by inheritance. Nor does it provide for a case where a mortgagee acquires the ownership of the property and it is for his benefit to keep it alive though there are no subsequent incumbrances. In such cases it is conceived that the rule of intention will still be applicable (28). In the undermentioned cases (29) however the High Court of Bombay has held that a mortgagee acquiring the rights in the property cannot under the present section, keep alive the mortgage if there is no intermediate incumbrance on the property even if it would be otherwise for his benefit to keep it alive. It is submitted that this view is not correct. The section merely says that there shall in the circumstances specified in the section be no merger as against subsequent incumbrancers. It does not say that in all other cases where a mortgagee acquires the property there shall be merger. In the case noted below the view has been expressed that the only case in which it is to the benefit of a mortgagee or charge-holder to keep an encumbrance alive is when it is necessary as a defence against a subsequent encumbrance. (30)

It will thus be seen that the section is only concerned with saying that the doctrine of merger shall not apply in the cases specified. It does not touch the general question as to when merger will take place under the law or when it will not take place (31). It is conceived that the general English doctrine set forth above will apply in India also subject to statutory exception such as that contained in this section (32). As noted already, it is essential for the application of the principle of merger that the two estates must become entitled united in the same person in the same capacity. Otherwise there would be no merger.(33) Thus where a Hindu widow mortgages her husband's property and then the mortgagee transfers to her in her individual and independent capacity the mortgagee right, there would be no merger and the widow's personal heirs would inherit the mortgagee right, after her death while the equity of redemption would devolve on her husband's heirs.(34) See also S. 111, Note, 7.

After passing of the decree for maintenance, the husband of the decree-holder wife died. Consequently she became entitled to succession to the share in the property left by her deceased husband. Therefore the security in the form of charge obtained by her because of decree for maintenance became merged in the greater right of succession and thus the charge stood extinguished. Her remedy to proceed against the property for realising maintenance amount came to an end.(35)

Where property is sold for arrears of revenue, the sale is free of all encumbrances. If a mortgagee of the property purchases the property at such a sale, there is no merger as there is no question of the mortgagee acquiring the equity of redemption in such a case.(36)

The doctrine of merger as enunciated in S. 101 would not apply to case of a lease followed by a mortgage.(37)

1A. Prior mortgagee purchasing property and taking possession — Whether his possession is as mortgagee.

Where a prior mortgagee purchases the mortgaged property in execution of a money decree obtained by a third party against the mortgagor and enters into possession of the property, it has been held that as between himself and the puisne mortgagee (against whom the mortgage is kept alive under this section) the prior mortgagee is liable to account for rents and profits of the property though he is entitled to interest on the mortgage money (1) (See also Note 10 and S. 76 Note 5) But this rule does not apply to the case of a stranger auction-purchaser who has purchased the mortgaged property in execution of a prior mortgagee decree. The puisne mortgagee is not entitled to call for an account of the profits of the property in his hands nor can the auction-purchaser, though he may set up the prior mortgage as a shield, claim interest for the period during which he was in possession.(2)

Where a mortgagee purchased the property himself ordinarily there is merger and the mortgage merges with the sale. But the mortgage may continue if only the mortgagee so desires for his benefit and declares either by express words or by necessary implication that the mortgage shall continue to subsist.(4)

Under Section 101, although the mortgagee who purchases the equity of redemption may keep the mortgage alive for his own defence as against the puisne mortgagee it is not obligatory for him to do so.(5)

2. Benefit under the rule of intention must be a benefit at the time the charge is paid off.

As has been seen in Note 1, an intention to keep alive a charge in favour of a party will, under the rule of intention, be presumed if it is for the benefit of the party that it should be kept alive. But whether it is for the benefit of the party to keep a charge alive must be decided with reference to the circumstances existing at the time the charge is paid off or the union of interests takes place for otherwise the nature of the title will remain in suspense for an indefinite period (1). [Was the possibility of a future claim for pre-emption is not a circumstance from which it can be said that it is for the benefit of the person paying off a charge to keep it alive (2)]

The existence of an intermediate incumbrance is a circumstance which will render it beneficial to a party paying off a charge to keep it alive. But it is one of such circumstances.(3) The fact for instance that a property is at the time of the transaction under attachment, is another circumstance which will render it beneficial to a party to keep the charge alive. (See Note 4).

3. Renewal of one mortgage by another.

A renewal of one mortgage by another does not necessarily extinguish the prior security. The rule of intention applies to such cases and the prior mortgage will remain if it is for the benefit of the party renewing, to keep it alive.(1) Thus, if there is an intermediate mortgage, the prior mortgage will be kept alive as against the intermediate mortgagee,(2) and this would be so even if the prior mortgagee obtained the renewal in partial discharge of the prior security or obtained other additional security (3) In Tennison v. Sweeny,(4) Lord St Leonards said :

"Then another point was started that, as the successive mortgagees were for the sum secured the former mortgages and for the sums subsequently advanced, the old securities were merged in the new, and that the judgment-debtors had a right to come before the last mortgage. That is a very novel view of the operation of the deeds. It is clear that the former mortgages continued untouched and operative, notwithstanding the new mortgages, and the new mortgages were for the purpose of letting in the further advances upon the property. Nothing could be more alarming to creditors than that a doubt should be thrown out whether by taking a new security for their old debt and for further advances they do not prejudice their original securities."

A similar view was expressed by Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce in Miln v. Walton.(5) He said :

"Does a creditor, having a mortgage on the funds of his debtor for part of his debt, necessarily surrender that mortgage or lower its priority by taking a subsequent mortgage on the same funds for the whole of the debt? If there be no more in the transaction, I apprehend that the earlier mortgage remains in force and maintains its rank notwithstanding the other, and may be dealt with by the creditor separately."

This principle was applied by the Lahore High Court to a case where a prior mortgagee had purchased the rights under a puisne mortgage and it was held that the rights under the prior mortgage remained in force.⁽⁶⁾

Where notwithstanding it would be for the benefit of the mortgagee to keep the prior mortgage alive, the intention is clear that the prior mortgage should be extinguished, it will not be kept alive ⁽⁷⁾ If the prior mortgagee by taking the subsequent mortgage, undertakes to discharge not only his own prior mortgage but also another mortgage on the property, he cannot keep alive his prior mortgage as against the mortgagee whom he had undertaken to pay ⁽⁸⁾ In order that a prior mortgage may be kept alive in a later mortgage, taken in renewal of it, the earlier mortgage must be legally enforceable at the time of the latter mortgage. If it has become barred by limitation at such time, it cannot be revived by the fresh mortgage ⁽⁹⁾ See also Note 10 and Section 92 Note 20

In Har Chand Lal v. Sheoraj Singh (2) one Jai Chand mortgaged five-sixth share in village to one Chattri Lal in 1876. After the death of Jai Chand, his widow Mt. Nandan and his nephew Phul Singh executed another mortgage in favour of Chattri Lal in 1887 in discharge of the previous mortgage. The property mortgaged was the whole village including one-sixth share therein belonging to Phul Singh in his own right. It was found that the later mortgage was not binding on the widow, Mt. Nandan. The mortgagee then sued to enforce the earlier mortgage. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that he was entitled to do so. They observed :

"It is, of course, true that the mortgagee's intention at the time when the two deeds of 1887 were executed was to accept a new security, extending to the whole mouza, for the indebtedness both of Jai Chand and Phul Singh in lieu (inter alia) of the security of the 13th of November, 1876. Pursuant to this intention, he appears to have handed over the mortgage of the 13th of November, 1876, to Phul Singh. But the original intention of the mortgagee was entirely frustrated by the fact that the two deeds were held not to be binding on Mt. Nandan and it does not appear to their Lordships to be consistent with equity or good conscience that the first three defendants having successfully maintained that the transaction embodied in the two deeds of 1887 was not binding on Mt. Nandan, and consequently did not bind them as heirs of Jai Chand, should now claim the benefit of such transaction as a release of the mortgage of the 13th November, 1876. In their Lordships' opinion the 41st section of the Indian Contract Act, upon which the High Court relied, has no application to a case like the present. It applies only where a contract has been in fact performed by some person other than the person bound thereby."

The above view was again reiterated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the under-mentioned case. (3)

Where a mortgagee takes a subsequent mortgage or sale in discharge of his mortgage, but at that time the properties are under attachment in execution of a money-decree, the subsequent sale or mortgage is inoperative against all claims enforceable under the attachment. On this ground the mortgagee suing on the subsequent mortgage was held not entitled to fall back on the original mortgage.)] quent inoperative transaction (4) A contrary view has, however, been expressed in the undermentioned cases (5) On the ground that an attachment renders a transfer pending it, inoperative, only against claims enforceable under the attachment and not against the transferor himself, and that the transferor being pari operative, the transferee cannot fall back upon the earlier transaction in discharge of which the transfer was taken. It is submitted that this view is not correct. As pointed out by Varadachariar, J., in Mahalakshmi v. Somaraju (6) the question is not whether the transfer is not effective as between the transferor and the transferee, but whether there being the possibility of the transfer being ineffectual, as against a third party, it is not to the interest of the mortgagee not to treat his mortgage as extinguished by the transfer.

Where a prior mortgagee sues on his mortgage without making the subsequent mortgagee a party to the suit, and purchases the property in execution of his decree, the purchase is inoperative against the subsequent mortgagee. On the principles stated above, the prior mortgage remains as against the subsequent mortgagee. (7)

It has been seen in the Notes on S 92 that there arises no right of subrogation unless the mortgage in respect of which subrogation is claimed is redeemed in full. In cases falling under the present section, however, it is not necessary, before the benefit of the section can be claimed that the mortgage should have been discharged in full. Thus a mortgagee purchasing the mortgaged property in partial discharge of his mortgage can nevertheless keep the mortgage alive as against a subsequent encumbrancer.(4)

6. Purchase at sale in execution of decree for rent.

Where a mortgagee himself purchases the property at a sale in execution of a decree for rent S. 165 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and there is no benefit in keeping it alive, the mortgage is extinguished even though the mortgagee does not take steps to extinguish the mortgage under S. 167 of the Act.(1)

But where there is a subsequent rent-charge on the property, the mortgage will not be extinguished but will be kept alive. Where therefore the mortgagee purchases the property in execution of his decree, and the same property is purchased subsequently by the landlord in execution of a decree on the rent-charge, the landlord cannot oust the mortgagee from possession without annulling under S. 167, Bengal Tenancy Act, the incumbrance which must be deemed to have been kept alive against the subsequent rent-charge.(2)

Where in execution of a decree for rent, the landlord himself purchases a raiyati holding, he can, as against a mortgagee of the holding, hold his charge for rent as a shield against the mortgagee (3) See also the undermentioned cases(4) under S. 9 of the C.P. 8. Who can claim benefit of section.

The benefit of the section can be claimed not only by the mortgagee acquiring the rights in the property but also by persons deriving title from him (1) The same was the law under the old section and in cases where the rule of intention applied.(2)

9. "As between himself and any subsequent mortgagee", etc.

The section declares that there shall be no merger as between the purchasing mortgagee and subsequent mortgagees or charge-holders. It does not prevent the applicability of the doctrine of merger where there are no subsequent mortgages or charges on the property. In the undermentioned case(1) it appears to have been assumed that after the introduction of the present section merger can be avoided where a mortgagee acquires the rights in the property even though there are no intermediate mortgages or charges. In that case the sons of a mortgagee living with him as members of a joint Hindu family, purchased the mortgaged property, in discharge of the mortgage. There were no intermediate incumbrances. A third person sued for pre-emption and the sons set up the mortgage as a shield. It was assumed for the purposes of argument that the purchase was by the mortgagee himself, but it was held that there was no merger under the present section. It is submitted that this view is not correct, either under the old section or under the new. As has been seen in Note 2, the possibility of a future claim for pre-emption is not a circumstance from which it can be said that it is for the "benefit" of the mortgagee to keep his charge alive, there being no mesne incumbrances and no other benefit, and consequently, the charge would under the old section be extinguished. The present section prevents the application of the doctrine of merger only as against subsequent mortgagees or incumbrancers (2) and only when the subsequent encumbrance exists at the time of acquisition by the prior mortgagee of the rights of the mortgagor (3).

On the other hand, the High Court of Bombay has taken another extreme view namely that where there are no intermediate incumbrances, merger necessarily follows even though it would be for the benefit of the mortgagee to keep the charge alive (4) As has been seen in Note 1 this view also is not correct.

used as a shield against subsequent incumbrancers (1) This being a weapon of defence, the rules of limitation do not apply and the charge may be set up as a shield even though, at the time the plea is raised, the enforcement of the charge may have been barred by limitation (2) But a charge can only be kept alive. It cannot be revived, if it has become time barred, by a renewal of mortgage. Thus, by taking a renewal of a prior mortgage after it has become time barred, it cannot be revived and used as against an intermediate encumbrancer.(3)

The charge kept alive may also be used by way of an attack. In other words, the charge may be actively enforced by way of suit (4) In such a case, however, the enforcement must be within the period of limitation prescribed therefor.(5)

There has been a difference of opinion on two questions arising in this connection :

(1) Where a charge kept alive by A is used as a shield against B, a subsequent incumbrancer, can B sell the property in enforcement of his mortgage subject to A's charge or is B bound to redeem A?

(2) If A's charge does not entitle him to possession of the property but he has got into possession as a purchaser or in some other way, can he defend his possession against B or the auction-purchaser in execution of the decree on B's mortgage?

On the first question, in cases arising before 1929, it was held in one set of cases that B can sell the property subject to A's charge (6) A contrary view was held, namely that B's right was only

On the second question it has been held generally that on equitable grounds A can retain the possession of the property until he is redeemed (9) A contrary view has been taken in some cases, namely, that A cannot get any better right against B than what he would have had under the charge kept alive and if it did not give him a right to possession as against B, he cannot resist delivery of possession to the purchaser in execution of a decree on B's mortgage (10)

Synopsis

1. Legislative changes.

(B) Tender.

2. Scope.

3. Tender to a person who disclaims authority.

(A) Notice.

1. Legislative changes.

The reasons for the amendment of the section have been stated in the Report of the Select Committee as follows :

"Section 102, which relates to the service of notice on or tender to an agent of a mortgagee allows the mortgagor to apply to the Court for direction if the mortgagee or his agent cannot be found in the District in which the mortgaged property is situate. Even if the mortgagor knows the mortgagee or his agent's whereabouts outside the district, the section allows him to apply to the Court. The third paragraph also contains a similar provision as regards tender. We think that unless the whereabouts of the mortgagee or his agent are entirely unknown to the mortgagor or unless the mortgagee or his agent cannot be found anywhere the mortgagor should not be entitled to apply to the Court for direction. We propose to omit the words "in the district" in paragraphs 2 and 3 of the section. In paragraph 2, we propose to make it clear that the application for the service of notice shall be made to the Court in which the deposit has been made and not to any other Court. In paragraph 3 we propose to make it clear that the deposit is to be made in the Court in which a suit for redemption could be filed."

2. Scope.

Section 60 provides, for a tender of the mortgage-money by the mortgagor under certain circumstances. Section 69 provides for notice being given to the mortgagor before a mortgagee exercises his power of sale under that section. Section 83 provides for notice being given to the mortgagee of the deposit of the mortgage amount into Court under that section. This section and the next lay down rules of procedure as to the service of such notice or the making of such tender.

(A) Notice.

Suppose, A is the person on whom notice is to be served under chap. IV and B the person required to serve such notice. Then—

(1) If A can be found and has no agent or has an agent who is not known, the section seems to assume that service must be made on A wherever he may be and B cannot apply to the Court for directions.

(2) If A resides within the district in which the mortgaged property or part thereof is situate service must be made on A himself, whether he has an agent or not. Service on the agent would not be valid service.

(3) If A resides outside the district and has an agent empowered to receive notice, service on principal or on the agent wherever he may be is sufficient.

(4) If A cannot be found, and has no agent or has an agent but he is not known, then B can apply for directions under the second paragraph of the section. Such application, in the case of notice required to be given by S. 83, should be made to the Court in which the deposit has been made. (Proviso).

(B) Tender.

Suppose A is the person to whom a tender is to be made under Chapter IV of the Act and B, the person who is entitled to make the tender. Then—

(1) If A can be found and has no agent or has an agent who is not known, tender must be made to A wherever he may be and B cannot deposit the money into Court under the last paragraph of the section.

(2) If A resides within the district in which the mortgaged property or part thereof is situate tender must be made to A himself whether he has an agent or not. Tender to the agent is not a valid tender.

(3) If A resides outside the district and has an agent empowered to accept the tender, tender to the principal or to the agent wherever he may be is sufficient.

(4) If A cannot be found and has no agent or has an agent but he is not known, B can deposit the amount into any Court in which a suit might be brought for the redemption of the mortgaged property.

3. Tender to a person who disclaims authority.

In order that the notice or tender to an agent may be sufficient, he must hold a general power-of-attorney from the principal or must, otherwise, be duly authorized to accept the notice or tender. (1) A tender made to a person who disclaims authority to accept it is made at the risk of the persons making it, and, if it is subsequently found that the former had no authority to receive it, the tender fails and has not the effect of stopping interest under S. 84 of the Act. (2) Thus, in the under-mentioned case. (3) a tender was made by the mortgagor to one P whose services had been engaged by the mortgagee and who had been assisting the agent of the mortgagee in his attempts to obtain possession of the mortgaged property as per terms of the mortgage deed. He was, however, not recorded as the attorney of the mortgagee and he disclaimed authority to receive a tender on behalf of the mortgagee. It was held that the abovementioned circumstances did not constitute P the agent of the mortgagee and that the tender was bad.

103. NOTICE, ETC., TO OR BY PERSON INCOMPETENT TO CONTRACT.— Where, under the provisions of this Chapter, a notice is to be served on or by, or a tender or deposit made or accepted or taken out of Court by, any person incompetent to contract, such notice may be served ^A[on or by], or tender or deposit made, accepted or taken by, the legal curator of the property of such person; but where there is no such curator, and it is requisite or desirable in the interests of such person that a notice should be served or a tender or deposit made under the provisions of this Chapter, application may be made to any Court in which a suit might be brought for the redemption of the mortgage to appoint a guardian ad litem for the purpose of serving or receiving service of such notice, or making or accepting such tender, or making or taking out of Court such deposit, and for the performance of all consequential acts which could or ought to be done by such person if he were competent to contract; and the provisions of ^B[Order XXXII in the First Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908], shall, so far as may be, apply to such application and to the parties thereto and to the guardian appointed thereunder.

[A] Inserted by the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, 1929 (XX of 1929), S. 53.

[B] Substituted for the words "Chapter XXXI of the Code of Civil Procedure" by Act XX of 1929, S. 53.

1. Legislative changes.

The words "on or by" were inserted by S. 53 of the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, 1929 (20 of 1929) after the words "such notice may be served" in order to correct a mere clerical error.

The words "Order 32 in the First Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908" were substituted for the words "Chap. 31 of the Code of Civil Procedure". The words "Chapter 31 of the Code of Civil Procedure" in the old section referred to the Code of 1882. Chapter 31 of the old Code corresponds to O. 32 of the Code of 1908.

2. Scope of the section.

The Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, provides for the appointment of guardians ad litem for minors and persons of unsound mind, for the purpose of proceedings taken against them in Court. No guardian ad litem is appointed in proceedings taken by such a person, though he should be represented in such proceedings by a next friend. This section provides for the appointment of guardians ad litem for persons incompetent to contract, for the purpose of certain acts being done by or against them, and this, not only in proceedings taken in Court, such as a deposit under S. 83 of the Act, but for doing acts independent of any proceeding in Court, such as the making of a tender under S. 60 or the service of a notice under section 69.

A guardian ad litem under this section is to be appointed only when there is no legal curator of the property of the person incompetent to contract. Where there is such a curator, the notice referred to in the section may be served on or by such curator, and the tender or deposit, made, accepted or taken by him.

In cases where a guardian ad litem is necessary to be appointed, the acts specified in the section cannot be said to have been validly done until such guardian is actually appointed.

A tender under S. 60 or a notice under S. 69 or S. 83 cannot obviously be made to, or served on, a "guardian ad litem until such a person is actually appointed(1). Nor is a deposit in Court in favour of a minor mortgagee valid until a guardian ad litem is actually appointed inasmuch as notice under the provisions of the second paragraph of S. 83 to the mortgagee is necessary under S. 84 to stop interest running, and such notice cannot be given until a guardian ad litem is actually appointed(2). See also section 83, Note 16 and section 84, Note 10.

3. "Person incompetent to contract".

These words must be read in the light of Ss. 11 and 12 of the Contract Act, 1872, which run as follows :

"11. Every person is competent to contract who is of the age of majority according to the law to which he is subject, and who is of sound mind, and is not disqualified from contracting by any law to which he is subject."

"12. A person is said to be of sound mind for the purpose of making a contract if, at the time when he makes it, he is capable of understanding it and of forming a rational judgment as to its effect upon his interest."

A person who is usually of unsound mind but occasionally of sound mind, may make a contract when he is of sound mind.

A person who is usually of sound mind, but occasionally of unsound mind, may not make a contract when he is of unsound mind."

See also Note 3 on section 7.

4. "Legal curator".

A legal curator is a person appointed under any provision of law to protect the property of any person(1). The guardian of the property of a ward appointed under the Guardians and Wards Act

2. AIR 1959 Pat 457 (459).

The words "and the notice required by S. 83 has been served on the mortgagee" were absent in the old S. 84 and the conclusion that for the purpose of its execution in favour of a minor, a guardian ad litem must actually be appointed, was rested on the provision that the mortgagor should have done "all that has to be done to enable the mortgagee to take the money out of Court". It was held that this cast a duty on the mortgagor to see that a guardian was actually appointed. See (1903) 27 Bom 23 (29) (DB)  AIR 1923 All 183 (184) 45 All 273 (DB) (Mere making of an application is not sufficient)  AIR 1922 All 147 (149) 44 All 102 (DB) (Contra per Stuart, J.)  AIR 1925 Mad 407 (408) (DB) (Deposit of money in Court — Minor and major mortgagees joined — Mortgagee not appointing guardian ad litem for minor — Tender is not valid)  AIR 1914 Oudh 107 (108) 16 Oudh Cas 261  AIR 1922 All 355 (355) 44 All 64 (DB)  AIR 1926 All 665 (666) 48 All 611 (DB)  AIR 1938 Mad 405 (408) (DB) (Deposit made before the amendment of 1929.)

Section 103 — Note 4

1. Wharton. Law Lexicon, 14th Edn., 1938.

1890, a Court of Wards in charge of the estate of a disqualified proprietor, a curator appointed by the Court to take charge of the estate of a deceased person under Part VII of the Succession Act, 1925, curators appointed by the State Government under S. 210 of the said Act, and the manager of the estate of a lunatic under the provisions of the Lunacy Act, 1912, are all, it is conceived, "legal curators" within the meaning of this section. But a natural guardian such as the father or mother of a Hindu minor, cannot be held to be a legal curator and a notice or tender to him without his being appointed a guardian ad litem as required by this section is not valid and binding on the minor(2).

5. "Requisite or desirable in the interests of such person".

In Pandurang v. Mahadaji(1), Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C J., dealing with the expression "requisite or desirable in the interests of such person" occurring in the section, observed as follows

"I pause here for a moment to notice the words requisite or desirable in the interests of such person as it has been suggested that they obscure the meaning of the section. On a fuller consideration I am of opinion that this is not so, and that they are designedly used in reference to distinct events. I will make my meaning plainer by an illustration. If where the mortgagee is a minor it is determined by the mortgagor to proceed under Ss. 83 and 84, then it is requisite that a notice should be served, if in the case of an infant mortgagor those entrusted with the care of his affairs consider the mortgage-money should be tendered or paid, then it may be desirable in the interests of the minor that this should be done."

6. Provisions of Order 32 of the Civil Procedure Code shall, so far as may be, apply.

Where the fact of minority of the person in whose favour a deposit is made under S. 83 of the Act, is disputed, the Court can, under the provisions of O. 32, R. 3 of the Civil Procedure Code, make an enquiry into the matter(1). Where the proposed guardian refuses to act as such, the Court can under O. 32, R. 4 of the Code, appoint an officer of the Court as the guardian ad litem for the purposes of this section(2).

7. Effect of deposit or tender without guardian ad litem being appointed.

It has been seen in the Notes on S. 84 that in the case of non-possessory mortgages, interest will not cease to run unless the tender or deposit, as the case may be, is valid. In the case of possessory mortgages, the mortgagee will not lose his right to continue in possession and the mortgagor cannot get any mesne profits unless and until a valid tender or deposit has been made(1). A deposit in favour of a minor usufructuary mortgagee without a proper guardian ad litem being appointed for him under the provisions of this section is not a valid deposit, and the mortgagor cannot claim any mesne profits from the former from the date of his deposit(2).

104. POWER TO MAKE RULES.— The High Court may, from time to time, make rules consistent with this Act for carrying out, in itself and in the Courts of Civil Judicature subject to its superintendence, the provisions contained in this Chapter.

Synopsis

1. Scope of the section.

2. "Consistent with this Act", etc.

1. Scope of the section.

This section empowers the High Court to make rules consistent with this Act for carrying out in itself and in subordinate Courts, the provisions contained in Chap. IV of the Act(1). It is an enabling provision, it is not obligatory on the High Courts to frame any rules(2).

Before the year 1908 when Ss. 85 to 90 of this Act were repealed and were re-enacted in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, there was a difference of opinion as to whether, in the absence of rules framed under this section, the rules enacted in the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, could be applied to mortgage suits and to the execution of mortgage decrees passed under the provisions of this Act. One set of cases held that they could be applied(3). In the undermentioned case(4) the High Court of Calcutta expressed the view that this section would not have been introduced into this Act if the provisions of the Code were applicable to mortgage suits and the execution of mortgage decrees and that, therefore, the existence of this section must be taken to show that, in the absence of any rules framed under this section, the provisions of the Code would not be applicable to such suits and decrees. The High Court of Calcutta, apparently on this assumption, framed rules under this section, extending certain sections of the Code of 1882 to the execution of mortgage decrees(5). The repeal of the sections of this Act relating to the procedure in cases of mortgage suits and their re-enactment in the new Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, makes it now clear that mortgage suits and the execution of decrees passed therein are governed by the provisions of the Code(6).

The question, however, remains as to the nature of the rules contemplated by the section. In Mallikarjunadu Setti v. Lingamurti Panthulu(7) Mr Justice Bhashyam Ayyangar observed as follows :

"Section 104 of the Transfer of Property Act does not in my opinion, primarily contemplate the making of rules for the execution of decrees passed under Chap. IV of the Act, such rules being already provided for by Chap. XIX of the Civil Procedure Code, supplemented as they are by Ss. 87, 89 and 93 of the Transfer of Property Act. What the section contemplates is the making of rules for carrying out the provisions in the chapter. The sections relating to foreclosure, sale and redemption do not provide for successive redemptions and foreclosures and for the adjudication and enforcement of the rights of puisne mortgagees and of other persons having an interest in the property comprised in the mortgage who are joined as parties to the suit. No inconsiderable number of mortgages on which suits are brought are really anomalous mortgages and adequate provision is not made in the chapter for dealing with such suits and for working out the rights and liabilities flowing therefrom. The rule making power conferred on the High Court by S. 104 is, in my opinion, principally intended to regulate the procedure to be adopted for carrying out these and similar provisions contained in the chapter."

The view expressed by Mr Justice Bhashyam Ayyangar would seem to be applicable even now, though the procedure as to mortgage suits has been dealt with in detail in O. 34 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908. In cases where the Code does not provide specifically for any particular contingency relating to the carrying out of the provisions of this chapter rules may be framed under this section.

Can rules be framed under this section which are inconsistent with the provisions of the Code? In the undermentioned case(8), the question arose whether a rule applicable on the Original Side of the High Court which had been framed by the High Court of Bombay under this section, but which was inconsistent with a provision in the Code of Civil Procedure applicable to the case, would prevail over the latter. Marten, C.J., observed :

"I would further hold that as the original side rules are specially framed under the Transfer of Property Act to deal with cases arising on the original side, then if and in so far as they are inconsistent they should prevail over the very general terms of the Civil Procedure Code, which would apply to the mofussil."

On the other hand it was held by the Madras High Court in the case noted below(9) that so far as the Courts subject to the superintendence of the High Court were concerned, no rule could be framed under this section inconsistent with the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. Mr Justice Bhashyam Ayyangar observed :

"Section 104 of the Transfer of Property Act must be read subject to S. 15 of the Charter Act which provides that the High Court shall have power to make and issue general rules for regulating the practice and proceedings of all Courts which may be subject to its appellate jurisdiction, provided that the rules so made are not inconsistent with the provisions of any law in force. If S. 104 of the Transfer of Property Act were construed as enlarging the powers thus conferred upon the High Court so as to make it competent for the High Court to substitute its own rules for those contained in the Civil Procedure Code, or to make rules which are inconsistent with the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, S. 104 of the Transfer of Property Act will be ultra vires of the Indian Legislature. For under S. 22 of the Indian Councils Act (24 & 25 Vict., Cap. 67) it is beyond the power of the Governor General in Council to make any law affecting the provisions of any Act passed in the

S. 104, T.P. Act, fixing the "Court rate" the case is governed by S. 34, Civil P.C. and it is quit competent to a Court in a suit on a mortgage bond to award interest at the contract rate of 7½ per cent. per annum till the date of realisation.)  AIR 1917 Mad 128 (131) (DB) (Per Bakewell, J.)

same session of Parliament, and the Indian High Courts Act (24 & 25 Viet., Cap. 104) was passed in the same session as the Indian Councils Act. The power to make rules for regulating the practice and proceedings of the subordinate Courts is not conferred upon the High Court by Letters Patent, but by S. 15 of the Charter Act itself, and such power therefore can in no way be affected by the Indian Legislature."

2. "Consistent with this Act", etc.

A rule framed by the High Court under this section must be consistent with this Act. Otherwise it would be ultra vires(1). The rule-making power is further limited to carrying out the provisions of Chap. IV. If the rule framed goes beyond this it would be ultra vires(2).
